In the active days of settlement after the war, the same simplicity of joy is what carries one through. Those who have not known how boundless the living in the divine Mind really is can learn to-day, if they will. Both Capital and Labor must find their springtime and endless youth in the sheer rejoicing that the divine Mind alone can produce any real action. A treaty of peace can be consummated and kept only through delight in the knowing of what divine Principle requires. The wholeness of supply is proved flexible and sufficient for every need as it is seen to come from intelligence. The health of the nations is preserved when all are sure together that it springs from the one infinite Life. Patient happiness in the work for Truth means order in every detail of living.

"The simple life" is an old cry. That it seemingly has not altogether come to pass is because the many have thought of it as material, in one way or another, rather than purely spiritual. Even those who have used the term "spiritual" in connection with it have often meant more a sort of human emotion than the one Spirit, which is God, manifest through calm and alert action. Christian Science insists upon this very purpose of demonstrating the genuine infinity of simplicity in every detail of experience that is in accord with Principle. That is why it heals. In its entirety Christian Science is for all the world to understand and to use. Every glimpse of the true inspiration of Principle simplifies seeming problems, for any apparent complexities vanish before the actual comprehension that the divine Mind and its idea is all there is. Spiritual living goes on in infinite Mind, in whom the real man has his whole being, and not in any belief that there is matter.

Hence the genuinely simple and spontaneous joy must be infinite. It is not limited to any mere human beliefs about simplicity. The action of God goes on in one endless stream, with perfect harmony in variety. Because Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has shown clearly in all manner of ways that the divine Mind does govern man, the world is realizing more and more the magnitude and permanence of her work. As she declares on page 9 of "Unity of Good," "The talent and genius of the centuries have wrongly reckoned. They have not based upon revelation their arguments and conclusions as to the source and resources of being,—its combinations, phenomena, and outcome,—but have built instead upon the sand of human reason. They have not accepted the simple teaching and life of Jesus as the only true solution of the perplexing problem of human existence."

So in the season of springtime, which is really eternal in unfoldment, the great need for all is to know with all gladness that the divine Mind and its manifestation is all there is to real experience. Statesmanship, health, prosperity, and peace must all be understood as Principle expressed and not as any human seeming. To live in the daily springtime of God's goodness is never to be mortally intense in any respect. Instead it means the ceaseless rejoicing in the whole simplicity that the divine Life is here and now. God is indestructible. Thus the living in God, in the divine Mind and not in matter, is forever untouched by any suppositions of evil. Before the simple understanding of this, disease, sin, lack, or trouble of any sort disappears into its native nothingness. The whole world is bound to find through Christian Science the complete spiritual fulfillment of its every right desire.

As Mrs. Eddy says of Christ Jesus (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 91): "What has this hillside priest, this seaside teacher, done for the human race? Ask, rather, what has he not done. His holy humility, unworldliness, and self-abandonment wrought infinite results. The method of his religion was not too simple to be sublime, nor was his power so exalted as to be unavailable for the needs of suffering mortals, whose wounds he healed by Truth and Love." The one divine intelligence controlling, ordering, arranging all of true living in simple harmony is indeed synonymous with infinite Love. For every seeker for the Truth, there is therefore the eternal assurance of John in his epistle, "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." The true man of God's creating does dwell in the loving divine Mind and experience the infinity of good. This is the simplicity of real living.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

VERMONT.—The following items indicate to some extent the growth and steady advance of our cause in the state of Vermont. First Church of Christ, Scientist, at St. Johnsbury, after having purchased the church building formerly occupied by the Union Baptist Church, finished off two rooms, one for services and the other for a reading room. The auditorium is to be completed at a later date. At Morrisville the Christian Scientists organized as a Christian Science Society, and their card appeared in The Christian Science Journal of July, 1919. The Montpelier Christian Science Society advises that a more systematic distribution of literature is being carried on than in former years. The church in Randolph reports that more interest in Christian Science is manifested in the town and there is larger attendance at services. Word comes from Burlington that the society there has demonstrated larger quarters for its reading room, this advance step having been taken in March, 1919. At Lyndonville the use of the hall in which services are held had been given by an individual, but in June, 1919, the society there began paying rent for the hall, considering this a step in the right direction. A conference of the Christian Science workers in the state was held at Burlington, June 27, 1919.

The attitude of the press in Vermont is apparently quite favorable to Christian Science. The following is a summary of items clipped from the newspapers in the state: Items adverse to Christian Science, 1; corrective articles, 4; articles favorable to Christian Science, 5; items mentioning Christian Science and Christian Scientists, 36; reprints from The Christian Science Monitor, 173; Christian Science lectures published in part, 8; items mentioning Mrs. Eddy, 5; items pertaining to public health, 17; miscellaneous items, 5; total, 254.

Statements from two items clipped from Vermont papers appeared in the Christian Science Sentinel under the caption, "Signs of the Times."—Committee on Publication.

The Lectures

Grand Forks, N. Dak. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer, introduced by William H. Greenleaf, instructor in English at the University of North Dakota, who said in part:—

In presenting the speaker of the evening, may I call attention to the fact that you are investigating the most important topic known to man? What is man? What is his nature? What of his present and what of his future? What is the power that molds and that guides? These are some of the questions that you are asking. These are some of the questions that Christian Science aims to answer. The answer? Well, if there is an answer to these questions and if the answer given is correct, the key to our future has been found. Underlying every life problem, every struggle between capital and labor, every conflict between the nations, every lack, every sin, every sorrow, is the failure to understand the great truth, whatever it is, that controls the universe. Economics has its sphere, material science has its place, politics has its scope; but more important than any one of these,—yes, more important than all of these put together,—is the fundamental law of God and man. Find this, and build on it, and all other thoughts and action will relate themselves to the truth of being as steel filings arrange themselves along the lines of a magnet. Whatever there is of power or of lasting appeal in any man or any movement, is there because it rests upon the truth. Find the truth and the avenues to real accomplishment are open.

You will judge for yourselves, just as I judge for myself, whether this particular philosophy, known as Christian Science, offers you the key to truth. Whether in your judgment Christian Science is the truth or no, it does strike to-day the clearest note that is heard on land or sea. It compromises not with friend or foe. It is heard above the tumult of the battle field, in the midst of pestilence and want and woe. It is drawing to its standard men of thought and men of action,—lawyers, physicians, teachers, workmen of the farm and street. Opposed as no philosophy of modern times has ever been opposed, ridiculed as no creed has ever been ridiculed, this theory of life has gone steadily forward, and to-day its stately march is more positive, more uncompromising, more imposing than ever before. In a day of race hatred, in a day of class dissension, in a day of world unrest, it behooves us to think clearly and to think truly about that teaching which declares for the unlimited power of God and the inevitable triumph of the brotherhood of man; aye, to think clearly of that philosophy which makes deeds rather than words the test of a religious life.

Pittsfield, Mass. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Henry Germain, who said in part:—

We have heard the question asked over and over during the heart-searching five years just gone: Has Christianity been a failure? Have the teachings and example of Jesus been before the world for the past two thousand years only to prove themselves at last utterly helpless in the face of human greed and brutality? Every sincere Christian will answer these questions, to himself at least, by a most vigorous No! He may not be able to explain very convincingly to his neighbor the "reason of the hope that is in" him, but he knows deep down in his own heart that only through the persistent practice of the Sermon on the Mount, is there any hope of peace either for the individual or for the race. Right here Christian Science comes to replace a trembling hope with a well founded and rational understanding of the spiritual meaning of Jesus' teachings, an understanding sustained by a repetition of the works which he promised that his followers should do. This understanding removes Christianity from the realm of the unnatural, of the superstitious, into that of rationality and daily usefulness. It aims to substitute doing for saying. It shows the how as well as the why of religion.

Madison, Ind. (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by George F. Harper, who said in part:—

The apostle Paul in his second epistle to Timothy says, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." Christian Scientists agree with Paul that God is not the author of fear, worry, or anxiety, but on the contrary is the creator of all good, is the only power, presence, and intelligence, and that He gives to man, His image and likeness, dominion over all the illusions of material existence.

Mamaroneck, N. Y. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Walter Lockwood Stevens, who said in part:—

Of all the events of Christ Jesus' earthly career recorded in the New Testament, his miracles of healing were the most impressive as well as the least understood. After hearing of the healing of the centurion's servant by Jesus, John sent messengers to him with this question, "Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?" Jesus' answer was evidence that he considered his works of healing as sufficient proof of his divine authority and power. Christian Science is again teaching the rule of healing taught by Jesus, and points, as Jesus did, to its healing work as proof of its correctness.

BRISTOL, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by R. J. Chandler, who said in part:—

The whole world is in a state of upheaval, blindly groping for the freedom which time-honored systems and religious teachings have failed to bring. Christian Science is more than a theory; it is a practical religion, which offers a full salvation from all the ills of mankind, and hundreds of thousands of its students in all parts of the globe are proving irrefutably that it is indeed a revelation of that truth which Jesus said should make men free.

MARSHFIELD, ORE. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Mae L. Hodgins, who said in part:—

Christian Science is the most practical religious system ever presented to mankind. It is Christian because it is Christlike, and Science because it can be demonstrated. Its teachings are based on the truth about the one infinite, divine Principle, God; and as these teachings are understood, they are found to include the method of healing all mortal faults, and all physical diseases. The urgent need of humanity is spiritual enlightenment. It is plainly evident that nothing will destroy darkness except light. Christian Science is the revelation of spiritual enlightenment, the revelation of "God with us." It is the friend of humanity, telling the world that good is man's heritage.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by A. E. Higgins, who said in part:—

Dr. Hubbard is with us to explain something of the teaching of Christian Science as it affects the great problems of life,—how this great truth heals the sick, brings hope to the downtrodden, comfort to the sorrowful, peace and happiness to broken home life, unity of thought to employer and employee, and makes life tolerable, livable, and reasonable. The revelation which Mary Baker Eddy received many years ago is to-day bearing fruit in every corner of the globe. Through it we see God to be the great procuring cause of all good, the great reservoir back of all the human beauty, tenderness, and love we know of, and the infinite source of all action, power, and volition.

Testimonies of Healing

I have been so blessed by the study of Christian Science that I feel I should not withhold my testimony longer. When it was first presented to me I realized it was the truth, but was not interested in spiritual matters then, and it was not until years later that I really accepted it. I read Christian Science literature off and on for about four years before I received any physical benefits. I enjoyed the literature because it kept me optimistic, but I know now I did not get the spirit, else the healings would have come.

During the past three years I have reaped many rewards for my faithful study. Before taking up Christian Science, I took medicine almost every day for some ailment or other. Now I know that God is the only Physician, and that his medicine is Truth. I have been healed of rheumatism, headaches, and weakness. Sarcasm, criticism, malice, and melancholia have also been overcome. I am especially grateful for the understanding of the Bible which I have gained through Christian Science. Formerly when I read it I became so confused by the seeming contradictions that I put it away feeling more discouraged than when I turned to it. There seemed to be so many threats and unreasonable admonitions that I knew not which way to turn. Now the seeming mysteries have been explained, and instead of feeling discouraged from reading it, I feel that I have new life.

I am grateful to those who helped me when I was unable to see clearly for myself; also for the literature, especially the Lesson-Sermons. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for living such a pure life that this religion was revealed to her.—(Mrs.) Edith Hill Carnes, Ardmore, Okla.

I, too, wish to give a testimony of the many blessings which have been received in my family. In the summer of 1917 my sixteen-year-old daughter became suddenly very ill. As we were already acquainted with Christian Science, we endeavored to quiet our fear through the application of this teaching, but as the fever continued to rise, fear again possessed us. We then consulted a physician, who diagnosed the case as pneumonia and pleurisy. He stated that he could not say whether or not the patient would survive. It was in this sad condition that we were left. My daughter would not take medicine, but requested me to call up a Christian Science practitioner and ask for help, which was lovingly given. During that same day the practitioner came and explained to us that God is our only help; that we must find our refuge in Him, and that Truth would also be the victor in this case. Upon returning home at night, I saw that the fever had left entirely. Five days later our daughter was able to get up, and very soon afterwards to attend the services with us. We were frequently privileged to experience the love of our Father. How ashamed we were for having had so little faith in Him that in the hour of need we looked to man for help. We are striving more and more each day to live this beautiful truth and love in our daily lives. God is performing the same wonders to-day as nineteen hundred years ago, when our Master was on earth. With the psalmist I wish to say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."—Wilhelm Engel, Berlin-Pankow, Germany.

In loving gratitude for many blessings, also for healings too numerous to mention, that have come to me through Christian Science, I wish to tell of my wonderful healing over thirty years ago. After the birth of my son in 1883, I seemed in very delicate health; in fact I did not believe it possible to live. The local physicians did not give me any relief, so I had treatment from a specialist. After several months without a favorable symptom I was desperate and inquired why I did not improve at all. He told me that I would never be any better unless I would undergo an operation. This I greatly feared and refused to do, but did long to live, as I had much to live for.

I believed in God and looked to Him even before I learned that He is All-power. When a dear sister-in-law asked me why I did not try Christian Science I inquired what it was, as I had never heard the name. After hearing of a healing that she had experienced, I felt that there must be something in it, and went with her to see a practitioner. After the treatment, I asked when to return and was informed that I need not return. On reaching home I felt much stronger, could walk without fatigue, and was also full of happiness. For several days I was up around the house attending to light household duties without suffering the least inconvenience. My husband was somewhat concerned that I delayed my visit to the doctor, so at the end of a week I told him that I had tried Christian Science and was healed. He became interested at once, bought "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and was an earnest student from the start. Since then, times without number, the power of Truth as taught in Christian Science has proved to be the only way. I am not more grateful for the many healings of disease than I am for the healing (correcting) of many faults, which to mortal sense seem part of one's self until the truth proves that no error has any place in or power over God's image and likeness.

Words cannot express my gratitude to God for His loving-kindness and wisdom in sending us the dear Master, Christ Jesus, whose wise instructions to his disciples became Scriptural record; also, for sending us our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has furnished us with a key to the Scriptures and brought to our remembrance all things whatsoever he hath said. It is my constant desire to live each day so that I may be worthy of the name "Christian Scientist."

(Mrs.) Frances Ott Bovee, Burlingame, Calif.

I can vouch for the healing of my daughter-in-law, as at that time we were neighbors, and I was with her a great deal. Christian Science has made a great change in her. I am not a Christian Scientist but am reading the textbook. Since I came to California about three months ago I have been healed of varicose veins of thirty years' standing, and I am very grateful to Mrs. Eddy, whose teachings have made this possible. Although advanced in years I hope to be able fully to understand and demonstrate this great truth.

(Mrs.) Margaret S. Bovee.

In gratitude to God for the great gift of Christian Science, this testimony is given. A little less than two years ago I came to Christian Science for help for a serious intestinal trouble. Two operations had already been performed and a third one seemed to be necessary. In such utter misery was I that death itself seemed to be the only escape from my troubles, and it was constantly in my thoughts. Along with this trouble was another, a so-called incurable one,—although we were trying everything that could be found to cure it,—known as tubercular glands of the neck. Osteopathy, X-ray and serum treatments had been administered, with little apparent effect.

Being ignorantly prejudiced against Christian Science, it was with great fear and distrust that we sought help from a practitioner. The help was lovingly given and the work so well done that in four days' time I was dressed and sitting out in the yard. The bowels resumed their natural functions, which had not occurred since my childhood; the swelling of the glands disappeared; and glasses which had been worn for about fifteen years were discarded after the first treatment. In Christian Science I have found health, and I have found God, a God of peace and joy and love, for God is Love, as the Scriptures so beautifully teach us.

I am indeed thankful for our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, which leads us into the pathway of health and life eternal. I am very grateful for membership in The Mother Church and in a branch church; for all the Christian Science literature, which seems to come when it is most needed; and also grateful for the privilege of class instruction, which opens up the way to a broader understanding of practice and demonstration, the ultimate aim of all true Christian Scientists. To follow Jesus' command, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," is the one desire of my life.

(Mrs.) ELLA M. GOWEN, Ludlow, Mass.

I would like to return thanks to God for what Christian Science means to me and has done for me. I did not take it up for the healing, but with an intense longing for a closer walk with God, divine Love, and a deeper understanding of His Christ. I had been a student of the Bible practically all of my life, studying under some of the best teachers, and for ten years did missionary work; but there was still an unsatisfied longing. I did believe God had all power and was good, but to see the sick and dying on all sides and to be able to give them only temporary help and to tell them it was God's will, was sorry comfort. When with the blessed light of Christian Science came the realization that God does not send sickness, sin, and trouble, but is ever present to heal and redeem from all error, what glory shone around me! I saw so clearly and plainly the mission and purpose of Christ Jesus' life.

We have had innumerable blessings from the spiritual understanding of God as Principle. My little girl, nine years old, is able to help herself in many ways, through her understanding of Truth, and was beautifully healed of pneumonia with the aid of a practitioner. I have been healed of bowel disorder of several years' standing, and of supposedly inherited heart trouble. I called for help for this latter condition one night when it seemed to be gaining power and in one hour was relieved. In the morning I was so well and happy that I attended church in a pouring rain. My little ones have been healed of measles, pneumonia, cuts, and burns. My older boy once fell, cutting a deep gash in the kneecap. He said, "Mamma, pray for me quick." I did pray as we are taught to do in Christian Science, and in a few moments he was playing. That night, while I was away he tore the knee open again, but would not allow anything to be put on it, and tried to know the truth for himself until I came. When I arrived, it was swollen and looked very bad. I put him to bed and told him that God, divine Love, was caring for him. As I was realizing that there are no accidents in Mind, such a calm, restful feeling came over me that I knew the healing was done. In the morning the swelling and pain had gone, and the cut healed without leaving a scar. My younger boy, five years old, was struck in the eye with a stone. I realized the truth in Christian Science and he fell asleep. When he woke up his eye still seemed bruised, but the pain was gone, and he could see perfectly. By morning all evidence of the injury had gone. I cannot enumerate the countless blessings that have come to us. A lifetime of gratitude and devotion can never pay the debt to our dear Leader. I am so grateful for membership in The Mother Church.

(Mrs.) MATTIE HADLEY, Council Grove, Kan.

Eight years ago Christian Science found me a constant sufferer from chronic indigestion and stomach trouble. Having had medical treatment by reliable physicians for several years, without relief, I was urged to try Christian Science, but insisted that I had no faith in it. At last when my condition became acute I called at the office of a Christian Science practitioner whom I had met in a business way and asked for help. It was with great reluctance that I did this, because the old church had utterly failed to satisfy my religious yearning and under the circumstances I hesitated to seek physical relief through such a channel. At first I did not feel any physical benefit from the treatment and had little faith, yet I had promised a friend that I would give it a trial and felt in honor bound to do so. With the fourth treatment I was completely healed and from that day to this have never had the slightest recurrence.

At all times since, I have been able to obey Paul's command, "Whatsoever is set before you, eat," and have never experienced the slightest ill effect thereby. During these years I have found Christian Science equal to every physical emergency as well as at home and in the business world. My gratitude for these blessings, which are indeed manifold, has caused me to study the Scriptures in the light of Christian Science, and I am beginning to realize the spiritual import of these words, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." There have been times when I have lacked faith and understanding, yet have always found at my right hand some Christian Scientist whose larger experience has enabled him or her to stretch forth a helping hand and lift me up.

The regeneration has begun and I can say in the words of the psalmist, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." On page 4 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy tells us that "outward worship is not of itself sufficient to express loyal and heartfelt gratitude, since he has said: 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.'"

CLARENCE S. ELLEN, Douglaston, Long Island, N. Y.

It is with loving gratitude for the many blessings God has poured upon me since my knowledge of Him, gained through Christian Science, that I wish to offer my testimony, hoping it will help some other seeker after the truth. For many years I suffered from catarrh of the stomach, organic heart trouble, and sleeplessness, culminating in a nervous breakdown. For two years I depended on physicians and drugs for relief, which failed me. At last my life had become a hopeless misery, and I wrote to a dear relative, a Christian Scientist, and asked him if he thought Science could help me. Before he could reply to my letter, I was relieved; proving indeed God's promise given in Isaiah 65:24. That night I discarded my medicine, and fell asleep, sleeping the long night through,—a happiness seldom experienced since I was a child. The next day I received a reply from my relative, also the Christian Science textbook. He told me that all would be well with me, and in my heart I knew that indeed it was well with me, and that I was free. That day I dismissed my medical attendant, destroyed all my medicine, left off wearing my glasses, which I had worn for a few years, and since that day I have not had occasion to use them either day or night. I have been strong and cheerful and free from all bodily pain. Each day proves to me the wonderful goodness of our heavenly Father. I have been privileged to make many demonstrations, and have received untold help from the Christian Science literature. I sincerely hope to show in my life's work that I am trying to be a true follower of our Master, and to bear witness to the truth, made so beautifully clear to us by our faithful Leader, Mrs. Eddy.—(Mrs.) Eva Wallis, Toowoomba, Queensland, Australia.

It would be impossible to enumerate all the blessings that have come into my experience through the knowledge of God, as gained through the study and application of Christian Science. I have been reared in this religion and know it to be a practical one, solving all our human problems when rightly applied; that is, when human planning and self-will are put aside and God's law of love is allowed to operate. Some months ago I seemed to have come to a standstill in a financial way. I talked to a practitioner who gave me many helpful thoughts and I set about finding the limiting belief in my own consciousness. It came very clearly that I was outlining the work that I was willing to do instead of always being about my Father's business. When this error was discovered and destroyed I took a position, and in two weeks' time a government one at quite an increase of salary was accepted, and in a few months I was transferred to another division at an increased remuneration.

Recently when alighting from a street car the heel of my shoe caught in the hem of my skirt, throwing me to the pavement and wrenching my ankle severely. I was assisted to the curb by my sister, and we stood a few moments declaring the perfection of God's creation and that there were no accidents in the universe of Love. I then went about my daily duties, endeavoring to know the fact that man is spiritual and perfect. By night the ankle was greatly swollen and there was some pain when standing, but I still affirmed the truth of being, and upon waking the following morning could use the foot with perfect ease, and in several days the swelling had disappeared.

I wish to express gratitude for the periodicals and all the channels provided for the seeker of Truth.

(Miss) Nellie Landrum, Atlanta, Ga.

I am so glad we have been given these legitimate outlets for our songs of gratitude—the Wednesday evening meetings and the periodicals. After my first healing and glimpse into the truth, my enthusiasm and joy led me to want to tell of my healing and to recommend, almost to insist, that people try Christian Science in solving their problems, whatever they were. This zeal met with indifference, rebuke, or but slight interest so many times that wisdom finally taught me that only those with willing ears can hear or understand. I found it was error which kept me silent at Wednesday evening meetings, where each person's very presence indicated his willingness and desire to hear of Christian Science, and caused me to pester those whose thought was unprepared. I found that the wide channels provided by Mrs. Eddy, if used, would give me sufficient occupation and expression for all my unfolding thoughts.

My first healing was of typhoid fever, after pneumonia had developed. The faithful physician in attendance said there was no hope of saving my life. I had been unconscious for weeks before this crisis was reached, and was too weak to take food even through a tube. All hope in materia medica being gone, a Christian Science practitioner was informed that night of my condition and treatment was begun. A quick change for the better took place, and by morning all trace of pneumonia was gone. Each succeeding day brought added strength. Being satisfied that the danger was over, the services of the practitioner were discontinued, but a sudden relapse into high fever awakened us to the need of further treatment. I knew nothing of the teachings of Christian Science at this time, and never saw the practitioner until many months after my healing. My convalescence was very short. No careful attention was given to diet, and no medicine was taken. In fact, I have never taken pills, drugs, or medicines of any kind since my healing, which was about eight years ago. God has been my only Physician, right thoughts my only medicine, and I have never enjoyed better health.

This experience proved to me the value of Christian Science as a curative agency, but it took two years of study and questioning to prove to my own satisfaction that it is the true religion of Christ. Mrs. Eddy's writings have taught me more about the Bible, more about the divine Principle of man, more about how to live and how to be master of every situation, than any number of sermons, philosophies, or university lectures. Through the study of Christian Science I am growing into a religion of truth, with a God of love.

Other healings which I have experienced through the ministrations of scientific prayer are of chronic asthma, colds, burns, accidents, and many faults of character. Although the regeneration has just begun I am encouraged to go on in this practical religion of love, and I know our "labour is not in vain in the Lord." I am thankful for this opportunity to speak of my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for her willingness to give up the world and to do her Father's will by revealing to all the real Science of Christianity.

(Mrs.) Pearl M. Johns, Pendleton, Ore.

I should like to express my gratitude for the many benefits I have received through Christian Science. Some years ago I suffered from sleeplessness and went to several doctors in the hope of being cured; however I got no better and to the miseries of sleeplessness were added nervous depression, loss of appetite, and various worries which made life seem utterly dreary and wretched. My sister persuaded me to go to a Christian Science practitioner, who lovingly helped me into the light. Within three weeks I was sleeping like a baby, and all the other ills melted away. Christian Science helped me wonderfully at the birth of my little son, and indeed I can truthfully say that there is not a day when I do not receive some help and happiness and strength from this great truth.—(Mrs.) Elizabeth Paget, Bathwick Hill, Bath, England.

When Christian Science found me I thought nothing of religion, and never read the Bible; now it is a very interesting book to me. Several years previous I had a serious accident which resulted in almost entire loss of sight in one eye. After taking medical treatment and using every kind of remedy available, I found myself growing worse, and then broke down completely. Christian Science was presented to me by a dear friend and my husband asked me to give it a trial. I went to a practitioner, who gave me a few treatments, after which I was able to help myself in Science. We went to live on a homestead twenty-eight miles from a railroad, and being alone a great deal of the time, I spent three years in earnest study and found the true God to be Mind. I can truthfully say to-day that my eyesight has been restored; my eyes were never so strong before. While that healing was taking place I found myself healed completely of chronic bowel trouble of years' standing. This summer I dislocated my ankle and the foot swelled to twice its size. My husband wished to take me to a doctor, but I told him I needed no physician. I knew I could help myself with Christian Science and I did. The pain left a few moments after the dislocation took place, and I experienced that peace "which passeth all [human] understanding." The sense of fear completely left me, and I was up on crutches doing my housework from that day on. Not one material remedy was used, and in a very short time I was walking as well as ever. I want to say that for several years not a drop of medicine has passed my lips, while before that no day went by without it being taken. I am very grateful for Christian Science and my one desire is to learn more and more of the truth that makes us free.

(Mrs.) LILA NORTHRUP, Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

I wish to verify my wife's statements. She was practically an invalid before turning to Christian Science, but has not taken any medicine or consulted a doctor since and is in good health.

I have benefited considerably myself. I used always to take a material remedy for colds but now through my wife's study and what little I find time to read in Science and Health it is no longer necessary for me to take medicine. For this we are both exceedingly thankful.

HOWARD A. NORTHRUP.

I have been healed of severe headaches, after trying all kinds of remedies without success; also cured of taking medicine every night for other causes, for five years. I have been able to discard my far-seeing glasses after wearing them a number of years. Five years ago my financial support was suddenly taken from me, and in my desperation I turned to Christian Science, and through my understanding of the all-power of God and His ever present help, my every need has been met. I am most grateful for all blessings received and for all Christian Science has done for me.

(Mrs.) LOUISE VAN TINE, Philadelphia, Pa.

As an expression of gratitude and in witness of the healing power of Truth in this age, as revealed in the Bible, and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, the following experience is related with loving assurance that it will encourage others to turn to God for help in time of need.

Arriving home one evening the writer, then a beginner in the study of Christian Science, found his young son in bed, suffering from the effects of an accident in which his foot was severely sprained. Standing by his bedside and longing to be able to do something to relieve the little sufferer, it came to him that not long before in answer to his own silent prayer he had been healed of a severe attack of fever in a very few minutes. In grateful contemplation of this he silently asked God to show him the way by which his child might be healed. Then as thought ascended, there was realized a great sense of the allness and ever presence of Love and the nothingness of the discord. The child was lovingly assured that God would heal him. The bandage was removed, some medicine previously applied by another member of the family wiped away, and the bandage replaced. Immediately the expression of pain disappeared, and the child fell asleep. Next morning he awoke with no evidence whatever of the injury and apparently without any recollection of the dream, which Truth had proved to be no part of his being. Thus to one grateful student were proved the words of our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, on page 495 of Science and Health, "Truth casts out error now as surely as it did nineteen centuries ago."

FRANK A. UPDEGRAFF, Topeka, Kan.

I have read the foregoing and gratefully bear witness to the healing of my husband and son; also that Christian Science has been our only remedy since these healings occurred, about seven years ago.

(Mrs.) EDNA B. UPDEGRAFF.

For the many blessings and the help which Christian Science has brought me I wish to express my heartfelt gratitude. For many years I was a sufferer from nervous trouble, experienced severe pains throughout the entire body. The nerves of my stomach were also affected and I could partake only of easily digestible food. I tried baths to relieve me of this trouble. A course of treatment taken in a hydropathic establishment did not effect the least results. Seventeen years ago I was healed of this painful trouble in a few weeks through Christian Science. This healing has proved to be permanent and never since then have I suffered from nervous trouble. I have also overcome several minor ailments through the realization of God's omnipotence and omnipresence. With the psalmist I can say: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies."

Some time ago my knee became swollen, and, as I am a member of a sick benefit aid, I was obliged to consult a physician, who diagnosed the case as mycodermitis of the knee and told me I would never get rid of this trouble; for the present, he said, the leg could remain as it was, but later on it would have to be operated on. Then I consulted a Christian Science practitioner and asked for treatment. After two weeks the swelling was greatly reduced. Then I informed the practitioner that I wished to continue the work myself. I tried to realize the perfect man, created in God's image and likeness and governed by divine law only. After two more weeks my knee was completely healed. I think of our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, with a deep love, for through her life work I have been shown the right way and have found the living Christ.

"Now I see"

MARIA VALDE

A LITTLE child,—she loved to hear about
The New Jerusalem and God's white throne.
She longed to know, but none could tell the way,
As on she journeyed, homesick and alone.

The years passed by; at last she heard a voice,
The still, small voice of Science gently say:
Behold, God's tabernacle is with men;
The night is spent, at hand is glorious day!

Then Love in tender mercy touched her eyes,
And now she sees the Savior, Christ the King,
In might and grace Truth dwelling among men,
And hears the waking earth God's glory sing.

Signs of the Times

[Dr. A. Pulford in Toledo (Ohio) Blade]

I note with some surprise that the board of education indorses a campaign in the public schools, educating the pupils to the benefits of vaccination as a preventive of smallpox. If the newspapers will allow me I will present a few points which I am afraid the board of education has overlooked, or perhaps forgotten.

First, we are of the opinion that there is a permanent injunction on file restraining the board of health from interfering with the public schools. Can the board of health or the board of education afford to face contempt proceedings? Again, anyone who is vaccinated against his will, or whose child is vaccinated against the wishes of its parents, can proceed to collect heavy damages from the vaccinator and his aides and abettors. Can the board of education or the board of health afford to run these risks? If vaccination could prevent smallpox, they could. But it does not, all assertions that it does, to the contrary notwithstanding. Again, there is no state law compelling vaccination, and city ordinances do not take precedence over state law. Again, the board of education and the board of health will be obliged to show cause why a healthy, normal child is a menace in a public school, as well as why it is necessary to disease a child before he is capable of absorbing an education.

Lastly, I defy any physician to prove that vaccination prevents smallpox with perfect immunity from evil after-effects. The high death rate among our army boys sheds no luster upon vaccines or serums as either preventives or cures.

[Rev. Dr. Albert Hurlstone, reported in Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

Common sense religion recognizes the fact that humor has a mission in the tragic history of the overburdened souls of men. One of the missions of good humor is to keep us in harmony with the music of creation.

Clean humor is a tonic to the race. It carries with it faith and sunshine. Humor is often sublime. It is the triumph over fear. Fear is responsible for many failures, much sickness, and not a few deaths. Humor is wisely styled the delight of wise men and the pitfall of fools. It is a proof of the goodness of God. Its mission is not to kill, but to make alive; not to blight, but to bless, to cheer the hearts of the depressed and banish fear from the minds of those who are in the grip of melancholia, sorrow, or needless despair.

Used wisely, it may be a weapon to destroy many of the follies of the world and bring the mind to sane and just views of life. The joy of the Lord is to be our strength. We are commanded to rejoice with those who do rejoice.

[Gate City, Keokuk, Iowa]

This is a time of all others when we should not as a people lose our spiritual moorings, for our need of God and religion was never greater than now. Our land is passing through a trying, pitiful experience due to the evil forces inherent in some men. The world soul is being worked upon as never before, as far as we can judge. It may be, though we may not know it, that mightier spiritual forces than we have any conception of are battling on the side of right and are at work to bring in what will amount to a new dispensation for mankind. To live in times like these is a privilege and an opportunity of incalculable value for those who take advantage of it; but for those who fail to, through not seeing clearly or for other reasons, the result may be spiritual dryness, as the ancient mystics called it, and loss instead of gain.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

JUST a word to express the joy which spontaneously bursts forth at the privilege of resubscribing to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. It is too vitally in touch with the good of the "children of men" to lose a copy. I will get my copies in the interim at the reading-room. The word "international" is not enough fully to express all the cardinal points of this publication. It is fully adapted to lead the thought of the nations along those safe constructive lines that coordinate the seeming discord of the day into perfect and harmonious relations. Avast, there! There are no "snags" ahead. The road is clear and so I say Good speed.

I HEARD a Columbia professor say, and also one who was not a professor, but one who was addressing a group of students, that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR had the best record of giving accurate news, and in these days of news suppression and news distortion, that is the kind of paper I want.

I TAKE this opportunity to express to you my gratitude for these periodicals, especially for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, the upholding of which should be the duty of every person who follows Principle instead of personal likes and dislikes. I love the MONITOR because it reflects the true spirit of Christian Science; that is, it stands for Principle and not for parties or groups of people, and after all the true understanding of Principle does not limit itself to some buildings or parties but is universal in everybody's heart. I hope, no, I know, that the MONITOR will forever continue to uphold its present stand in Principle, forever growing and broadening its views in a "world without end."

VOLUME XXII APRIL 3, 1920 NUMBER 31

His Right Place

HUGH STUART CAMPBELL

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE confirms the Scriptural statement that immortal man is the infinite expression, idea, or image of God. "So God created man in his own image," we read in the inspired first chapter of Genesis, and as if to emphasize the momentous completion of spiritual creation, the record further states that God beheld all that He had made and pronounced His work "very good." "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them." The universe of Mind with its identities, which embrace all substance, involves the changeless, the complete unfoldment and emanation of immortal wisdom and Love. If spiritual man is the impeccable and all-inclusive idea, or image, of God, then he must include and embrace all creation. Since it is impossible to separate cause from effect, then God, the one and only cause, cannot be divorced from man, the effect of this great creating cause. The real man not only partakes of the quality and essence of his Maker but he is indissolubly united in harmonious relationship with all the ideas which are included in the realm of infinite Mind. Thus the ideal man is not only the right or true idea of God, but he is eternally in his right place in the universe of Spirit. Paul, preaching to the Athenians, defined man's real environment to be in Mind when he said, "For in him [God] we live, and move, and have our being." God who is Love, and immortal man who is loving, are coexistent in Truth.

Christian Science reveals God's universe as complete and demonstrates the divine power which Deity imparts, through the operation of spiritual rules founded on perfect Principle. It is anchored upon unerring and unchanging law. Truth, which pervades its statements, is absolute. The fact that the human miscalled mind cannot comprehend spiritual man nor cognize his infinite Principle, does not disprove the infallibility of Principle, nor lessen man's immortality. Neither does this hinder his ability to be holy. When the understanding comes to a man that Mind is all and supreme, and that God's spiritual universe is the only reality,—understanding obtainable through the study of Christian Science, —he acquires the conscious birthright of dominion promised in the Bible, is lifted above the false teaching of creeds, and begins to see the things of God, good.

The Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, in revealing to humanity the orderly operations of the Science of being, begins and ends her comprehensive system of metaphysics within the infinity of spiritual reality. Her system of Christian healing admits of no divergence from absolute Truth. The one infinite God, good, is acknowledged as omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent. Science relegates to oblivion material creation and mortal existence. In the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy, it would seem, completely covers the question of man's origin and his sonship with Deity when, with a sublime word picture, she writes (p. 520): "Unfathomable Mind is expressed. The depth, breadth, height, might, majesty, and glory of infinite Love fill all space. That is enough! Human language can repeat only an infinitesimal part of what exists. The absolute ideal, man, is no more seen nor comprehended by mortals, than is his infinite Principle, Love. Principle and its idea, man, are coexistent and eternal."

Those unacquainted with the practice of Christian Science sometimes question why its followers radically rely on the absolute statements of Truth, when, they argue, daily material problems or mundane affairs are under consideration. They may ask: Suppose a man is suddenly dismissed from his position. He has a family to support and no income in sight. How is the teaching that man is the image of God going to supply his material needs in a practical manner? Christian Science answers that it matters not what the seeming discordant condition may be, whether affecting a man's body, his home, or his business, the right solution is at hand, and the proper adjustment in place of the false claim depends only upon the correct enforcement of the spiritual law of Principle, God. God, good, is not afar off but "a very present help in trouble." Christian Science, in dealing with the case, proceeds at once to annul the cause of the discord, which is always a mental cause, and which in every case is found to be in mortal mind. The divine Mind, Principle, does not err, and Christian Science instructs the learner how to seek guidance from the divine Mind alone. Never were truer words spoken than when Solomon said of a man, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." What, it may be asked, would be the state of a person who, to belief, was suddenly deprived of his occupation and salary? Would he not, perhaps, be worried, fearful, anxious, limited? A student of Christian Science would first endeavor to remove his fear. John said of fear that it was a torment and that fear is healed by love. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear," were his words. Now God is Love and to know God is to love. So it is with Scriptural authority that the student beset by fear must conquer fear with love.

Christian Science avers that understanding is the true state of living; a conscious realization of the Life which is God. It declares that a limited, fearful mortal mind produces a limited discordant seeming. It shows how God blesses man with all good and that He gives abundantly to His children. By removing fear with love and by establishing confidence in God's ever present provision for all; by proving that man as divine idea is always in his right place in Mind, and that Mind protects, provides, sustains, and governs him always and in all ways, he loses false beliefs in disaster, limitation, and hopelessness, and in their stead peace, energy, joy, and faith in man's God-given dominion over adversity prevail. Equipped with these true qualities of thought he cannot fail. Knowing his right place to be in Spirit he proves his right place in every way. He learns that in reality man never lost his place, and that ignorance of the truth of being, coupled with erroneous belief, was all that had momentarily obscured his vision of the Christ-idea and his clear perception of the Truth which is God. The rightly wise can be deprived of nothing. His home is safe, his body active, his business secure. Any sincere seeker may come under the protection of the Most High and find rest and peace in Love's haven of refuge if he will but listen to the still, small voice of Christ, Truth, now available and operative through Christian Science.

Mrs. Eddy writes in Science and Health (p. 128), "A knowledge of the Science of being develops the latent abilities and possibilities of man. It extends the atmosphere of thought, giving mortals access to broader and higher realms. It raises the thinker into his native air of insight and perspicacity."

"The right intuition"

ETHEL ADÈLE DENNY

HOW often from the depths of belief in matter has the desolate human sense cried out, Oh, I don't know! Or that other more piteous cry, If I had only known! What might have been, had I only known! So cried Hamlet, charged with the command to act, but travailing in inactivity, not knowing how or when to act; and so cry all who believe that there is ever a time when man cannot know the right thing to do, who are putting their faith in the five senses as witnesses of Truth. So, while we bow our heads as we read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him," we repudiate the availability of that wisdom when we accept as law any case in which a man fails to do the thing that he "would."

The man who pauses irresolute, not knowing what to do, will admit that his most valuable aid would be an unerring intelligence. He fails because of inactivity or mistaken activity. Now it is just this right thing to do that Christian Science has come to clarify. Mrs. Eddy says on page 152 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "Into His haven of Soul there enters no element of earth to cast out angels, to silence the right intuition which guides you safely home." Christian Science makes clear that there is never a time when man can be separated from that intelligence which eternally knows the right thing to do. Turning unreservedly to the one consciousness, man apprehends the right idea, the right answer. This must be so because God is eternally thinking and man, the image and likeness of God, must image God's thoughts or think with Him. How, indeed, could man think any other way, since God's thoughts, being infinite, must express all the Mind or intelligence there is?

But a man may insist: How free myself from the belief that there is a mind or brain apart from God, a mind that suggests the stupid, wrong thing to do? How can I tell the right intuition from the wrong? How can I think at all when my mind is troubled by horrid fantasies or dulled into sleep by thoughts that, dimly begun, circle as idly as gnats in a noonday haze? To this complaint of the human mind, Mrs. Eddy's answer in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 173) is serenely illuminating, "If Mind, God, is all-power and all-presence, man is not met by another power and presence, that—obstructing his intelligence—pains, fetters, and befools him."

Then inactivity and wrong mental activity must alike be the suppositional opposite of the eternally alert, thinking man of God. Inactivity would claim that man cannot think, that he is apathetic, unable to reason, paralyzed, as it were, by the burden of the law of a material brain. Now the important thing for one to see here, is that this inertia is but a more subtle form of mortal thinking. In being conscious of the inertia that he fears, he proves himself active, for consciousness is of the very essence of action. Then, fundamentally, a man can never be conscious of inactivity, because even to believe that he is inert, he must be consciously active.

The answer to the whole problem, therefore, lies in the truth that there is only one Mind, the all-acting, infinite Principle. Since there is but one Mind, there is but one consciousness, the consciousness of all that truly exists. This unerring, infinite consciousness, man must reflect. Then the truth of any proposition must rest in what God knows about it, and when any man turns from the material circumstance to the ever present spiritual idea, God's thoughts become manifest in better business, sure knowledge of the next step to take, more intelligent work.

Never, then, need any one fear the suggestion of apathy or a wrong decision. Being outside the realm of the infinite Mind, this suggestion has no real activity. It cannot think or say that man cannot think. It cannot talk, plan, or create. It is never alert. It cannot prophesy, counsel, or influence. It cannot cause anything or bring about any effect whatsoever. It is nothingness, the very quintessence of matter, the enslaving lie about the truth that frees. Having no actual existence, it can never oppose itself in any way to the effectual activity of the right idea. That which cannot act, plan, perpetuate itself, can never manifest itself. It is merely a lie with no reality to maintain it. Then suggestion of inactivity, indecision, or evil machinations should be met with fearless joy, for right there is the infinitely active goodness, including within itself all the presence, power, and knowledge there is, telling the man whom God created exactly what to do. Has infinity any meaning for us? There can be no intuition save the one right one that God is forever telling us. How can that be silenced unless God Himself cease to be conscious? Then,—how, where, when, can man be lost? Surely, he abides ever serene in the truth that apart from all material evidence the infinite Father-Mother consciousness is inexorably continuing to know the completely good activity of its own idea.

Truly did the psalmist say, "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!" For this true thought, since it comes from God, must reflect the fullness of His grace. Divinely intelligent, it sees through mortal judgments and failure, to its own radiant manifestation of what God knows. Born of Principle, it remains immutably pure and knows no law but the law of its own perfect cause. Supreme in God's omnipotence, it has dominion over all that matter claims to be. Glad and lovely in its immortal accord with infinite Life, it must correct suggestion of abnormality or decay. Thus, selfless, substantial, ever healing, this "angel of his presence" guides all men aright. It does not come to this one or to that one, but to all, to you and to me, from "my God and your God;" and it cannot abandon us at any time, for it is "God with us."

Resurrection

LENA M. HALL

"FATHER, forgive,"—it bursts the very tomb!
Rolls the dread stone, and sets the Master free.
"Father, forgive;" this consciousness divine
Shall banish stone and tomb eternally.

His lonely work to point the perfect way;
Ours just to walk that way through gleam or gloom.
Flowers shall spring where'er Love conquers hate—
Where Life shall triumph—flowers in fullest bloom.

"Spiritual history"

DOROTHY ROBERTS

ON page 204 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "All forms of error support the false conclusions that there is more than one Life; that material history is as real and living as spiritual history."

The testimonies of healing given in our Wednesday evening meetings and published in our periodicals should be "spiritual history," records of the power of God to heal, protect, and comfort. Throughout the Bible we are repeatedly told to "magnify the Lord" and a dictionary gives as one definition of the word, magnify: "To cause to seem greater or more important." It is indeed the function of a Christian Science testimony to make Principle seem greater and more important than before to the thought of the listener or reader. Error, the reverse of truth, would therefore attempt to magnify itself if possible, to cause itself to seem greater or more important than the truth,—in other words to argue that "material history is as real and living as spiritual history." Clad in the sheep's clothing of gratitude, or, perhaps, of a zealous desire to show the great changes Christian Science has wrought, this wolf endeavors to enlarge upon the dream of pain or suffering which may have preceded one's experience in Christian Science. As a result some eager, unwary listener or reader is impressed only with a vivid and disturbing image of disease or pain, instead of a joyous sense of God's importance and power.

The Biblical narrative of the healing of the Shunammite's child is a true testimony, as described by Mrs. Eddy in The Mother Church Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 24), where she says: "More than a mere rehearsal of blessings, it scales the pinnacle of praise and illustrates the demonstration of Christ, 'who healeth all thy diseases.'" No one after reading that story could be left with a sense of the child's suffering and death; on the contrary he could not but be filled with the confident trust expressed in that mother's words, "It is well."

There are twenty-two verses in the story, of which but four are devoted to "material history,"—to the description of the disease and death of the child. There is no detailed analysis of his symptoms or sensations, but enough is told so that there will be no misunderstanding in the thought of the reader concerning the condition which was healed. The remaining eighteen verses are concerned with the unfoldment of the healing. We are first told how the Shunammite mother faithfully magnified the Lord, even in the face of the most determined efforts of error to minify Him. She "shut the door" on the evidences which were denying the omnipresence of Life, and "went out." When her husband questioned her, she withstood the intense human desire to share her grief. Even though at that time death was by no means proved unreal to her, she did detect that it was a belief and not a physical condition, so that she refused to intensify the belief in her own or another's thought by rehearsing anything concerning it. She was not yet able to say, "It is well," but her reply to her husband expressed her highest concept of good at that moment, "It shall be well."

During her journey to the prophet she had opportunity quietly to think of what she knew about God, with the result that when Elisha's servant inquired, "Is it well with the child?" she replied with simple conviction, "It is well." She then successively rejected the suggestions that the Giver of life is also the giver of death; that it was necessary to be satisfied with the prophet's servant, a feeble concept of God, and to accept his verdict, "The child is not awaked." She would accept nothing short of the "prophet," which Mrs. Eddy defines on page 593 of Science and Health as "A spiritual seer; disappearance of material sense before the conscious facts of spiritual Truth." As a result of her steadfast faith, the prophet himself returned home with her, and the "conscious facts," as realized by him, completely destroyed the semblance of death. The Shunammite's child lived.

The concluding verses of this testimony are particularly interesting. We read simply that the mother fell at Elisha's feet, "and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out." There were apparently no long and effusive verbal expressions of gratitude. She had given thanks for Life when death seemed most apparent, so that the restoration, to sense, of her son, could but seem natural and normal. By her thought and action in time of trial she had truly expressed her gratitude. Elisha, by his successful demonstration of the power of God, had expressed his. There was no need for them to talk very much about it.

The first requisite of a testimony of healing, then, is that it shall contain only enough about discordant conditions to make it perfectly clear that they were healed. The essence of the testimony is the fact of healing,—of healing through the power of God as utilized in Christian Science. When this fact has been magnified, very few further words are necessary to evidence our sincere gratitude to God for Christian Science and for its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy.

Dominion

CHARLES V. WINN

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE is the truth about God, and being the truth about God it is necessarily the truth about all that God creates including man. Nothing is clearer than that the effect must be like its cause; the creation must manifest the qualities of the creator. In its very first chapter the Bible states that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." As God possesses all the power there is, the man of God's creating must manifest power, dominion, ability, and capacity. Mary Baker Eddy tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 516): "Man, made in His likeness, possesses and reflects God's dominion over all the earth." Christian Science teaches us that we are not the victims of outrageous misfortune, but that we are God-endowed with a righteous mastery, which if exercised properly to-day will result in right control of our bodies, our business, our dispositions, and all our affairs.

If we remember that part which reads "reflecting God's power," we are not likely to be misled, but if for one instant we forget that, we are treading on dangerous ground. Nowhere does the Bible or our textbook tell us that we have dominion over men. When we assume that right we have wandered into the field of domination which is utterly foreign to Christian Science. When human sympathy prompts us to outline for another the way he should go, we are infringing on his God-given right to look to God and God alone for his guidance. Let us suppose that what we have considered right for another to do is actually best for him under the circumstances,—even then it would be wiser for us to wait until he sees it as God's way and not our way. Would it not be better for us to declare and realize God's government and then let God's truth manifest itself in His own time and His own way?

In the Manual Mrs. Eddy tells us (Art. XXVII, Sect. 5), "The less the teacher personally controls other minds, and the more he trusts them to the divine Truth and Love, the better it will be for both teacher and student." There is where the struggle sometimes comes,—to stand still and trust. It seems so much easier to give personal advice than to declare the truth and then withdraw ourselves from the problem. What we think best for another may be a very worthy thing, but it may not be the right time for it. Again, the individual may not have reached that point in his growth when the step in question is right or wise. Many, many times in our experience, if we will analyze our own thought carefully we shall find that what we desire another to do is induced not so much by a desire to promote the other's welfare as by a desire on our part to have him do something that we think will reflect credit on ourselves.

Our beloved Leader counsels us to "leave the distinctions of individual character and the discriminations and guidance thereof to the Father, whose wisdom is unerring and whose love is universal" (No and Yes, p. 7). Surely in that universal love no condition or circumstance is beyond the reach of His tender and unfailing guidance. In leaving our families, our patients, and our friends in the hands of Him who "hath done all things well," we shall be glad to say, "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever."

The Mirage

JOHN R. HATTEN

THE writer was much impressed with a picture entitled, "A Mirage on the Arizona Desert," which bears the following inscription: "In the deserts of Arizona and California the mirage is often seen, and in some locations it is visible nearly every day of the year. Broad lakes, surrounded by fields of green, herds of cattle, houses, and tree-bordered streams frequently appear not far distant amid the sands, and many a prospector or adventurer has been misled by the apparent oases, only at last to find that the spreading trees and the sparkling water evade him, the valley that looked so green is as dry and barren as the trail he left, and that he has been in pursuit of a mirage."

After studying this picture, the thought occurred of how well it represents our individual experience; for there comes a time when we, too, like the travelers in the picture, realize the need of something better to lead us than the evidence gained by the eye or any of the material senses. This need is being recognized by many and is being ushered in through our failures in life,—failures at least in so far as we have been following the material and therefore unscientific lines of reasoning, until we arrive at a place in a mental desert of sand where the only evidence of life is seen in the worthless cactus and where the ground at our feet is "sinking sand," reminding us of those who have preceded us along the same lines that we have been following.

There comes a time of awakening to the fact of a true sense of being and to the possibilities of a divine guidance. Thus we are made to see that we have been living on the fleeting hopes of the mirage, the alluring promises of which were the means of our being led farther into the desert of despair, where every hour of progress was only delaying our chances of a return to civilization; for the oasis seen in the western sky was but the reflection of the true sense of life that we had turned our backs upon, and not a something to be met with in our travels. It is well to be hopeful, but if our future happiness and success is to be built upon the delusion of the mirage, we had best be undeceived, even though we seem to suffer thereby. In the midst of any seeming difficulties it is well to remember that good alone is real. Thus as Shakespeare has so well said:—

> "Sweet are the uses of adversity,
> Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
> Wears yet a precious jewel in his head."

So long as we hunger, thirst, and faint by the wayside in following material modes of teaching, we are not reaching the desired goal; yet we had better suffer, if in so doing we are made to see our mistakes and to turn our course in a more scientific direction.

We should ask ourselves these questions: Has my life been a success? Have my religious teachings been the means of bringing me nearer to that desired haven of rest, expressed in better health, better morals, a more peaceful state of mind, and an abiding consciousness of to-day's salvation? Or, am I living a life of fleeting phantoms and depending upon death and the future promises of the mirage to sustain me? If so, then we are still in the desert, in a valley of dry bones,—as Ezekiel said for all Israel, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost."

When we think of the many special blessings that we as Christian Scientists are enjoying, there should ever flow a stream of joyous gratitude to God, that it has been our privilege in this age to know of one who has been able to break the bonds which wrong interpretation has placed upon the Scriptures, to open with the "Key" that great store of understanding, and to give a freedom to earth's millions that has not been experienced in eighteen hundred years. This is not a presumptuous statement, for in all civilized countries of the world there are multiplied thousands who are rejoicing in this new-found freedom of better health, better morals, and a happier and more contented state of mind; rejoicing in the fact that they have been shown a way out of a discordant state of existence and given a better concept of God, man, and heaven. All these many blessings have been made possible for us through the inspired teachings set forth in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

Truth has come to the world and is solving life's problems, acting as a great searchlight across its dark pathway. It came at a time when despair had settled all around as a dark cloud; when sorrow and suffering were on every side, and all seemed to be lost; when, lured on by the hope of something that was just beyond, though never attainable, we were following a mirage of false promises of a better state of health and happiness. Then it was that we found in the teachings of Christian Science hope without a blight of disappointment, the truth that has enabled us to lay hold upon greater and greater blessings, filling us with unspeakable joy and gratitude for peace of both mind and body and for a more comforting assurance of protection and guidance than we had ever hoped possible to the present sense of existence. We have proved the truth of what Mrs. Eddy tells us in the opening sentence of the Preface to our textbook, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings."

The Two-Edged Sword

HELEN LOUISE HAAS

"TRUTH," says Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 538), "is a two-edged sword, guarding and guiding." Penetrating the chaos of carnality with accelerated force and revealing its power to bless all who seek it, the two-edged sword of Truth will ever be the emblem of Christ-healing. Piercing pretenses, wounding to heal, probing the very depths of the fleshly mind, it thereby enables the seeker to become "every whit whole."

Each struggle with personal sense, mesmerism, and suggestion affords the student the opportunity of testing his spiritual strength or growth, and will disclose the kind of stronghold his earnest study hours have prepared. It is well to pause in our daily journey and consider how much the master or how much the dupe of mortal mind we really are. Even though personal sense vainly whispers that we read and do our work,—what kind of work are we doing? Are the fruits satisfying? Are our own comforts secondary and our brothers' primary? How many of mortal mind's impositions do we inadvertently tolerate and succumb to, passing them lightly over as little molehills and later standing in incredulous awe before them when they have grown into mountains through our own neglect? Sharp, pointed, much needed rebuke has many times been resisted and considered unjust by the writer, but as she looks back upon these experiences with enlightened perception, great significance is attached thereto. On one occasion she blindly prayed, "Lead thou me on," while within she steadily listened to the persistent suggestion of error, which said, "I am so afraid." Unsolved problems, discord, and discouragement were the fruits of this faltering position. At this point she was confronted with the startling realization that where she had thought she was strong, she was weak. She had then to learn what real mental work is, to begin anew and build from a solid foundation, to realize that fear is doubt, and doubt is a species of atheism. When the work was done aright she became more instant in her affirmations and denials, the parley with error ceased, clarified thought was alert. It was then that the light became so clear that she could easily walk in it, and the fruits of Spirit began to appear.

"All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me," is still being whispered by evil to those who would follow God. If, perchance, our sense be clouded, how can we discern the tempter, and avoid the consequent stumbling and falling, the inevitable struggling back to the Father to regain our health and happiness? Every individual must sometime encounter and defeat the false sense of self, that self of which we may have been very boastful, in which we have placed untold confidence, which we have glorified and coddled, but which will have to be seen for just what it is—the obstruction in the pathway leading to God or Life eternal. On page 233 of Miscellany our revered Leader tells us, "Ignorance of self is the most stubborn belief to overcome, for apathy, dishonesty, sin, follow in its train." The most cherished thought of this so-called self is that it may escape the reaping it has sown. Nevertheless, escape is impossible and any seeming escape is due only to misapprehension or ignorance and is finally seen not to be escape at all. We find ourselves just where our thought has taken us; but when the guarding and guiding of thoughts by divine Mind is manifested, the fears and incertitudes will disappear with the mist which forms them. "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

When will the clamorings of the senses cease—
The falsities of earth that so enthrall?
Wouldst truly know? The answer is for all:
"Acquaint . . . thyself with him, and be at peace."

["Demonstration"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 9, 1920]

On page 111 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy defines the term demonstration as it is used in Christian Science. Beginning at the eleventh line of the page she writes: "The Principle of divine metaphysics is God; the practice of divine metaphysics is the utilization of the power of Truth over error; its rules demonstrate its Science." It is a sentence brimful of meaning and of tremendous import to the human race, dipping deep beneath the superficial aspects of human experience and inviting to the consideration of absolute spiritual fact.

In investigating demonstration several questions immediately arise, such as, What has to be demonstrated? and, Over what has the demonstration to be made? These questions must be considered from the standpoint of absolute metaphysics. The divine and the human seem to present themselves; when in fact there is nothing but the divine, and, as Christian Science is continually pointing out, the regeneration of the individual from disease or sin consists in the overcoming of the human sense of things with all its erroneous and limited material beliefs, through the realization of the spiritual sense of reality.

What, then, has to be demonstrated? Divine Principle,—and divine Principle is God, infinite Mind, omnipresent Truth, omnipotent Spirit. Mrs. Eddy discovered that divine Principle exists without an opposite; and upon her understanding of this fundamental spiritual truth the utterly fallacious nature of matter and all evil was exposed to her. She saw the belief of evil, that which was torturing humanity and binding it in the fetters of disease and sin, to be a lie against the truth of the allness of Principle; and because it is a lie, it has therefore no real existence. Thus Mrs. Eddy discovered and announced to the world the fact that, since Principle is infinite, evil is in reality nothing. The discovery was neither speculative nor theoretical. Divine Principle was recognized to be All-in-all, existing eternally as the one and only cause, and manifesting itself in the universe of perfect, spiritual ideas. And not only did Mrs. Eddy state the truth about the allness and perfection of Principle and the unreality of evil, but she demonstrated the truth when this spiritual illumination instantaneously healed her of a diseased bodily condition which had been pronounced incurable. And then she proceeded to heal others from maladies of all kinds.

Next: Over what has the demonstration to be made? Over the false belief of the human mind that matter or evil is real. This is simple enough to state, but the realization of it can only be achieved through consecration of purpose begotten of spiritual understanding. One has only to think of human life to recognize how great is the work to be done. Christian Science, while it shows that evil is unreal, since Principle is infinite good, does not overlook in the very slightest degree the fact that mortals believe tremendously at times in the reality of evil and practice it to their discomfiture. Christian Science lifts the veil from the materialism of mankind, from false material sense which stifles spiritual impulse and destroys human happiness. These things are exposed by Christian Science; they are recognized only as error, as false belief which must be acknowledged as such in the light of the allness of Principle, in order to be destroyed. Whenever the discovery of the nature of the eternal, unalterable, divine Principle is made, it becomes possible to demonstrate it according to the rules of Science in the destruction of all forms of error.

Demonstration is essentially a scientific process. Often in the past men have thought that God answered prayer in some inscrutable way, if He answered it at all. That was because they did not know God as the Principle of all real being, did not know God as the Truth of all truth. Unaware of the omnipresence of Spirit, they were living in the belief that matter was real. The position is completely altered in Christian Science. God, divine Principle, is revealed to the world, and Principle can consequently be demonstrated in the destruction of every erroneous belief of the human mind. No healing that occurs in Christian Science, be it of sin or disease, is ever fortuitous. Every healing results from the understanding in some measure of Principle, from the knowledge of spiritual causation and of the unreality of matter or evil.

In Christian Science practice the method of demonstration is absolute. There can be no compromise with Principle. No one could heal even the stupidest malady if he tried to work from the dual basis of matter and Spirit. If he did try, it would show how ignorant he was of divine Science. Mrs. Eddy makes the point plain when she writes on page 456 of Science and Health: "So long as matter is the basis of practice, illness cannot be efficaciously treated by the metaphysical process. Truth does the work, and you must both understand and abide by the divine Principle of your demonstration." It is by knowing Principle, and abiding by Principle confidently and firmly that healing work is accomplished in Christian Science.

Great things have already been accomplished through this Science. All kinds of inharmony have been destroyed through its benign influence. All manner of disease has yielded to its treatment. There are no such words as "incurable disease" in the Christian Scientist's vocabulary. He understands the allness of Principle and knows that the realization of actuality, of Truth, will heal any discordant condition. He is convinced that the divine Principle of which he has some knowledge can destroy any false belief which the human mind may entertain. Once, in speaking to his disciples, Jesus said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." He foretold the time when men should possess a profound knowledge of divine Principle, "my Father," and this knowledge would enable them to do the same kind of works as he did, and even greater, as there is no limit to the activity of Principle. It is omnipotent.

[W. Truman Green in The Florida Times-Union, Jacksonville, Fla.]

In a recent issue of the Times-Union there appeared an article entitled, "A Woman's Immense Achievement." The writer's real motive for writing the article seems to have been to disparage and discredit Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. It is surprising that at this day and time a person endeavoring to enlighten the public should attempt to give as facts, statements which were proved false more than a quarter of a century ago. The public to-day is too well acquainted with Christian Science and the life and works of its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, to be misled by such an article. Christian Science is not a hidden mystery; its textbook is to be found in public libraries throughout the world. There is scarcely a community in which the English language is spoken where something is not known of its healing and saving ministry.

In the year 1866, while reading the Bible, Mrs. Eddy was instantly healed of severe injuries, the result of a fall. In speaking of this healing she says in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 108), "When apparently near the confines of mortal existence, standing already within the shadow of the death-valley, I learned these truths in divine Science: that all real being is in God, the divine Mind, and that Life, Truth, and Love are all-powerful and ever-present." This experience was the dawn to her consciousness of the Christ-healing as taught and practiced by the Master.

Christian Science is not based upon the theories of Dr. Phineas Parkhurst Quimby, the magnetic healer, as was asserted in the article referred to. In fact Mrs. Eddy has written two chapters in the Christian Science textbook denouncing hypnotism, mesmerism, animal magnetism, and spiritualism. The writer of the article states that other religious organizations, realizing the need of a healing ministry, are establishing clinics based on principles somewhat similar to Christian Science. Such religious organizations, including "new thought," have absolutely nothing in common with the teachings and Principle of Christian Science. It is true the world was never in greater need of healing than to-day, and Christian Science is meeting this need by freeing mankind of all manner of sickness and sin. It is proving to us that the promises of the Bible are for to-day, as well as for yesterday and to-morrow.

In establishing the Christian Science movement, Mrs. Eddy made it clear to her followers that worship of personality was to be avoided. She even secluded herself personally from the world, teaching the necessity of worshiping God alone. Mrs. Eddy, as a Leader, was tender, kind, and compassionate, saying to her students in the Message for 1901 (p. 34), "Follow your Leader only so far as she follows Christ." Truly the life work of Mary Baker Eddy has been one of the world's greatest achievements.

[W. Stuart Booth in Monte Vista (Colo.) Journal]

It appears from the letter written to the Journal by the traveling preacher, who recently visited Monte Vista, that he . . . objects to Christian Science because it heals the sick "and thus draws them away from the evangelical churches." The same objection was raised by the clergy of the first century to Christ Jesus, whose practice so verified and vitalized his preaching that the advocates of scholastic theology felt rebuked thereby. However, instead of endeavoring to improve their own religious teaching, they attacked Christ Jesus, denouncing his teaching as heresy and claiming that his healing was by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. It is not surprising that Christian Science, which is but the reinstatement of primitive Christianity, should be accorded a similar welcome.

The obvious absurdity of the statement that Christian Science is "opposed to all public health and is a community menace" is shown in the healings which are accomplished by means of its divine agency and activity. The phenomenal spread and acceptance of Christian Science is due to its healing message and mission, which is but the fulfillment of Christ Jesus' promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Instead of denying the atonement, Christian Science clarifies this much misunderstood subject by showing that the atonement is simply the at-one-ment, or unity of God and man as was taught, lived, and proved by Christ Jesus. As Mrs. Eddy writes on page 18 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook: "Jesus of Nazareth taught and demonstrated man's oneness with the Father, and for this we owe him endless homage. His mission was both individual and collective. He did life's work aright not only in justice to himself, but in mercy to mortals,—to show them how to do theirs, but not to do it for them nor to relieve them of a single responsibility. Jesus acted boldly, against the accredited evidence of the senses, against Pharisaical creeds and practices, and he refuted all opponents with his healing power. The atonement of Christ reconciles man to God, not God to man; for the divine Principle of Christ is God, and how can God propitiate Himself?" One instance of Christ Jesus' clearly correlative teaching on this subject may be found in the seventeenth chapter of the gospel according to John.

The statement that "God is Christian Science" reveals a lamentable ignorance of the subject. Christian Science is not God, but is the law of God, the exact, scientific statement of the truth about God and His creation, which Christ Jesus said would make men free. In closing it seems fitting to quote from Science and Health (p. 354): "The opponents of divine Science must be charitable, if they would be Christian. If the letter of Christian Science appears inconsistent, they should gain the spiritual meaning of Christian Science, and then the ambiguity will vanish. The charge of inconsistency in Christianly scientific methods of dealing with sin and disease is met by something practical,—namely, the proof of the utility of these methods; and proofs are better than mere verbal arguments or prayers which evince no spiritual power to heal."

[Louis A. Gregory in The Bee, Omaha, Neb.]

May I offer amendments to some statements concerning Christian Science in the article on "Spiritualism" from the Baltimore American, reprinted in The Bee. Of course, The Bee is responsible only for the further circulation of the article, but it reaches so many people that the other side of the question should be stated.

"Christian Science is virtually interwoven with spiritism by the nature of its teaching," is a statement in the article that is simply preposterous. The two systems are entirely antagonistic, as Mary Baker Eddy maintains throughout her writings, and no one is better qualified than she to pass on this question. She carefully investigated spiritism before her discovery of Christian Science, at a time when spiritualism was more prevalent probably than it is to-day. One chapter of her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," is devoted to this topic. It is entitled, "Christian Science versus Spiritualism," and it logically proves that the further one goes in the investigation and practice of either of these subjects the further he is from the other.

The nature of any teaching is conclusively shown by its practices and results, and in all these Christian Science and spiritualism are as far apart as the poles. The article provides an apt illustration. It refers to well-known spiritualists as those "who have become exponents of the truth of immortality as derived from table tipping and like exercises, along with levitation, direct voice, and varied forms of alleged communication with the other world." Christian Science emphatically repudiates table tipping, levitation, communication, and all such avowed activities of alleged spirits, and questions their asserted proof of immortality. This science maintains that the teachings and works of Christ Jesus fully prove immortality, and that they are logical and demonstrable. The destruction of sin and the healing of disease through the power of God, Spirit, as Jesus did this work, leads ultimately to the conquest of death as taught by the Master and shown in his resurrection and ascension. Thus he fully and unmistakably demonstrated immortality. Christian Scientists do not claim to have reached that point, but they are obediently taking the steps of healing the sick and reforming sinners through spiritual power alone. This practice and its remarkable results stand out in clear contrast with the rappings, voices, and other manifestations of seances and mediums.

The basis of Christian Science is the Bible doctrine of one, infinite God, who also is Spirit; therefore Science deduces logically that Spirit is one and infinite. In Science and Health (p. 466) Mrs. Eddy says, "The term souls or spirits is as improper as the term gods."

Most English translators of the Bible have used the term spirit loosely, and thus lend slight color of verity to spiritistic theorizing that spirits are mystic beings or parts of beings. Most of the Scriptural uses of the word spirit in a finite and good sense are applied in Christian Science to mean right ideas or thoughts, while evil spirits, devils, and so forth are considered evil beliefs or false convictions. Thus Christian Science rejects any supposed mysticism about spirituality and reveals it as a practical, intelligible, and provable fact of daily experience, and always as a power for good.

[George H. Cox in Times-Echo, Eureka Springs, Ark.]

The Los Angeles information in the Times-Echo of recent date is good news. When leaders of religious denominations call a meeting in Los Angeles for the purpose of considering healing by spiritual means as taught by the great Master, they are not "fighting Christian Science," but, as they state, are returning "to the old apostolic faith" and "practice." We are rejoiced to see that day rapidly approaching. It might interest your readers to know of this prophecy by the Founder of the Christian Science church, Mary Baker Eddy. On page 22 of "Pulpit and Press" she writes, "If the lives of Christian Scientists attest their fidelity to Truth, I predict that in the twentieth century every Christian church in our land, and a few in far-off lands, will approximate the understanding of Christian Science sufficiently to heal the sick in his [Christ's] name."

Be Still and Know

Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.—Psalms xlvi:10.

EVA B. ROWE

BE still and know that I am God,— Omnipotence supreme,
Omniscience, to guide us through
Our fleeting earthly dream.

And so when cares beset our day
And trials vex us so,
We hear within the still, small voice:
Be still and know.

Be still and know that I am God;
No God is there beside—
No sin, disease, nor death hath power
When we in Him abide.

Within the secret place of Love,
Secure from every foe,
With silent lips and grateful hearts,
Be still and know.

Revolution

Truth is revolutionary. But this, it must be understood, is true only in a world of relative human conceptions of good and evil. In the spiritual universe in which nothing but good exists any revolutionary process is an impossibility. The words, "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him," were spoken only of a material condition of things, governed by human ideals of good and evil.

In this world of human conceptions, then, revolution is inevitable. The story of the human race, as recorded in history, is a mere succession of revolutions of one kind or another; whilst the metaphysical insight of Christ Jesus revealed to his disciples the scientific fact that iniquity would abound before the final triumph of Truth should come. The reason for this is made clear beyond words by Mrs. Eddy. "Science is absolute and final," she writes, on page 99 of "Miscellaneous Writings." "It is revolutionary in its very nature; for it upsets all that is not upright. It annuls false evidence, and saith to the five material senses, 'Having eyes ye see not, and ears ye hear not; neither can you understand.'" Here then is the very essence of revolution embedded in the human consciousness, and summed up in perfect terms by Paul, in his letter to the Galatians, "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."

Every revolution, therefore, in the material universe, must proceed from the fundamental cause of the inherent inharmony of evil acted on by the perpetual pressure of good. This really is what Mrs. Eddy terms chemicalization, the mental and physical process involved in the change from a material to a spiritual basis. "This mental fermentation has begun," she writes on page 96 of Science and Health, in speaking of the conflict of forces already manifested in the world, "and will continue until all errors of belief yield to understanding. Belief is changeable, but spiritual understanding is changeless." Thus, it is obvious that, while in the spiritual realm revolution is an impossibility, in the material counterfeit it is a necessity of the process of the destruction of the lie in the gradual unfoldment of Truth.

There has never been a time in history when this process has been more manifest than it is to-day. To those who believe in the power of evil, and accept the teachings of natural science, the conditions everywhere surrounding them must be fraught with fear. As he views the world, the human being is a pigmy facing the unknown with the consciousness of his own impotence and inability to control the convulsions of nature. This is why Bolshevism is full of such dreadful omen to him; and this why the doctor stands beaten in the face of what he terms incurable disease, and the minister in the face of what he regards as sin. Yet to anybody who has really studied the Bible it must be apparent that, if the teachings of the Gospels are true, there is no need for any such fear or despair. Either Christ Jesus was in earnest when he said that those who accepted and practised his teaching would be able to repeat his works, and to accomplish even greater things than he had accomplished, or else he was giving a hungry world stones instead of bread. The latter supposition is unthinkable to any person who has accepted his teaching, therefore the Founder of Christianity must have meant what he said, and it must be as true to-day as in the first century, that men can control a storm, walk upon the waters, raise the dead, and triumph over sorrow, and sickness, and sin. Before, however, men can change from their present materialistic basis of thought to a purely spiritual basis, revolution is inevitable, and revolution in one way is bound to produce revolution in another. The teaching of Jesus in Palestine was followed by a political revolution which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem and cost the Jews dear. It was almost impossible, indeed, that the terrific chemicalization in thought caused by the demonstrations of Jesus, ending in the resurrection, could have passed off without some tremendous ebullition of human feeling. Something of the same kind, the student of history will realize, has followed every great religious revolution. The translation of the Bible into English by Wycliffe was the immediate precursor of the Peasants' War; and in the same way the theses of Luther found their reply in all the horrors of the Thirty Years' War.

Gradually as the world begins to understand that thought is everything, and that physical actions are only the externalized result of thought, the philosophy of history will begin to assume an aspect which it has never assumed before. Men and women will see that perturbed and excited thought is bound to be followed by perturbed and excited action; and therefore revolution, in some form or another, will appear as the inevitable result of the mental conditions preceding it. In this, however, there is no necessity, to those who understand Principle, for the manifestation of any dismay. If the human mind produces discord and dismay, the divine Mind is able to control these mental forces, and controlling these mental forces to control the material actions which seem to follow them. The Bible distinctly declares that Principle has given man dominion. And in proportion as the individual begins to understand Principle, he begins to understand how he may exercise dominion. Christ Jesus was unmoved by the storm on Galilee, undisturbed in the presence of death, master of the elements whether in the boat or walking on the waves, and finally victor, upon the cross, over all the terrors of spiritual wickedness in high places, followed by the convulsions of nature. It is as true to-day that this dominion can exist as it was in the first century, and as Mrs. Eddy expresses it when she writes on page 96 of Science and Health: "This material world is even now becoming the arena for conflicting forces. On one side there will be discord and dismay; on the other side there will be Science and peace. The breaking up of material beliefs may seem to be famine and pestilence, want and woe, sin, sickness, and death, which assume new phases until their nothingness appears. These disturbances will continue until the end of error, when all discord will be swallowed up in spiritual Truth."

Can then revolutions be avoided? That great statesman, Lord Beaconsfield, placed in the mouth of a character in one of his books, the opinion that they could not. Sidonia, it is true, was judging by the political signs of the times. Had he ever attempted to fathom spiritual causation, his opinion would scarcely have been altered. Frederick Dixon.

Youth

IN order to be able to declare so positively, "Before Abraham was, I am," Christ Jesus had to understand the exact nature of eternal youth. He knew that the age of the true man, in the divine likeness, can be measured neither in years nor even in æons of mortal time. Being coexistent with the creator, the activity which constitutes the real man is as old and as young as God. On page 244 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "Man in Science is neither young nor old. He has neither birth nor death." All there is to his spiritual and genuine existence is immortal now. Only by rejoicing that the divine idea lives indestructibly in Mind, not in matter, can one experience thorough vigor and enthusiasm forever. The wholeness of Spirit and its manifestation is quite apart from any supposition of a material body. Hence the actual youth of Spirit has nothing whatever to do with any belief in matter.

Always, in one sense, therefore, the sincere seeker for the truth as revealed through Christian Science must prove himself to be a ceaselessly "young student." The perfect ardor, fearlessness, and buoyancy produced by the divine Mind must be continuous. To this only Mind that can really know anything, every right quality is both immediate and permanent. This verity every one turning to Principle is entitled to prove for himself. Whether the proving seem rapid or slow, it is ever the process of spiritually young energy, which is not affected by any hypothesis of mortal time. The one who considers himself an "old student" of Christian Science, a paragon of attained virtue, forgets Paul's statement to the Philippians, "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you."

Though the so-called mortal is a mere belief that there could be an opposite to perfection, the truth is that the immortal idea is even now experiencing the complete joy of infinite youth. Before the absolute harmony of the divine action, every supposition of mortality simply has to vanish. If the belief in mortality could be conceived of as turning at all toward the light, it would necessarily have to disappear in the presence of the allness of Principle and its idea. From a supposedly mortal standpoint, this disappearance is all the pressing forward there is. Of course that very hypothesis is mere counterfeit of the boundless unfoldment going on in the divine consciousness. Alertness in expressing spiritual intelligence alone is the sign of true youth. The age of righteousness in living cannot be gauged by years. Its vitality is in the eternal now. Instead of whatever may seem to be, the sturdy doing caused by the one Mind actually is.

Interestingly enough, Mrs. Eddy never once uses the term "young student" in her works as they now stand. When David presented himself before Saul and said, "Thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine," Saul at first protested, "Thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth." Yet David soon proved that his reliance on divine intelligence was unerringly successful. In fact, the very childlikeness of his assurance was the reason for his victory. So from the very first moment of one's dependence on Principle alone, one is really equipped to vanquish the deaths of mortal suggestion. This fact each one can rejoice in, without a trace of timidity. In spite of any belief about youngness or oldness, the true idea remains idea, entirely strong and sufficient in activity as the expression of the one Spirit. Since each one must demonstrate this for himself, where is there any reason for distinction between the so-called neophyte and the sophisticated?

In every circumstance, the present is always the season for youth. Out of a period of seeming war, there may appear to arise new nations, new aspirations, new opportunities. Any real newness, however, is not material. To be genuine it must be simply the right and normal state of the divine Mind, untouched by any illusion of material desires. Forever the true state of keen vitality has existed and does exist even where the opposite would seem to be. To-day, then, regardless of the cynicism of materialistic diplomatists, with all their political chicaneries, the essence of spiritual Life itself is unassailable. By turning together to the essence of the divine consciousness, communities, nations, the whole world at large, must prove that Life and its every manifestation have forever the entire newness of the infinite now. Only when each one is sure that he himself is eagerly living in accord with Principle, does each one find himself in the good company of God.

On page 61 of "Unity of Good" Mrs. Eddy summed up the whole thing when she wrote: "To material sense, Jesus first appeared as a helpless human babe; but to immortal and spiritual vision he was one with the Father, even the eternal idea of God, that was—and is—neither young nor old, neither dead nor risen. The mutations of mortal sense are the evening and the morning of human thought,—the twilight and dawn of earthly vision, which precedeth the nightless radiance of divine Life. Human perception, advancing toward the apprehension of its nothingness, halts, retreats, and again goes forward; but the divine Principle and Spirit and spiritual man are unchangeable,—neither advancing, retreating, nor halting." All this is true also of the spiritual fact of which any human sense of things whatever is but the suppositional counterfeit. The divine idea which is the only creation of God remains unchangeable as infinitely youthful activity.

GUSTAVUS S. PAINE.

Special Announcement

So many inquiries with respect to the editorial changes in the Publishing House have been made that the Trustees deem it their duty to make known to the field the exact truth with regard to the situation as to which many false statements have been and are being circulated. We do this, not because any appreciable effect has been wrought upon the great number of Christian Scientists throughout the country, but because we find that in certain sections some have accepted these false statements because uncontradicted by us.

We do not believe that any substantial number of loyal Christian Scientists can be persuaded to join in an attempt to impair, if not to destroy, institutions founded and named by Mrs. Eddy, but that such is a plan which has been contrived by certain misguided people cannot be denied.

These are the facts:

Two weeks ago, without notice, the editors of the Journal and Sentinel resigned their offices.

As to filling editorial vacancies, Article XXV, Section 4, of the Manual provides that editors "can be" elected "by unanimous vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors, and the consent of the Pastor Emeritus given in her own handwriting." Article I, Section 3, of the Manual provides that editors "may be" similarly elected. These provisions of the Manual can of course no longer be strictly complied with. The written consent of the Pastor Emeritus can no longer be secured, and until the question is determined as to whether Mrs. Knott or Mr. Dittemore is a director the "unanimous consent" of the directors cannot be had. All appointments since the consent of Mrs. Eddy became unobtainable have been made by mutual agreement between the two boards approving the persons selected as editors.

Upon the resignation of the editors, it was necessary for the Trustees to act immediately in order that the publication of the Journal and Sentinel should not be interrupted. At the Trustees' request, therefore, Mr. Dixon and Mr. Paine of the Monitor accepted temporary appointments as editors. The Trustees immediately notified the Directors of these appointments. The Directors having failed to approve these names, the Trustees invited them to name such persons as would be agreeable to them. The Directors responded that they declined to make any selections, giving as ostensible excuse the outstanding injunction in pending litigation.

The field should know, however, that this injunction does not prohibit cooperation of the Directors with the Trustees in the selection of editors. While it restrains the Directors from taking any action which would impair, destroy, or in any way injure the Publishing Society's business, their cooperation with the Trustees in agreeing upon editors could of course not be construed as any such thing.

Under these circumstances the periodicals go to the field with Mr. Dixon and Mr. Paine acting as editor and associate, under a temporary employment, at much personal inconvenience to these gentlemen, who accept these additional responsibilities in order that the publications founded and inspired by Mrs. Eddy shall not be lost. The only alternative which confronted the Trustees was that the publications should be suspended. Such a course to every Christian Scientist who is loyal to Mrs. Eddy would be unthinkable. If the Trustees had permitted this to be done they would have been recreant to the great trust which Mrs. Eddy established.

The Lectures

WILLMAR, MINN. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Ingebrigt C. Tollefson, who said in part:—

Few will deny that we are just emerging from an intensely material age. The genius of the human mind has spent itself in what the wise man called "many inventions." Man has harnessed a great number of the so-called forces of nature, through invention and new discoveries, and is making them serve him as never before. Wealth has multiplied, material comforts have increased; but have happiness, brotherly love, and the observance of the Golden Rule increased in the same ratio, or in anything like the same ratio?

There are, at the present day, unmistakable signs of a spiritual awakening,—a search for spiritual things. The most tangible and potent of these signs is Christian Science.

FORT WORTH, TEX. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by J. N. Sanborn, who said in part:—

For countless years the materialistic believers in the Bible have shrunk from the light of scientific reasoning, overlooking the fact that the Good Book itself invites us to "search the scriptures." It also says, "Come now, and let us reason together," and, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." With the return of the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures through Christian Science, a new religious era has come.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, CANADA (Society).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Mary A. Smith, who said in part:—

We read in the Bible that Jesus of Nazareth said: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He proved that this truth, when applied as he taught, would free mankind from all sin, sickness, and even death.

His followers also proved this for themselves and others for nearly three centuries after the crucifixion. After that time the healing influence was lost until, a little over fifty years ago, it was rediscovered by Mary Baker Eddy, who named her discovery Christian Science. She also proved through her own healing and by the healing of others that this truth will heal the sick now and in every age as it did nineteen hundred years ago.

ADRIAN, MICH. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Jerome N. Moran, who said in part:—

Over nineteen hundred years ago there was born in the city of Bethlehem of Judea Christ Jesus the Savior. The kindly shepherds, keeping watch o'er their flocks on the Judean hillsides, caught the joyous refrain, "On earth peace, good will toward men," as angels heralded the glad tidings of the coming of the Messiah, the Prince of Peace, whose mission on earth was "to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound . . . to comfort all that mourn . . . to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

To the listening and receptive hearts to-day, as of old, there is borne on angel wings the same sweet refrain, that Christ is here and now, to-day as much as yesterday, bringing rest to the weary and heavy-laden, joy to the troubled heart, and peace to the sin sick soul. Christian Science is the messenger to this age, and we need but reach out and touch the hem of its robe to find that

"Warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He;
And faith has yet its Olivet,
And love its Galilee."

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fifteenth Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Miss Luella Dee Gage, who said in part:—

We are told in the Scriptures that Jesus said to his disciples, "Preach the gospel," "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils." The disciples were enabled to follow their Master's commands because of their knowledge and understanding of the divine Principle, God. To-day Christian Science is teaching the world the knowledge of that same divine Principle and how to apply that knowledge to every problem.

Testimonies of Healing

Christian Science is a constant blessing to me and to my family. It is our help at all times, and always satisfies. It has healed me of hernia, severe headaches, intense fear of the dark and of thunder storms, of acute sensitiveness, of a predisposition to take cold. My husband was healed of a stomach trouble which was hereditary and of long standing.

Although our son has had whooping cough, measles, chicken pox, and scarlet fever, we have never needed to be quarantined; for each time, through the application of Christian Science, the disease has been so quickly overcome that we were saved the experience. At the time he was taken with scarlet fever, there was an epidemic of that disease in the town where we were then living. It seemed a desperate case, and it was a struggle for the writer to be willing to have the house quarantined if necessary. Finally she realized that Christian Scientists are taught to be obedient to state and national laws, and since Michigan required the quarantining of so-called contagious diseases, she called a physician. Before the physician came the writer saw that she was afraid of a name, and the true realization also came to her that God was greater than any name materia medica could give. With this all sense of fear and responsibility vanished, and she greeted the doctor with a light heart. When the physician examined the child he pronounced his throat to be in a terrible condition, and said he should be burning up with fever, but his temperature was only one degree above normal, and he added: "I do not understand his case to be scarlet fever when he has no fever, but call me in the morning." When morning came, a cheery voice called out to me, "Mother, I'm all right." Two days later the boy went to school as usual, perfectly well.

I am most grateful for having had the experience of class instruction. Each day discloses to me a new depth of gratitude to Mrs. Eddy that her wisdom has given us The Mother Church and its branch churches, with the privilege of membership, also the Church Manual and the Christian Science periodicals.

(Mrs.) Edna Dickinson Arnold, Zanesville, Ohio.

I can testify as to the truthfulness of the statements of my wife regarding her healing, as being very wonderful and permanent. My own experience with Christian Science proves it to be a protection, and it has to a great extent helped to overcome my fear of sickness; it is also a great help in my business. I have been healed of a very severe and distressing case of indigestion and stomach trouble, where other methods had failed. I am very grateful for my knowledge of this truth.—C. S. Arnold.

It is with the deepest sense of gratitude to God for all the blessings I have received through Christian Science, that I offer my testimony at this time, earnestly hoping it may be helpful to some one, as the testimonies of others have been to me. At the time of my coming into Christian Science, I had reached the end of all material aid; I had undergone five operations. In four years' time a complete nervous collapse manifested itself. I was urged to consult a specialist, who informed me another operation was necessary, as I was suffering from an abdominal difficulty, as well as from a growth in the stomach. After a consultation of specialists and X-ray physicians, it seemed there was nothing left for me to do but to die, as I could not submit to another operation. It was in this dreadful state of despondency that the thought came to me, "Why not try Christian Science?" I asked a practitioner if she thought Christian Science could help my case. She smiled and said, "There is nothing impossible in Truth," and I have indeed learned to know that very clearly myself. After a very few treatments I became a well, strong woman with an unlimited capacity for many things. My healing to me seems indeed wonderful, but it is as nothing compared with the great uplift of mind, the desire for all that is good. The only way I can prove my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our revered Leader is to practice each day more and more efficiently the glorious truths we are taught in Christian Science. I have had the privilege of class instruction, and although I have only been in Science two years I am demonstrating more and more each day the power of this great truth. I am also grateful for membership in The Mother Church and for our Christian Science literature, which helps us so much in solving our daily problems.

(Mrs.) Lulu Edsall Serven, Pearl River, N. Y.

Reading a testimony of healing of a condition so similar to my own was such a help to me that I want to pass mine on in the hope of helping another. In six years I had had five operations on my nose for an abnormal growth. Later another started and grew rapidly, so that I breathed through the nose with difficulty, and had a noticeable huskiness of speech. I called on a Christian Science practitioner for treatment and was helped temporarily, but the condition returned in a more severe form. When it was at its worst, and I was also having an attack of grippe, I was entirely healed in Christian Science, the growth passing from the nose without a particle of sensation. A gathering in the ear was healed at the same time. I feel that I have everything to be thankful to God for, and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the understanding of Truth she so lovingly gave the world.

(Mrs.) Aimee Spooner, Alhambra, Calif.

For nearly eleven years before Christian Science found me I had been a sufferer with stomach trouble. During this period I was constantly under the care of physicians, among them some of the best in this and another city. My condition grew steadily worse, and each attack of the trouble grew more violent and left me in a more weakened condition. I had been suffering with the last attack for about five weeks when I despaired of receiving any aid from the doctors and determined to try Christian Science. My wife assisted me to the door of a practitioner and left me to interview the gentleman alone. After some conversation I realized that whatever there was in the teaching of Christian Science, it was more than mere physical healing. In short I had a glimpse of the truth that makes man free.

At the close of that interview and treatment I made my way to a Christian Science reading room and spent several hours reading from the chapter on Prayer in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. When I left I had in my possession a copy of this book, which I had purchased. I returned home walking the entire distance. That evening I ate what for me was a hearty meal, and after again reading from Science and Health for several hours, retired and enjoyed the first real sleep I had had for some weeks. I awoke the following morning early, feeling good and strong, and went about my work as though I were a well man. My wife was convinced that I was on the way to recovery and prepared a good meal, of which I partook heartily. Toward evening I began to feel ill. I made my way home and again read from Science and Health. The practitioner who had treated me the preceding day called that night and spent an hour with me; he called again the following morning and found me up and dressed. I visited him the following morning, after which I had no more treatments for that condition. By constant reading and study for some months and the application of Truth as the understanding came to me, the trouble was finally overcome, and I can record a perfect healing.

Since that time my wife and I have been blessed with many healings, physical and otherwise, and this testimony is given in loving gratitude to God, to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and to the practitioners who so lovingly ministered to me.—WILLIAM A. RUNYEON, Philadelphia, Pa.

That Christian Science restores and maintains health has been amply proved in my experience. Never having been robust from childhood, in later years a nervous breakdown left a sense of weakness and physical disability which nothing seemed able to remove. Christian Science was lovingly offered and after objections and opposition had been met with kindliest explanations, I began to see that there was more in the textbook than at first appeared. My sole thought at first in taking up the study of this wonderful Science was to obtain physical benefit. So long as this was my aim I did not achieve much, but when I began to see that here at last was the true explanation of the questions and puzzles of life, and when I realized that I had caught a glimpse of the truth which Jesus declared should make us free, I also realized that I wanted this even more than physical healing. Needless to say it was not long before health and strength came in even greater measure than I had ever known before. This is fully six years ago and ever since Christian Science has been more to me than I can possibly explain. I have experienced quick release from a so-called incurable disease of the gums; that is, pyorrhea, the dentist remarking that it was wonderful the way in which the trouble had disappeared.

For the joy, peace, and freedom which Christian Science teaches to be the rightful heritage of every one of God's ideas, I am sincerely grateful. For having found a practical religion which, when demonstrated, removes discord of every kind, for the great comfort and help Christian Science is and has been, both to myself and to dear ones, I gratefully offer this testimony.

(Miss) GRACE E. DAVIS, Birkenhead, England.

I am glad to be able to confirm the above statement by my daughter and to say Christian Science has brought much joy into my life and harmony into our home. Through its study many ailments have disappeared that had troubled me for thirty years. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is most helpful, also Mrs. Eddy's other writings, and the Christian Science literature.—(Mrs.) E. DAVIS.

I am happy to testify to the blessings which have come to me through the understanding of Truth, as taught in Christian Science. My children and I have had many healings and many proofs of the power and protection of ever present divine Love. They have been healed of croup, colds, influenza, bowel and kidney trouble, and stammering. They have also been helped in their studies and in their music by the understanding that there is only one Mind, which is the one intelligence, and this Mind is reflected by every one of God's ideas. But the blessing for which I feel most grateful is the destruction of fear when any illness comes to one of my children. At one time I thought one of them was not growing and developing as a normal child should, but through the understanding of Christian Science the false condition was overcome.

I am more grateful for this beautiful teaching than words can express. I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy whose life of self-sacrifice brought the light of Truth once more to man. I am also grateful for the literature of The Christian Science Publishing Society, which always meets my needs, and to the practitioners who have so lovingly helped me.

It is with deep and heartfelt gratitude that I send this testimony to the Sentinel, so that all may know what Truth has done for me and is doing. It is very beautiful to be able to tell one's own experiences, and not merely repeat what some one else has said. For some years now I have been a student of Christian Science, and during those years the overcoming of sin and sickness has been beautiful. Although I, like most students, am deeply grateful for the healing of sickness, I am far more grateful for the healing of sin; we can only gain the physical healing through overcoming the thoughts which produce sickness.

I have had many proofs of the healing power of Truth, one of which I should like to mention. I seemed to be suffering from a belief of nervous exhaustion, being too tired to take any interest in anything; in fact I seemed very listless. I went to stay with a very loving practitioner, who saw the trouble and gave me the sweetest and most loving help. In a week I was perfectly healed; my strength returned and I felt well and happy. My heart goes out in deep gratitude to our Father-Mother God, and to our revered Leader for this practical truth; and my gratitude is great for our dear, loving practitioners. I can see more clearly every day that if I wish to progress, it must be in the way Love points out, and not in my own way. My earnest desire is to grow in the understanding of Truth and to be able to comfort and help others as I have been helped.

(Miss) AMY SCHLENCKER, Claremont, West Australia.

During the so-called epidemic a member of my family, who was not a Scientist, seemed to manifest influenza. I believed that I did not have any fear of the disease for myself, but somehow it suggested itself to me on account of the condition of my relative. Within less than a day I had a severe attack of this sickness and seemed much worse than my relative. With two treatments I was healed. I am grateful for this experience, because it served to set forth the truth of this statement, beginning on page 391 of Science and Health: "Fear is the fountain of sickness, and you master fear and sin through divine Mind; hence it is through divine Mind that you overcome disease." I have also been healed of chronic bowel trouble and nasal catarrh through reading the textbook.

Permit me to take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude for the splendid healing my mother has experienced. She had a severe attack of paralysis and for several months was unable to walk. This was healed under very trying circumstances. At this time we experienced a great financial loss and also suffered from limitation and want; but I am indeed grateful to state that where there was once a scanty supply, to-day there is a bountiful supply.

For a number of years before becoming interested in Christian Science I was a devout student of the Bible and a member of a denominational church. I attended three classes for instruction in Bible history and thought I knew God. When trials and tribulations came I could not prove that "God is . . . a very present help in trouble." After battling with what I know now were false beliefs I came to the conclusion that there was not any God. For one week I held this thought, and while it may seem to be a brief period, it was the most awful week that I have ever lived through. Now I know that I had only lost my false concept of God. Through the love reflected by the practitioner who helped my mother, I was lifted out of this "chaos and old night" to begin to realize that "God is Love." I am grateful for these experiences; Christian Science has done much for me, and words are indeed inadequate to tell how grateful I am for its teachings. It is, as Mrs. Eddy writes in Science and Health (p. 127), "the Comforter which leadeth into all truth." I trust that I may be ever mindful of the debt of gratitude I owe to Christian Science and to our dear Leader.

(Miss) Mary Ruete, West Hoboken, N. J.

One Saturday evening I fell down some steps, and owing to severe pain in the left ankle, it was very difficult for me to arise. A gentleman who came to my assistance expressed the gravest fears, which I did not allow myself to believe, but denied them as taught in Christian Science, trying to realize that "accidents are unknown to God, or immortal Mind" (Science and Health, p. 424). With great difficulty I walked to the next car stop, and the trip home proved to be very painful. Although I continued to declare the truth, the pain became worse. At twelve o'clock I endeavored to walk, but the foot seemed paralyzed, and at two o'clock I was carried to bed. I had expected to hear the Lesson-Sermon on the subject "God" read in our church the following morning. I thought over the sermon and enjoyed hours of silent communion with God. It was this realization which healed me. At seven o'clock, without having slept or removed my shoes, I arose and was able to walk. Although considerable effort was required, I attended the service and there experienced my complete healing.

I am inexpressibly thankful to God for this new proof of divine Love's power, which has been manifested to me many times during the last fourteen years through Christian Science. I thank our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, daily for her great gift.—(Mrs.) Clara Vontin, Hamburg, Germany.

When Christian Science was first introduced into our home, I was a very sick, weak child, depending entirely on materia medica for my aid. I was never allowed to be away any distance from mother, as they said I was too nervous. I was suffering from blood-poisoning in my foot when given the scientific statement of being (Science and Health, p. 468) to understand, and in three days was able to get around, to put my shoe on, and walk comfortably.

This healing raised new hope in me, I wanted what other Scientists had, but was told I must be studious to gain this. I started to Sunday school and before long my eyes, that had been crossed since I was two years old, so badly that it was impossible to see the eyeball of my left eye at all at times, were healed. This healing of my eyes was accomplished over four years ago, and I have had absolutely no trouble with them since.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for revealing to us this new-old, practical religion of love. "The vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love" (Science and Health, p. 113). It has met every need for the last five years. I have been healed of mumps, hemorrhages, sunstroke, fainting spells, misplaced hip, broken fingers, and Spanish influenza, and all this is indeed proof of the statement: "Truth, Life, and Love are a law of annihilation to everything unlike themselves, because they declare nothing except God" (Science and Health, p. 43). I am thankful for all these blessings, also for the practitioner who was the channel for my healings; but most of all I am grateful for the spiritual regeneration, which our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, made possible for us by her life of devotion to God.

(Miss) Mabel Tress, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

With sincere gratitude I offer this testimony of what Christian Science has done for me. My first proof of healing was the cure of pain in the stomach. To make my demonstration, I endeavored to become conscious of the truth of spiritual existence, and Paul's admonition came to me, to be "willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." The pain vanished suddenly, and I can truthfully say it was impossible to feel any pain. Toothache, sore eye, and other ailments have also been destroyed through Christian Science.

I thank God for having given us Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us the way of and to Life. I am very grateful for membership in The Mother Church and a branch church, very grateful for class instruction and the help and uplift it affords me still, and for our literature.

Siegmund J. D. Thamling, Phillipsburg, Kan.

This testimony is given in loving gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me; it is now eight years since I became interested in the study of it. I cannot express in words the gratitude I feel toward Mrs. Eddy, who discovered the law of spiritual healing which Christ Jesus had taught and demonstrated, and which she named Christian Science.

Like many others who know little or nothing about Christian Science, I condemned it publicly and privately, not knowing in the least what I was talking about. I began the study after being told by several different doctors that there was no known cure for me. I had suffered over twenty years from a skin disease, and from a human standpoint my case was hopeless; but I was healed entirely after a few treatments by a Christian Science practitioner. Gratitude for such healing can only be expressed by devotion to God.

There were also many unhappy conditions in the home, but one by one they are yielding to the power of Truth. I am deeply grateful for all the blessings received through my study. I have been healed of sick headaches from which I had suffered all my life, often being confined to my bed for a week at a time, and never being free for more than a few weeks until I began reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, eight years ago. This was my first demonstration, and no one can understand how grateful I am for a religion which teaches and demonstrates that God is the only power, a God who is ever present Love. My daughter was also healed of blindness six years ago after three doctors had said there was no cure for her, and she has had perfect sight ever since. My son, now nine years old, was always sick until I began the study of Christian Science, but with the loving help of a practitioner we have been able to overcome everything that has tried to manifest itself the last seven years, and he is perfectly healthy in every way and does not know what it is to take medicine.

I am very grateful for the Christian Science literature, which is always bringing just what may be needed each day.

I rejoice each day in comprehending more of the life-giving truth brought to the world through Christian Science and am trying to live according to the rules of life set forth by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I have been healed of an injury to the spine for which there was no material help; also, through the study of our textbook, of extreme nervousness and ill nature. I wore glasses, and an eye specialist had said I would always have to wear them, but I laid them aside seven years ago and have never felt the need of them since. I am very grateful to all who have helped me to see the Christ, Truth, and especially to Mrs. Eddy who was courageous enough to give her discovery to the world in such plain language that even if one has very little education he can work out his salvation by the study of her writings.

I pray that wisdom may be given me to serve others as lovingly, patiently, and humbly as I have been served and that I may show my gratitude in actions as well as words. I am far more grateful for the understanding of the Bible and for the spiritual uplift than for all other benefits I have received since I began the study of the Bible and Science and Health.—(Mrs.) MARY C. BRONSON, Colville, Wash.

Thirteen years ago our attention was directed to Christian Science by a friend. As my mother was a diligent Bible student, she said that she must first investigate this teaching to ascertain whether it agreed with the teachings of the Bible, so we attended the services and meetings and purchased copies of Der Herold der Christian Science, in this way gaining a deeper spiritual understanding. Then we requested the help of a practitioner. My mother was suffering from a nervous heart trouble and numerous sores on the hand, which would not heal, in spite of the salves she applied. For eleven years I had suffered from a skin disease which hindered my walking and caused me great distress. I was also sick in other ways and suffered much from headache. My mother and I went to a practitioner at the same time, each of us having three treatments, through which we were completely healed. For a long time after that we were able to overcome all difficulties through our own study of Christian Science and the application of what we had learned.

Only recently, after thirteen years, it again became necessary for me to request the help of a practitioner, as I was unable to overcome an erroneous condition for myself, namely an abnormal loss of hair. I was again quickly healed, and realize that this lesson was necessary, for I had never thought of expressing my thanks to God publicly for the privilege of knowing Christian Science, which was a rod and a staff to my mother and myself during the trying years of the recent war. We are inexpressibly thankful for the love of our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who gave us a correct understanding of the Bible and of Jesus' teachings.—(Miss) MAGDALENE POSECK, Berlin-Niederschönweide, Germany.

My heart is full of gratitude for the wonderful truth that is revealed to us through the study of Christian Science. So manifold have been the blessings received it would be too much to relate them all, but one healing which meant a great deal to me was the overcoming of chronic backache. I could scarcely do anything for weeks and then was healed in one treatment. That occurred nearly a year ago and there has been no return of the pain whatever. Neuralgia, pleurisy, influenza, and severe colds have all been overcome through Christian Science. Our two children are wonderfully well and strong and it is to this glorious truth we owe it all. To know they do not have to have all the so-called children's diseases is a great comfort. They have been exposed to whooping cough, measles, and chicken pox, at different times and Christian Science has always been our ever present help. The declaration in the ninety-first psalm, "Because thou hast made the Lord . . . thy habitation; there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling," is always a source of strength.

I am grateful not only for the healing received but for the mental uplift which comes through the reading of the Christian Science periodicals, which brings the peace "which passeth all understanding." My daily prayer is that I may so live and love this new-old truth, that I may help others to see the light.—(Mrs.) EDITH L. HILL, Bakersfield, Calif.

To express my deep gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me, I wish to add my testimony to the many that I have read.

About fourteen months ago I was pronounced a consumptive by two of the best doctors in Seattle and by a specialist in Denver, and was told after an examination by X ray and other means, that I was in a bad condition. The discouragement was so great that I knew there was no help for me from material means, and as I had been in the employ of a Christian Scientist a year before this and had heard him mention it several times, I immediately turned to Christian Science for help. After what I thought was a long time I was healed instantly one day, and for the past seven months I have been doing the hardest kind of work and getting better in every way. I am learning more every day that God is the only power.

No one can realize the wonderful difference in my life since my healing. Where everything was despondency, now it is joy. One thing that I see now was a blessing, though I did not know it at the time, was the action of the Christian Scientist in whose employ I was. Noticing my physical condition he sometimes would suggest Christian Science to me. At that time it seemingly had no effect on me, but I see now that it surely was a blessing to me that I was employed by him. I send this testimony, hoping it will be the means of helping some one who seems to be struggling to find the truth. To say that I am grateful for this truth is putting it mildly indeed. I am grateful for the physical healing, but more so for the knowledge that there is a God who heals all our diseases.—S. I. OGDEN, Lincoln, Neb.

I am indeed grateful for Christian Science and cannot express in words my thankfulness for what it has done to help me and my family. After my healing I thought of the woman whom we read about in the Bible who had spent all her living for physicians, yet no healing came. Then she touched Christ's garment and was healed of her infirmities. My healing came in the same way. After all material help had failed I was healed instantly in Christian Science. I would like to mention some of the healings we have had in our family: for instance an abnormal growth, tubercular trouble, scarlet fever, and nervous headaches have all been overcome. Christian Science has made me a better wife, mother, and neighbor. I am indeed grateful for the loving help received from relatives and from practitioners and want so to live daily that I may be worthy to be called a true and loyal Christian Scientist. I am a member of The Mother Church and also of a local church and have taken class instruction. I have been reading Christian Science since 1914 and it has met my every need.

Signs of the Times

[R. F. Horton, M.A., D.D., in The Christian World, London]

To say, as the economist did, that the interests of employer and employed are necessarily antagonistic and the conflict continuous, is totally to misrepresent human life and the world as God made it. If they are antagonistic they have to be reconciled. Employer and employed ought to be mutually serviceable; they ought to serve each other equally. The employer should be as beneficial to the employed as the employed is to the employer. There is no reason in the nature of things why they should not, in that beautiful Scriptural phrase, "by love serve one another." But if ever we are to overcome this dogma of the dismal science, if ever we are to get the right relation between the management and the labor in industry, there must come into it all another spirit. It cannot be settled by a conflict or a calculation of interests. It must be settled by something more human, more divine. It will only be done if we get back into life the great element of religion, the great power of God. Now, the reconciliation between labor and Christianity is, as I hinted, the one thing that is needed. Christ's solution of the industrial problem is the only solution which will not prove worse than the present troubles. . . .

Now I suppose it is almost superfluous for me to say to you that I personally am quite sure that Christ lives, that he lives and works to-day on just the same principles as he showed in his life; that his words spoken then apply now, that the spirit he manifested in his human life is the spirit that is ever at the disposal of men who will receive it and live by it. I need not say that my firm belief is that Christ lives, that Christ is accessible, that Christ is moving among us in such a way that if we were willing we could have his guidance and his power, and could find the settlement of our difficulties from his unfailing interest and his almighty gift of grace and love to the men whom he died to save. Now I would put that in a more definite and concrete form. If all employers of labor would honestly seek to know from Christ how he would have them treat the employed, if they would make it their business to learn from Christ the treatment of the employed, the whole way would begin to open out before them.

Now, if you notice carefully to-day you will see that the Christian church is altering its tone. Upon the question that occupies us to-night a radical change is taking place. In the Archbishops' report on Christianity and industrial problems you can read already the forecast of that reformation. It says: "The spirit and teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ must be applied to labor questions. Christianity teaches that all men are brothers and should labor for the community, that every soul is of infinite and equal value, that what is wrong for an individual cannot be right for any company or connected body, that no one should suffer want while others have more than they need."

[J. Fort Newton, D.D., D.Litt., in Christian World, London]

The real life of a man, the center of his power and the secret of his service, is inward and unseen. His bitterest woe, his highest joy, his actual victory or defeat, are hidden away in his heart. There is an inward kingdom stretching away into strange distances, to discover and conquer which is the real achievement of life. Here, within our own souls, are depths unguessed, powers undreamed of, emancipations unproclaimed, revelations unknown.

What we need, more than all else, in the hurry and stress and trial of life, is to be possessed by the power and armored by the might of great truths. There is no evil that we cannot overcome, no crisis we cannot face, no victory we cannot win, if the mind and heart are thus ruled by just, sane, lofty, spiritual ideas. Once we take the truth as it is in Jesus to heart, feeling, desire, and life itself will rise up and follow it.

[Berkeley (Calif.) Times]

This is the opening of a great humanistic age when men are feverishly, if not consciously, searching the heart for an answer to the old, old question, "Who is my neighbour?"

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

AT this time I wish to express my gratitude for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. Last year while teaching in a Jewish technical school in ————, I became acquainted with this paper, as we had a daily copy in the teachers' room. A substitute teacher, a Westerner, and one who has traveled much throughout the country, remarked that she had found the MONITOR wherever she was; that in hotel, train, or boat, she always expected to find a current copy of this paper. She was, however, a little surprised to find it in the school. I would add that at some time or other, I have heard from every member of that faculty, from Orthodox, Jew, Catholic, and from those representing every political belief, the expression of the truth and the interest to be found therein. This year I am commuting to the city where I am teaching, and I look forward with pleasure to the reading of this paper on the train. Foreign people and students have remarked so many times that they would like to find a paper that would give them the true situation in Europe, and it is always a pleasure to me to be able to talk in an intelligent manner of the country in which they are interested, through the knowledge I have gained from reading the MONITOR. I believe that no daily paper could more completely and truly state the questions of the day than this paper.

Right Thinking

ALFRED F. GOODMAN

IT must be understood that constant warfare with the flesh is necessary to progress in Christian Science. Without continual effort to prevent wrong thinking we cannot attain that peace "which passeth all understanding," and this never ceasing endeavor to think rightly partakes somewhat of the nature of warfare and so might indeed be termed mental warfare. Is not the knowing of the truth and the unknowing of error more or less of a fight when error has a seeming host of false witnesses arrayed against the supremacy of God, good? True, it is the real against the unreal, light against darkness, and there can never be the least doubt as to the ultimate outcome. The battle is mental and is the struggle to admit light, to acknowledge the real. Sooner or later each one must decide for himself upon the basis of Principle just what is real and what is unreal, and this deciding or testing constitutes the battle between Spirit and the flesh. Mortals cling tenaciously to wrong thinking. The whole structure of the false claim of existence is based upon untrue or false thinking regarding God and man. For this reason every thought must be weighed and tested before it is admitted as a reality, in order that wrong thoughts with their accompanying beliefs of sin, sickness, poverty, and death may not find lodgment.

We must become dissatisfied with matter. We must understand that matter from beginning to end is not real, lasting, or truly desirable. It can give us nothing of real value, nothing which is real pleasure. Until these facts are clearly understood mankind will not care to look beyond matter for something better. Once convinced that matter is undesirable, however, we are willing to turn from its fleeting joys and false claims, to the truth of being, and there find freedom. At every turn in thus changing from one basis to another, we come in contact with suggestions of material sense which whisper that we are not doing the best thing, that matter is more substantial than Spirit, its joys more real and lasting, its rewards more generous, its results more certain. It is the warding off of these suggestions which constitutes the warfare in which every active Christian Scientist is engaged to-day.

We must be nothing less than pitiless with every erroneous thought and immediately reject it. To dwell upon it as a reality for a moment is to give it entrance, and thus to cause more trouble in finally ejecting it, for ejected it must inevitably be. The only way is never to admit recognized errors, but to follow the Master, who "suffered them not to speak." Our revered Leader has placed great emphasis upon this point, as is revealed in the many references thereto in her writings. On page 288 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "The suppositional warfare between truth and error is only the mental conflict between the evidence of the spiritual senses and the testimony of the material senses, and this warfare between the Spirit and flesh will settle all questions through faith in and the understanding of divine Love." Again on page 234 of the textbook she has written: "If mortals would keep proper ward over mortal mind, the brood of evils which infest it would be cleared out. We must begin with this so-called mind and empty it of sin and sickness, or sin and sickness will never cease." Farther down on the same page we read: "Sin and disease must be thought before they can be manifested. You must control evil thoughts in the first instance, or they will control you in the second. Jesus declared that to look with desire on forbidden objects was to break a moral precept."

Our thinking, then, is the controlling factor of our lives. If it were generally realized that wrong thoughts are every whit as harmful and destructive to health and success as wrong-doing, since both pull us down from the exalting influence of the divine Mind or spiritual consciousness, mankind would make a great stride forward. Remember that it is always the quality of your thoughts which determines the nature of your experience. Consider the baser types of mortal mind,—those who are called the inebriates, the idlers, the victims of false appetites, the criminals. In what channels does their thinking run? Any fair-minded person will readily admit that their condition is the result of their thinking. This is proved by the fact that when their mental condition is uplifted, we have what is known as a reformed man. Reformation is always an uplifting process.

Christian Scientists have enlisted in the great army of right thinkers. They are daily and hourly striving to reform their thoughts and lives by lifting them up to the standard set by Christ Jesus, the Way-shower. This is resulting in a body of clean-living, clean-thinking, healthy, happy men and women. The Bible is to them the most precious treasure on earth through the interpretation given them by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other writings. Every incident in the Bible has much more than a historical interest for them; it contains a practical truth which Christian Science explains and makes available. The prophets and apostles become known as the blazers of trails which stretch before, leading always to greater heights.

Is it any wonder that Christian Scientists are thankful to Christ Jesus, the Way-shower, and to Mary Baker Eddy, who has again revealed the practical availability of his teachings, for having labored and suffered in order that we might have a certain, absolute knowledge of God which brings us into at-one-ment with the ever active, powerful, and certain laws of divine Principle? Through right thinking, as made plain by the study of Christian Science, we become conscious now and here of God's ability and willingness to heal and save; and through right application of the truths absorbed by correct study, we can apply the rule furnished by the Master and rise above all human discord. "The kingdom of God is within you," said Jesus. Let us see that wrong thinking is barred from our mental processes, and that nothing but this kingdom of God rules us. Scientifically correct thoughts are priceless.

Discovery

CATHARINE VERRALL

THE writer once found an old atlas the purpose of which was to show the gradual discovery of what we now call the world. On the first page was a small plot of ground called the Garden of Eden; this was surrounded by water. The next page showed a larger tract of land, and so on, until two pages were needed to show the whole of the world's discoveries. To a Christian Scientist, with the first glimpse of the world of Spirit comes some of the joy of a discoverer, where it is seen that though God's creation is finished, this creation is to be discovered only by taking the footsteps pointed out by Mrs. Eddy, whose tireless work revealed to her so much of the land which to others may seem very far off. Each demonstration of the fact of God as ever present and man in His image and likeness is an everlasting possession. Things that the world calls important fade away into nothingness when we rise high enough above the mist of materialism to see something of the allness of God, good, and the nothingness of evil. It is only when we allow thought to dwell on hardships and difficulties that the way seems toilsome. The true explorer is glad if his toil brings something to light that was unknown before. His enthusiasm is undaunted and his hope never flags. And so it is with the true Christian Scientist.

To the distributor of the Christian Science literature, each fresh place he finds where his gift is gladly accepted is a discovery. Each patient who is healed discovers something that was always there before, only awaiting the recognition of the practitioner and the receptivity of the patient. Each testimony of gratitude and praise reveals fresh glimpses of the light which was always shining out into the darkness and has at last been seen and acknowledged. Through the wisdom of our Leader churches are required to elect or reelect as their own officers not only those who have proved themselves fitted for their office, but they must also enlarge their borders and exercise a wider vision, a larger discernment of the fitness of their membership for office. Church building, which becomes necessary as the attendance grows, requires ever increasing effort and new discoveries. The lecturer is constantly discovering new regions where the gospel may be preached, as he hears the cry, "Come over . . . and help us." New fields for discovery are steadily being opened up to the Committees on Publication, and so on through all the varied activities of the Christian Science movement.

Beginners taking their first steps toward the new world of Spirit ask eagerly, "What can I do?" What did those do who sailed to the New World with Columbus? They went with him. He could not have gone without them. They could have helped him more, however, if they had acknowledged his leadership and obeyed even when they did not fully understand. Very much can be done even by a beginner. He can start at once to learn the new language of Spirit by carefully studying the Bible with Science and Health, the "Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy has given to us. He can begin at once to walk in the way pointed out, by following always that which is good. He can test his understanding by applying what he reads to his daily affairs and watch the result on his health and happiness. The beginner is tempted again and again to believe in false laws of limitation, lack of time, of money, of friends, and of other things that seem desirable. Peter says the trial of our faith is "more precious than of gold that perisheth." Each trial rightly met brings fresh inspiration and encouragement to persevere.

On page 108 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy speaks of "'the price of learning love,'" in the sentence: "It was the divine law of Life and Love, unfolding to me the demonstrable fact that matter possesses neither sensation nor life; that human experiences show the falsity of all material things; and that immortal cravings, 'the price of learning love,' establish the truism that the only sufferer is mortal mind, for the divine Mind cannot suffer." Who that is paying the price does not find it worth while? What should Columbus care about his own fortune if he enriched the world by his discovery? He that would gain his life must lose it. Lose what? His false sense of life, all his meanness and idleness and self-love, all that is unlike God. And what does he gain who becomes poor for Christ's sake? Our Leader's life is the answer. She gained all that is worth while, because she was a true discoverer, glad to part with everything that might hinder her from sharing her discovery with all mankind.

"Sing unto the Lord"

ALFRED H. SMITH

"IT is a good thing," declared the psalmist, "to sing praises unto thy name." To "make a joyful noise" was the glad service of those who came with singing into the presence of the Most High. The people sang their joys and griefs in all the great crises of their history,—now the rolling pæan of triumph and again the sobbing murmur of inglorious defeat. Standing on the troubled shores of the protecting sea, Miriam sounded her joyous timbrel to celebrate the deliverance of her people. "Sing unto the Lord, all the earth," exhorted the psalmist, "honour and majesty are before him: strength and beauty are in his sanctuary." "Break forth into joy," cried the rapt Isaiah, "sing together . . . for the Lord hath . . . redeemed Jerusalem." "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion," commanded Zechariah, "for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." Paul and Silas sought solace by singing hymns in the gloomy prison and won courage to their lonely hearts. On the solemn night of Gethsemane, "when they had sung an hymn," the Master went out into the Mount of Olives to meet the traitor and to be delivered up to the enemy.

It was a wise man who desired to write the hymns of a nation, for a good hymn will sing its message of courage and consolation to wistful humanity when tedious volumes of theology lie forgotten in the dusty years. A good hymn voices all the aspirations of the heart, it gives courage to the timid, brings consolation to the desolate, binds up the wounds of the broken soldier of circumstance, sets free the captive of sinful sense, and breathes the adoration of the saint.

The good hymnist springs from the royal line of prophets; like them he has insight into the "deep things of God,"—"the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God." He knows whom he has believed; upon God's law has he meditated all the day; "his delight is in the law of the Lord;" when "day uttereth speech" and night "sheweth knowledge," their various language falls upon his attentive thought. The hymnist sounds all the depths and shoals of our experience, gives fitting expression to its gratitude and devotion, makes vocal its living confession of loving faith, and lifts into glorious song its radiant prayer of confident affirmation. Like the prophet, the hymnist must impart his revelation. He voices the grand harmonies of Soul, and weaves all devotion into his warp and woof of sound and sense. Then are we lifted up that the "King of glory" may come in.

A great hymn must express competently and with convincing fervor the deep religious convictions of sincerity and true reverence. There must be unity of thought, harmony of diction, clarity of spiritual sense, and a right relation of words and music devoted to the lyrical expression of a noble theme. Doctrinal tenets and sectarian beliefs should never appear in a hymn, nor should "the daughters of musick . . . be brought low" by a trivial melody. If a man is known by the company he keeps, is it not reasonable that a people should be known by the songs they sing? Not that hymns should consciously set forth a didactic exposition of a creed, but they should glow with the warm courage of high resolve; they should be informed with the spirit that maketh alive; they should bear the hearty message of "on earth peace, good will toward men." Why should we not win the tribute offered of old, "Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing; then said they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them"?

The great literature of Christian Science is a vital force in this pure and loving thought. The inspired volumes of our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, have grounded us in the faith; the lectures have instructed us in those things which are most surely believed among us; the testimonies of healing have gone forth as "signs following" them that believe; our periodicals bring "good tidings of great joy" and publish peace to all the world; and our grand hymns affirm our confident knowledge of salvation and bear our sincere prayer of communion, to One in whom is no "shadow of turning."

The Christian Scientist who neglects giving our Hymnal his loving, thoughtful attention, fails to possess in full "the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Especially should he draw very near to those sweet and beautiful expressions of tender grace from the pen of our Leader; for truly they reveal the "deep things of God." They come fresh from the fount where patience has "her perfect work;" some are made perfect by tribulation; some are chastened by experience and show His care for those he loves; others are the flowers from the fields of untroubled thinking. In all of them, the discerning one may find the leaves for "the healing of the nations." So in this bright, new revelation of old, far-off, half-forgotten healing, we renew the covenant whereby, in the words of Jesus, "the works that I do shall he do also" and join heartily in singing "unto the Lord a new song,"—that song of which Mrs. Eddy speaks in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 568) where she says: "A louder song, sweeter than has ever before reached high heaven, now rises clearer and nearer to the great heart of Christ; for the accuser is not there and Love sends forth her primal and everlasting strain."

Discipline

ETHEL ENDSLEY

AFTER teaching in the Christian Science Sunday school for many months with the same group of children, a teacher began to see manifested signs of inattention and restlessness, annoyance of classmates, and indifference to correction. She strove earnestly and conscientiously to meet the situation in a Christianly scientific manner. One day while studying the Lesson-Sermon from The Christian Science Quarterly and seeking divine guidance regarding the condition that needed adjustment in the class, it was seen that discipline must be better understood. Webster's first definition of it is, "The treatment suited to a disciple or learner." Thought naturally turned to those disciples whose teacher was Jesus the Christ. It became clear that teacher and pupil alike in the Christian Science Sunday school were striving to be disciples and learners. The whole question then resolved itself into: What was Jesus' attitude toward his disciples? The complete answer did not come immediately, but with each day's study of the Bible in connection with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, new light has been shed on this vital question, until some very useful lessons have been learned.

As a first aid the definition of Jesus was studied (Science and Health, p. 589), "The highest human corporeal concept of the divine idea, rebuking and destroying error and bringing to light man's immortality." That Mind which Jesus expressed is just as truly the teacher to-day as in the time of Peter and John. In the presence of such a consciousness the rebuke of error and its destruction can be assured. Who can imagine a disobedient child in the presence of such love for them as was manifested by Jesus, when he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God"?

The results of applying the new light as it has come, week by week, have been most gratifying; much progress has been made, and the question of discipline has taken its rightful place.

Preparedness

ALICE CARY VICTOR

THERE are two words which became very familiar to all during the period of the war,—words which we, as students of Christian Science, should understand in their deepest meaning,—propaganda and preparedness. This was brought to the writer's attention clearly a few days since by the remarks of a neighbor, who said in the course of a conversation, when speaking of a so-called contagious malady, "It is already here,—not in this town yet, perhaps, but in the state, and I hope people are preparing themselves to meet it." The expressed belief was immediately denied mentally by the hearer. Later, when alone, her thought reverted to the statement and she saw how this neighbor was spreading the propaganda of disease and death, and unwittingly preparing herself and her family to be possible victims of the prevailing fear. Then came the thought: What is a Christian Scientist's understanding of these two words? Propaganda is defined as "any method for the propagation of doctrines. . . ." Then audible speech is not the only means for disseminating the beliefs of the human mind; no, nor always the most seemingly potential, for a lie voiced can be denied and rejected, but the claim of mesmerism, when not understood as powerless, is a method of propaganda that numbers its victims by the thousand. Mrs. Eddy long since told us (Science and Health, p. 102), "The looms of crime, hidden in the dark recesses of mortal thought, are every hour weaving webs more complicated and subtle," and has not this statement of hers been proved over and over again through enemy psychology, enemy propaganda, hypnotism, mesmerism, and every silent, mental method of attack on all that stands for the liberty and well-being of mankind?

Were Christian Scientists prepared to meet these conditions? Yes; our workers went forth with their "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," secure in the knowledge of the omnipresence and omnipotence of divine Love which would "strengthen their hands in the work" literally, while lifting thought above the material, with such an understanding of Truth and Love that the sick and wounded were healed, the weak made strong, the fearful, bold, and the sorrowing comforted. Food, clothing, money, loving help of every material kind we freely gave, as did others the world over; but each gift of a Christian Scientist was accompanied by a prayer,—not merely a petition, but a silent declaration of the allness of God, good, of infinite Love, and of the brotherhood of man; for have we not all one Father-Mother, even God?

On page 559 of Science and Health, we are told, "The 'still, small voice' of scientific thought reaches over continent and ocean to the globe's remotest bound." This, then, is our answer to propaganda,—"the 'still, small voice' of scientific thought," going out to heal and bless; the divine, spiritual method.

The material war seems to have ended, but Armageddon is not yet won. The forces of mortal mind seem to be in a riot, and peace is seemingly not yet established. Are we prepared to meet and master the discord and fear of the hour? We can prove that we are if we know our refuge is "in the secret place of the most High." Mortal beliefs may come to us with a sword, a spear, and a shield, as David was met by Goliath, but we can go forth, as did David, in the name of the Lord of hosts, armed with the sword of Spirit. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 571 of Science and Health, "Clad in the panoply of Love, human hatred cannot reach you," and we can thereby win the victories which the Lord has promised to those who put their trust in Him.

The Joy of Proving

MARY E. TRUITT

WHEN to the student of Christian Science comes an understanding of the practical import of Jesus' teaching, his joy is unbounded. After he has wandered through the unsatisfying mazes of theology and medicine, it is a wonderful thing to learn and to know really that God is Love and that as Mrs. Eddy says, "The same power which heals sin heals also sickness" (Science and Health, p. 135). When one has felt the healing touch of the Christ, Truth, whether through deliverance from sin, sickness, or sorrow, he longs to share with others, and especially those nearest and dearest, this wonderful new knowledge. It seems so simple and so clear that he never doubts but that all will accept it. Perhaps this desire takes precedence over the wiser one, which is to gain first a knowledge of the teachings of Christian Science so thorough that it cannot be shaken by the doubts and questions of others.

Questions will be asked by those who really care to know, and to them is due intelligent explanation or the loving advice to study the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, together with the Bible. Then, too, questions will come from those whose desire is not for knowledge of the teachings of Christian Science, but merely for argument or to confuse and to create doubt where there should be assurance. A wise thought of Peter's is worth remembering: "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." That is, to sanctify, consecrate, and devote one's time and thought to the knowing of God and man's relationship to Him!

Soon the student of Christian Science learns that he cannot take any merely material relationship with him into this new and interesting search for the truth; then he realizes the wisdom of silently working out his own salvation and recognizes that the approval of others is not necessary to his advancement. Perhaps there will come the reflected thought that a great gulf is being formed between him and the loved ones; something may seem to tell him to advance slowly, or to wait until they are ready to travel the path he has chosen. Some may linger long in the valley of indecision, and to such Mrs. Eddy gives a kindly admonition on page 183 of Science and Health: "Divine Mind rightly demands man's entire obedience, affection, and strength. No reservation is made for any lesser loyalty." Jesus realized that only through undivided allegiance to God could he help others, and he said, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Jesus waited not for the plaudits of the multitude, but spoke and taught the truth as it was given to him by his Father. He was always loving, compassionate, and thoughtful of others, and so should every Christian Scientist be, but this does not mean conceding anything to public opinion if that opinion does not measure up to the standards of Principle. One's work must be done well in quietness and peace so that when a testing time comes, a time when error rages and the evidence of the senses is terrifying, then he can rejoice in the knowledge of the nothingness of error and the allness of God, and rest secure in the assurance that God is Love. How gratefully and confidently he turns to God in this hour of trial, needing only to know that the God who is Love is a living, healing presence. He rejoices in this opportunity to prove God's allness, knowing as we are told in Science and Health (p. 66), "Each successive stage of experience unfolds new views of divine goodness and love."

Christ Jesus said to his disciples, "Ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." When it is seen that Jesus' words and example were meant for us today, that his teachings can be lived and applied to every problem, for Love is the one and only power, this knowledge is truly a joy that cannot be taken away. Each one's little circle of friends and the world at large are rightly looking for practice not preaching, for proof not mere words; and when one is ready to prove his statements by his deeds, to live each day a little nearer to the teachings of Christ, then nothing can destroy his faith, for it has become understanding; nothing can take away his joy, for it is established in God, divine Love.

"Obedience to Truth"

VIOLET CUMBERLEGE

IN the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 183) Mrs. Eddy writes, "Obedience to Truth gives man power and strength," and as we increase in the understanding of the Christ, Truth, as explained in Christian Science, we see more and more clearly that willing obedience to divine Love is the first essential toward the demonstration of harmony in our daily lives. In this connection the account of the healing from leprosy of Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, as told in the fifth chapter of II Kings, seems quite typical of the experience which some of us pass through when beginning the study of Christian Science. This narrative shows how Naaman, after having traveled a great distance to be healed by the prophet Elisha, "was wroth" because he merely received a message bidding him "wash in Jordan seven times." Naaman expected Elisha to come out to him, to "strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper." In other words, Naaman expected Elisha to perform on his behalf a miracle, without making any demand upon the one who was seeking to be healed.

Now we may have continued in our old beliefs of sickness, sin, or poverty for many years, and we may have become firmly convinced that there is no way out of these conditions. Then we hear of Christian Science, probably have treatment from a practitioner, and expect complete healing of our ills, without any effort on our part, not understanding that we have much wrong thinking to undo and much truth to learn. Like Naaman we may not understand that "obedience to Truth" is necessary, and we perhaps resent being told to read and study the textbook, because that does not seem a sufficiently important view for the practitioner to take of our individual case. In fact, very often we are expecting something sensational to occur. We read how Naaman's servants pointed out to their master that if Elisha had told him to do some great thing he would have quickly obeyed, but that because of the very simplicity of the requirement, he was not willing to do so. Naaman finally saw this and went and dipped himself in Jordan seven times, and we read that "his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean."

The paragraph quoted from Science and Health at the beginning of this article continues, "Submission to error superinduces loss of power." The words "submission to error" seem to indicate that it is not only in yielding to suggestions of sin or sickness that we are "submitting," but even in thinking or saying unkind things of those around us, for in so doing we forget that they also are the children of God and we thereby allow human modes of thought to obscure our vision, thus losing our power for good. The writer has proved the truth of this many times. Always when the error has been recognized, met, and destroyed by "obedience to Truth," all wrong conditions have been overcome and harmony has been once more established. In each overcoming we know that we are one step nearer our realization of the kingdom of heaven, and our love and gratitude go out to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for so clearly showing us the way.

Reflection

MARION LODER WAGNER

SHOULD a little sunbeam say:
I have so much to do to-day—
So much darkness to make light,
So much glooming to make bright,
So many hearts to warm and cheer—
I am not strong enough, I fear.
I must make more light, more heat,
That I the cold world's needs may meet.
I must work to shine!

Would not the great sun gently say:
You do not have to light your ray,
Dear little beam; I give the light
To make the whole world warm and bright.
To carry it is all your care;
To reflect the light you bear.
Limitless is your supply
Which I give you from on high.
You only have to shine.

So we, the beams from God's great sun—
Life and Truth and Love as one—
Do not have to make the power
To brighten up one darkened hour;
That is given us from above,—
The light of Truth, the warmth of Love;—
Limitless is our supply.
To reflect the glory from on high

["Hell and Eternal Punishment"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 22, 1919]

Scholasticism has many things to answer for, but the human mind being what it was when scholasticism was born, the result could scarcely have been otherwise. Materiality was, of course, the portion of this mind, that was why in its medieval days it took so kindly to Aristotleism; and that was why, in its Georgian era, it was so enamored of Mr. Locke. Plato naturally was an abomination unto it, Berkeley it could not away with; and all because every form of idealism was to it a fairy tale, since the evidence of its senses argued for and demonstrated the substantiality of matter. When, consequently, it engaged in reading the Bible, how could it doubt the deduction that a man being the image and likeness of God, the original must be of the nature of the model; that the devil being a bad man, the very worst of men, must in the nature of things be black rather than white; and that the Castle of St. Angelo and the Tower of London having their prison cells, braziers, and pincers, hell must be a colossal St. Angelo or a rabbit warren of Towers. Had not Jesus declared that the wicked should be cast into hell, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched"?

The worst of the materialist is that he will always take everything literally except the spiritual fact. If he is a materialistic monk, he paints the most appalling pictures of a material hell; but if he is a materialistic philosopher, he smiles indulgently over the feeding of the multitude, and the walking upon the water. Yet Jesus did not speak of hell, but of Gehenna, and he was quoting, quite deliberately from the book of Isaiah. The prophet was, it need hardly be said, not dreaming of sheol or hades, where the material spirits of those who had died were supposed to linger on, but of the valley of Hinnom, outside of the walls of Jerusalem, where the carcasses, as he is careful to explain, of the malefactors were exposed after death: here the worms consumed them, whilst great fires were lighted for their destruction. What the prophet was engaged in saying, in his metaphysical, eastern way, was, that those who fought against Jehovah would come, in due time, to Hinnom. Jesus, picking up the prophet's words, applied them somewhat differently. Death he had explained, again and again, was merely a sleep, out of which a man would wake. What, then, would it advantage a man, if he should keep his physical body safe and sound, in this world, only to awake on another plane of existence, after death, with a mentality so besmirched that he would embark upon another and a more tormented career of misery and remorse?

This is, indeed, all there is, and it is quite enough, of future punishment, what the Greek of the New Testament describes as age-long and not eternal. Hell, then, is that present or future state which a man's own ill conduct brings down upon him. It can begin in this world as easily as in the next, since in a world of ideas, even if expressed physically, its origin is mental. "Sin," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 196 of Science and Health, "makes its own hell, and goodness its own heaven." Nor is death ever a means of escape from this hell. Death on this plane of existence is followed by death upon the next, unless the probationary stage here is taken advantage of so that, though a man may yield here to the mesmerism of "the last enemy that shall be destroyed," he shall have sufficiently improved his time to render the second death powerless over him. The writer of Revelation makes this perfectly clear when he says, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." Referring to which saying, Mrs. Eddy has written, on page 3 of "Unity of Good," "They upon whom the second death of which we read in the Apocalypse (Revelation xx:6), hath no power, are those who have obeyed God's commands, and have washed their robes white through the sufferings of the flesh and the triumphs of Spirit." The writer of Revelation could, however, see a more terrible condition of suffering than this. It was the moment when even the relief of death should be denied to a man. It is, as it were, the very last agony of hell for the man who has failed to reform, and it is recorded in the words, "and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them."

There can be, then, surely no doubt at all as to what Jesus meant by hell and by what is termed eternal punishment. He meant that the denial of Principle, itself constituted inharmony and was bound to produce inharmony in the ratio of its violence and virulence. It is thus the departure from Principle, the denial of God, that entails punishment, though, of course, it is the existence of Principle, as a thing to be departed from, which is the actual cause. Now the further a man diverges from Principle, the longer is his road back, and thus the more completely he throws himself into the arms of matter, the greater are the obstacles which have to be surmounted in the course of that return. The insidiousness of this steady and yet almost imperceptible surrender to matter, Jesus made quite clear, in the course of the Sermon on the Mount. The word "raca" had obviously become a term of reproach, in the form of an expletive, for the use of which the Sanhedrin had prescribed a penalty. Therefore, Jesus pointed out, the man who gave way to the use of it was in danger of the Council. But this man, who might fear the material penalty imposed by the Sanhedrin for indulgence in an expletive, might never give a thought to the loss of spirituality entailed by calling his brother a fool, and so indulging himself in the materiality of anger and hatred; and yet this indulgence was leading him away from Principle, and causing him to deny God by representing his brother, not as the image and likeness of Principle, but of evil. To believe, however, in anything but God is to break the First Commandment, and to take the first step into hell.

[A. O. Freel in Medford (Ore.) Mail-Tribune]

In a recent issue is the announcement of a sermon lecture to be delivered on the topic, "Mental Telepathy, Psychic Phenomena, Power of the Subjective Mind over the Body." The announcement goes on to state that the topic is one that deals with "modern cults," such as "hypnotism, faith healing, spiritualism, autosuggestion, Christian Science healing, and mind reading." It further states that "the speaker has made a special study of all these subjects."

In making this announcement there is evidently a mistake. To even the casual student of Christian Science, it is clear that Christian Science holds nothing in common with any of the subjects mentioned in the sermon topic. Christian Science is not in any way to be thought of as resembling hypnotism, faith healing, spiritualism, autosuggestion, or mind reading.

The control of mind over body is no new theory; but the trouble has been, and is now, that mankind has been perfectly satisfied to be controlled by the carnal mind, which Paul designates as "enmity against God." And this carnal mind has only the gratification of its own selfish desires in consciousness. As a result its fruits are externalized on the body in sin, sickness, and death. Christian Science does not teach the control of the body by such a miscalled mind, but does teach control by that divine Mind which, the apostle said, "was also in Christ Jesus." When this control is brought about, the body responds to its healing power, and the individual is healed morally and physically.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Butler (Pa.) Citizen]

The success of Christian Science throughout the world in healing the sick and reforming the sinful through a correct knowledge of Bible teaching has grown to such proportions as to become one of the marvels of the world. In half a century its organized churches and societies have reached a total of eighteen hundred and its membership includes many of the most intelligent people in the world. It is not surprising at all that such a substantial growth should result in occasional but needless alarm among ministers of other churches who have not studied the subject sufficiently to understand its absolutely scientific and Christian nature, or who have studied and foreseen the doom of religious dogmas, but without comprehending the fact that better things are coming. Hence there are occasional outbreaks such as appeared recently in The Citizen against what Christian Science is supposed to be, but which upon examination turns out to be only a belaboring of the critic's own erroneous concepts about a subject of which he has either a very superficial and incorrect knowledge, or which he deliberately misrepresents. In fact his presentation is so far from being a correct one regarding Christian Science that, if true, no intelligent person would accept this religion.

No one has ever successfully refuted the truth of Mrs. Eddy's teaching, and every attempt to do so has only resulted in misrepresenting the subject or in repudiating the teaching of Christ Jesus. That his teaching and Christian Science are in absolute accord, there is no doubt among those who have reached a demonstrable understanding of the subject, including clergymen. This particular critic attempts to justify his attack on the ground that if Christian Science "just confined its claims and activities to a mind-cure, which in reality," he alleges, "it is, and made no pretensions of being God-inspired and God-revealed, then the Christian pulpit would have nothing to do with it or say about it." This reverend critic may be one of those who believe that unintelligent matter and drugs were provided of God to heal the sick, while mind or intelligence was not. Nevertheless, the critic was never more mistaken in his life than when he assumed that the teachings and practice of Christian Science are based on the human mind. The Pharisees made the same mistake when accusing Jesus of casting out devils through Beelzebub. On the contrary, Christian Science accepts absolutely the Mind which Paul said was in Christ Jesus, and by manifesting that Mind, destroys the human or carnal mind, which is responsible for all evil. This results in making better Christians and better citizens, better in health and morals, with a profound gratitude and love for Bible truths, especially the teaching of Christ Jesus, and for a little understanding of his spiritual method of healing.

Whatever the theory of matter among naturalists may be to-day, the general opinion is that matter is an abstraction or manifestation of force or energy, the phenomenon of some unknown cause; that their knowledge of matter is knowledge of its properties. Of its substance, if it have any, they know nothing. The greatest thinkers of the world declare, however, that the properties of matter are mental and their cause mental. Professor Fiske, formerly a lecturer on philosophy in Harvard University, is authority for the following: "All the qualities of matter are what the mind makes them, and have no existence as such apart from the mind." He also says, "Apart from consciousness, there are no such things as color, form, position, or hardness, and there is no such thing as matter." An extract from a textbook on physics, by Henderson and Woodhull of Columbia University, has the following: "Matter makes itself known to us by the testimony of the senses. . . . We see, hear, smell, taste, touch, in our consciousness only. We cannot assert, therefore, that matter exists apart from this consciousness."

In view of such high authority, and of many others that might be mentioned, to the effect that matter is mental in origin and nature, the critic does nothing but throw discredit upon his own sincerity or his own intelligence, when he attempts to ridicule Mrs. Eddy's statement (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 27), that a stone "is a small manifestation of Mind, a type of spiritual substance." If her further statement, "Take away the mortal sense of substance, and the stone itself would disappear, only to reappear in the spiritual sense thereof," conveys no intelligence to him, it is quite safe to conclude that he does not at all understand the Scriptural passage, "He uttered his voice, the earth melted," nor comprehend the vision of John, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." Material belief is a positive hindrance to spiritual understanding.

The spiritual law discovered by Mrs. Eddy led her far beyond the conclusions of the natural scientists, and revealed to her that the ever changing phenomena of matter or energy cannot be the product of a cause that is without variableness or "shadow of turning." She learned that matter is a human concept, and not a creation of God; that God's creation consists of spiritual ideas, which forever reflect the intelligence of their creator; that these ideas constitute spiritual consciousness, man made in the image and likeness of God; and that there is no real intelligence nor existence separate and apart from such ideas and such a spiritual consciousness, that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

"Matter has no life," wrote Mrs. Eddy, "hence it has no real existence. Mind is immortal" (Science and Health, p. 584). Christian Science agrees with the physical scientists' views that matter is an expression of thought, but there the agreement ceases, for the former holds that matter is an expression of wrong thought. No wonder that the longer scientists and physicists delve in matter, the less stability they find about it; for it has no stable quality. Therefore again wrote Mrs. Eddy, in her clear-cut fashion, on page 462 of Science and Health: "Are thoughts divine or human? That is the important question. This branch of study is indispensable to the excision of error. . . . The Christian Scientist, through understanding mental anatomy, discerns and deals with the real cause of disease."

The fact is that the whole material universe, with all its sin, sickness, and death, is the manifestation of wrong thinking, which has deceived the people for ages. The world will some day acknowledge the never ending debt of gratitude which it owes to Mrs. Eddy for the discovery of this fact. Without such knowledge the commands of Christ Jesus to his followers to heal the sick, will never be obeyed. In view of the critic's contention for the reality of matter, it is not surprising that he should also contend for the reality of sin, sickness, and death, unaware that thereby he becomes a partner in the destructive work which such beliefs accomplish. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," and also, "Whosoever . . . believeth in me shall never die. . . ." What, it may be asked, would death be to such believers? What was death to Enoch, whom God took, or Elijah, who was translated? There is no hope whatever of any one being translated by the material doctrine of our critic.

Another great folly committed by the critic is his attack on Christian Science regarding the atonement. "The Christian Scientists," he says, "do not believe in the atonement, if they believe what Mrs. Eddy says." I am reminded by this of a theologian who asserted that only about seven people out of seven hundred agree on the doctrine of atonement. There may be a very significant reason why, out of many opinions on the subject, the Christian Science view and acceptance of the atonement is attacked. In her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy has written a chapter on the subject, entitled "Atonement and Eucharist," in which she clears up the subject; and it will not be a happy time for dogmatic theology when the people become awake to the awful delusion which it has visited upon them in having them believe that the death of Jesus, which occurred nearly two thousand years ago, and which has not now nor heretofore saved them from sin, sickness, and death, can save them in a hereafter which the theologians know nothing about. "Now is the day of salvation," said Paul, and he healed the sick and raised the dead. A theology which postpones the day of salvation from sin, sickness, and death until some uncertain future time, can give no assurance of such salvation at all.

If the people were taught to understand that only by overcoming sin and material beliefs can they escape the consequences thereof, and how they can do so, they would soon become better and healthier citizens. They will never succeed in doing this wholly by believing in the reality of evil, for so long as that belief lasts they will reap its evil consequences. They must learn to understand the absolute fact of the infinity of God and His goodness, and the unreality of all that God did not create.

Return unto thy Rest

Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. For thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling.—Psalms 116:7, 8.

ADELA V. SCRIMGEOUR

RETURN unto thy rest. At last, my soul,
War's clamors cease, the path of duty run;
The night is past, and now the rising sun
Smiles on thy rest.

Return unto thy rest; from that deep sleep
Which fear calls death, God hath delivered thee.
Not weak and faint, but upright, strong, and free,
Take thou thy rest.

Return unto thy rest, O soul, in peace,
And gaze not backward at the weary years.
Thou hast delivered mine eyes, O God, from tears;
Sweet is my rest.

Return unto thy rest; I see no more
The rock-strewn way where faltering footsteps trod;
My feet from falling thou hast held, O God.
Safe is my rest.

Return unto thy rest. The din of war
Grows faint and dies away, and that new birth
In which the meek in heart possess the earth
Dawns o'er thy rest.

Philadelphia

When Attalus II, King of Pergamos, was founding the famous city which he intended to be the seat of Græco-Asian culture in Lydia, indeed in Asia, he gave it the name of Philadelphia, meaning love of the brethren, in token of the unshaken loyalty and affection of the king for his own brother. From that day Philadelphia became, as it were, a missionary city. From it went forth every effort to spread the civilization of Hellas throughout Asia; and here, appropriately enough, was established one of the seven churches of Asia to which were sent the scrolls of Revelation, for distribution amongst the Christian communities of the continent.

The example set by the pagan king should have been at least an inspiration to Christendom; Christendom should have accepted the missionary spirit of the city, and should have carried the torch of brotherly love throughout the world. Some eighteen centuries passed, and the colonists of Pennsylvania, which took its name from William Penn, the friend and fellow worker of the Quaker, George Fox, founded in the New World a new city of Philadelphia. Like its ancient prototype, it was to be the City of Brotherly Love. Had not Penn promised this love to the red men, under the famous tree at Shakamaxon? In the end Philadelphia became very much what the Philadelphia in the Cogamis Valley had become centuries before it, a city of the slave trade. The ideals of the Quakers had petered out in the language of the worship of divus Cæsar. The story, extending over the whole of the Christian era and of the century and a half before it, affords an example of the frailty of humanity, and of the futility of human ideals. What the world should have learned from the experience is a doubt as to its own definition of love, to say nothing of the tragedy of its own accomplishment. But, as long as the world attributes to love a sensuous definition, so long will it fail to demonstrate the teaching of the Founder of the Christian religion, when he declared, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Now it has been pointed out often enough in the Christian Science periodicals, that the word translated life, used by Christ Jesus on this occasion, is not the ordinary word for life, but the word commonly translated soul; and that, moreover, this word soul meant the veriest animal instinct of existence, that which separates animate from what it is usual to describe as inanimate matter. Clearly, then, what Jesus was advising his followers to do was to exhibit to their friends not the carnal affection of the old dispensation, but that spiritual understanding of love, derived from a metaphysical knowledge of Principle. Only the man who surrenders his belief of life in matter to an understanding of Life as Principle, as Love itself, can ever hope to understand what the writer of the epistles of John meant when he said, "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love;" much less what Jesus himself meant when he told Nicodemus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit." Yet the statements contain exactly the same truth: only as a man lays down his animality for his friends, does he put off the old man with his lusts, in other words, does he deny that which is born of the flesh; and the only way in which he can realize that which is born of the Spirit is as he learns to love, in other words, as he puts on the new man, which is his understanding that God, Spirit, is Love.

The writer of the fourth gospel had grasped very clearly what Christ Jesus meant when he wrote, in the exordium to that gospel, "But as many as received him [the Christ], to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God [Love]." Jesus knew that there was no animal instinct in real love, and that this being the case, brotherly love swept into its procession all the sons and daughters of God. On that day when, in the press around him as he taught, they said unto him that his mother and his brethren sought him but could not reach him because of the crowd, he turned, and "answered and said unto them, My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it." Not those born of the blood, or of the flesh, or of the will of man, but those whose understanding of Principle, of Love, brought them all into the atonement, into that at-one-ment in their understanding of Principle, which enabled them not merely to understand the truth when it was spoken to them, but to prove their understanding through demonstration.

In three lines, on page 275 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy sums up the teaching of Jesus, in one of the deepest and yet most luminous passages in all her writings. "The starting-point of divine Science," she writes there, "is that God, Spirit, is All-in-all, and that there is no other might nor Mind,—that God is Love, and therefore He is divine Principle." The man in the street, accustomed to regard love not as the Founder of the Christian religion taught it to be, but as the poets and the writers of romance, and for that matter not a few of the philosophers, have pictured it, finds Mrs. Eddy's words abstract and even cold. Such a man is of those passions which Tennyson painted in his picture of Guinevere. To assure himself of love, he too must have the warmth and color inherent in matter. But that was not what Jesus taught, nor was it thus that John wrote of love. God, Jesus told the woman of Samaria, is Spirit; God, John wrote, is Love; and that, Jesus told Nicodemus, which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Love, therefore, which is born of the Spirit, which is born of God or Principle, is that love which is born of Love, which binds together in true unity the brotherhood of the world.

Could any man show greater love to his friends than to destroy his own animality sufficiently to walk in the footsteps of Jesus the Christ, and so to be enabled to overcome for humanity, sorrow, and sickness, and sin? And could any man, whilst believing in the reality of matter, hope to overcome the ills of the flesh and the sins of the human mind, which are inherent in a belief in matter? Therefore man's greatest humanity to man, to say nothing of his love for man, is so to live as to destroy his own animal propensities in the effort to demonstrate a true understanding of Love. But he will never do this, so long as he regards his brother as a sinner, and imagines that brotherly love consists in an insistence on this. "Jesus," Mrs. Eddy writes, on pages 476 and 477 of Science and Health, "beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." Only in the proportion in which humanity lives up to this saying of Mrs. Eddy's, will it be found possible for it to demonstrate brotherly love in the flesh, and to build those cities of Philadelphia which are really cities of God.

FREDERICK DIXON.

Before the Whole World

IN many a case Christ Jesus proved, before the very eyes of the multitude, the power of God to heal. "When he was come down from the mountain," Matthew tells us, for instance, "great multitudes followed him. And, behold, there came a leper and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed. And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man; but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them." Clearly this healing, which was instantaneous, was so thorough that it could satisfy the most skeptical. Though there was no reason for exhibiting it ostentatiously—and the best way is always to go forward quietly—the healing was, like all true healing, complete according to any possible standard, as any one who might care to investigate could ascertain. "When the multitudes saw it," we are told in connection with the healing of the one sick of the palsy, "they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men."

Thus each one who is healed by the understanding of Truth should go quietly about his business, rejoicing that Principle maintains completely right action. There is, however, nothing secret about the Principle and effective practice of true healing. One must not be in the slightest afraid of publicity, if it seems to come. The most searching scrutiny turned upon Christian Science can find only good as the reality. Of course the flamboyant spreading broadcast of unassimilated statements is ridiculous. So, too, is the telling of one's experience before one has learned in any degree what an overturning the real healing has involved and accomplished. Still the fact remains, that should any one, whether friendly or apparently antagonistic, discern the healing process that has been going on, there is no danger whatever to any one in such a discovery. Instead of fearing or regretting, one must rejoice that divine intelligence takes entire care of its activity. Even the onlooker who jeers will soon learn humility and appreciation before the demonstrated goodness of God.

Throughout her experience Mrs. Eddy proved this. While the world watched with open scorn and with malicious desire for the defeat of her work, she continued with patient consecration her daily proving that the divine Mind heals all manner of wrong conditions. As she declared in her Message for 1901 (p. 28), "Sacred history shows that those who have followed exclusively Christ's teaching, have been scourged in synagogues and persecuted from city to city. But this is no cause for not following it; and my only apology for trying to follow it is that I love Christ more than all the world, and my demonstration of Christian Science in healing has proven to me beyond a doubt that Christ, Truth, is indeed the way of salvation from all that worketh or maketh a lie." So she found to her joy that activity in accordance with Principle cannot really be attacked by any supposition of trouble, for divine intelligence with its manifestation forever resists any such supposititious attacks as fully as the light resists the darkness.

In the same way, sooner or later, every student of Christian Science must know that the one infinite consciousness and its idea is and always has been wholly protected from any supposition of hatred denying the efficacy of right practice. Those who served in the war frequently had to prove in barracks or even hospitals that reliance upon the divine Mind alone means the continuance of right action of every sort. While some of their companions were perhaps watching and wishing for the failure of Christian Science, they had to rejoice in the spiritual establishment of freedom on the basis of the divine Mind and what it knows. Before the persistent scoffing of the most intolerant, the many have demonstrated that Principle does succeed in preserving its whole expression. If Christian Science could not heal in any of these trying circumstances, it would be of little avail. As a matter of fact, however, the worst that could ever even seemingly be devised by the hypothetical mortal mind as a suggestion to obstruct or nullify truly spiritual healing has never hindered in the slightest the veritable operation of Principle. The divine consciousness and its joyous activity goes on ceaselessly, quite apart from any malicious denials of its all-inclusiveness.

Now that the general public has come to the place where it is tired of secret treaties or subterranean machinations of any kind, all simply must learn to turn together openly and with the utmost freedom to divine intelligence. Cooperation in relying on Principle is the only genuine democracy. To endure at all, it must be able to endure in spite of whatever doubts may try to arise. To God there is just one harmonious activity. To the whole world, therefore, this concord must, in the last analysis, be the only actuality. Idea in absolute accord with the one creative Mind is spiritually whole and holy. It includes no destructive subtleties whatever. This truth Christian Science reveals with full assurance. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 2 of her Message for 1902: "God speed the right! The wise builders will build on the stone at the head of the corner; and so Christian Science, the little leaven hid in three measures of meal,—ethics, medicine, and religion,—is rapidly fermenting, and enlightening the world with the glory of untrammeled truth." Before the truth that divine Love alone can produce any really tangible and permanent action, all the illusory beliefs of the world have to vanish. To know this is always a glorious privilege.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

Melbourne, Australia.—We had arranged for our lectures to be held on November 15, 16, and 17, but owing to the Transcontinental Railway strike, Dr. Hubbard was unable to proceed to Western Australia on the day arranged. In order that he might have an opportunity of going later, if the strike were settled, we changed our dates to a week earlier, leaving very little time for the ordinary advertising. In spite of this we had splendid audiences, and so greatly were the three lectures appreciated, that we had many requests to have another, which we did on the following Sunday afternoon, as Dr. Hubbard was still unable to go to the West. We had only four days to advertise and make the necessary arrangements, but we had only fifty people less than the previous Sunday; that is to say, we had an audience of fourteen hundred. We feel the lectures have been a tremendous help to the community and we are grateful that we have been able to give them such a feast.

Anaheim, Calif.—Dedication services were held by First Church of Christ, Scientist, Sunday, January 18.

In January, 1909, a few who were interested in Christian Science met in a private home. The meetings continued to grow numerically and a Christian Science Society was organized August 1, 1909. In April, 1910, the Opera House was rented for Sunday services and testimony meetings. In April, 1911, the lots on which the building now stands were purchased, a building committee was formed, and plans for a building adopted. The first church services were held in the building in November, 1911. On February 20, 1919, it was voted to organize as First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Anaheim, and the charter was received June 24, 1919.

The Lectures

Boston, Mass. (The Mother Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

Remarks upon Christian Science carry conviction in the measure that they are founded upon actual experience and demonstration. Mr. Lathrop has been a Christian Science practitioner for many years. As such he has had an interesting and helpful career in healing the sick and saving sinners. Our lecturers find that voicing the word does not restrict their healing work, but on the contrary broadens it. This is in accord with the promise made by Jesus to his disciples when sending them forth to preach and heal. He was so sure that the utterance of truth could not fail to have a healing and regenerative result that he told them that even when their word seemed to be rejected, it had not been uttered in vain. His exact words were, "Notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Those words carry a great assurance to the seeker after Truth, and they encourage such a one to be attentive and expectant in hearing and understanding a Christian Science lecture.—The Christian Science Monitor.

Chicago, Ill. (Twelfth Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by William Roe Conner, who said in part:—

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 98), says: "The prophet of to-day beholds in the mental horizon the signs of these times, the reappearance of the Christianity which heals the sick and destroys error, and no other sign shall be given." There are in existence to-day nearly two thousand Christian Science churches to which there journey each Wednesday evening multitudes who were lame, sick, or burdened with sin, but who, figuratively speaking, leaping and walking, many for the first time in years, rejoice in the opportunity to praise God. Likewise, thousands of testimonies of healing and reformation appearing in the several Christian Science periodicals, published weekly and monthly, attest the healing efficacy of this religion of Love. These, surely, are "the signs of these times."

Jefferson City, Mo. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Alice S. Eubanks, who said in part:—

There is a message from God, a message bringing "good tidings of good." Jesus of Nazareth it was that brought this message of spiritual light or understanding of God, to a darkened, material world,—this message that brings hope to the hopeless, joy to the sorrowing, and healeth all our diseases.

Because of material worship the thought of following ages drifted so far away from God, that the spiritual light grew dim, and divine healing was almost lost. But again the spiritual light is flooding the world, again the power of God is known and demonstrated in the destruction of sin and the healing of disease through the Science of Christianity, or Christian Science, as discovered and revealed to the world by Mary Baker Eddy.—The Capital News.

New York, N. Y. (Sixth Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Miss Minnie C. Vesey, who said in part:—

Out of the depths of its tortured dream of misery and chaos, despairing humanity everywhere is crying out for relief from its inexpressible woe. Is it not true that the only solution of its problem would be the practice of the Golden Rule? You answer, "Yes, perhaps; but in this material age that is too chimerical, too transcendental; it is impossible." It is not impossible—on the other hand, it is being proved every day that it is possible.

Some fifty years ago a gentle, unselfed woman, through her purity of living, found out just how the commandments of Jesus could be followed. She learned that the statements of the Bible that God made man in His image and likeness and that God is Love, are demonstrably true. This woman was Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and on page 225 of her wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she says, "Love is the liberator." Thousands of her followers all over the globe to-day are proving that a working knowledge of this Love can still all turmoil, can heal all sickness, sorrow, and sin. Christian Science is a religion of Love.

DUBLIN, IRELAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Capt. Coote, who said in part:—

Christ Jesus said: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." What the world needs to-day is rest. Nothing new is happening; it is the old, old trouble—human unrest; and it is this trouble that Jesus taught how to cure. This intensely practical teaching of Jesus has gradually become confused by people, until it is generally considered to be a beautiful ideal, but quite incapable of practical application to the needs of to-day. The people of nineteen hundred years ago thought just the same thing, until they saw the proofs given by Christ Jesus of the power of God to give rest,—rest from sin, from sickness, and from all human troubles. Christian Science teaches us that this rest is obtainable just the same to-day as it was when Jesus was in the world, and that we are able to do what he ordered us to do, just so far as we understand and apply his teaching.—The Irish Weekly Mail.

WINCHESTER, KY. (Society).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Lillian C. Duty, who said in part:—

I think we will all agree that the goal of human endeavor is happiness. Now we know that happiness cannot exist where sickness, sorrow, poverty, and the results of sin are present. For ages humanity has been trying to eliminate these miserable experiences from life, but the efforts to do so have been mainly along material lines. Now Christian Science comes with an absolute reversal of the idea that happiness or salvation can be obtained through material means. It comes proclaiming the omnipotence of Mind, or Spirit, God. In the Bible we are told to let that Mind be in us "which was also in Christ Jesus," and in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, on page 131 is found this statement, "The central fact of the Bible is the superiority of spiritual over physical power." Also on page 111 of this same book we read, "The Principle of divine metaphysics is God; the practice of divine metaphysics is the utilization of the power of Truth over error."

Testimonies of Healing

With a deep sense of gratitude for Christian Science and what it has done for me, I send this testimony. I feel as if all I have of health and joy I owe to the proving of its truth. I first became interested in Christian Science in July of 1914, by attending church one Sunday with my brother-in-law, who was a Christian Scientist and was paying us a visit. In November, 1915, I was overcome with severe pains in my head and eyes, followed with dizziness. After several of these attacks I consulted a physician. He prescribed electrical treatments, also gave me some medicine to take. This was in December. I made arrangements for electrical treatments daily and commenced taking the medicine. Very shortly afterwards I had the most severe attack I had yet had. I had lost some faith in material means helping me, and made up my mind to try Christian Science, but at the same time holding on with one hand to materia medica. Knowing a practitioner in our town I called her up, and she went to work for me. I continued looking after my business until after the holidays, when my condition was so much worse I remained at my home and left my business in charge of my son. The first demonstration I had of the truth was shortly after this. I was instantly healed of smoking, through this practitioner's help. I had been an inveterate smoker for forty years, and I was relieved of the desire for it, and did not try it again for nearly a year, when I found I had lost all desire for it. I have not smoked since or wanted to. This was in January, 1916. February, 1916, I went to Florida as I thought a change might help me, as I was still hanging on to materia medica. I returned in March, not improved to any noticeable extent, but continued Christian Science treatments until May of that year. I then changed to materia medica, when my troubles began and were pronounced arteriosclerosis by the physicians. I continued material treatments until January 31, 1917, trying everything recommended. Finally I was informed that mine was one of the incurable diseases. Realizing then that God was my only help, I turned to Him and wrote to a practitioner in a distant city, and in fifteen days I was at my place of business, and have been in charge of it ever since. I am entirely cured of the so-called incurable disease, and I have gained twenty pounds in weight. I am indeed very grateful for this healing and for many other blessings that come into my daily life.—D. I. Willard, Bellefonte, Penn.

We became acquainted with Christian Science through my eldest brother. In the fall of 1916 he was very ill and compelled to lie in bed for weeks. At the same time his wife was in a hospital, suffering severely. My brother was constantly becoming worse, and he believed death was near. One day a friend here in Germany sent him a copy of Der Herold. He read it and found the name and address of a practitioner, to whom he immediately turned in his great distress, and she visited and comforted him. When she returned to work further for him in Christian Science, he was already up; however, he was still afraid to go out on the street. That evening the practitioner asked him to accompany her to a reading room. He replied that this would be impossible as he could not walk, and to travel by train would cause him to faint. After it was firmly and lovingly explained to him that "with God all things are possible," he prepared to go, although still unbelieving and timid. While they were waiting for the train my brother was suddenly freed from all sense of fear. From that time on he improved daily. The practitioner also worked for his wife, and she also became well. Soon afterwards my brother was offered an excellent position on an estate, where he is now living in health and contentment with his family. Before his departure I was suffering severely from a knee wound which did not seem to become any better. My brother wrote to the practitioner from Posen, requesting her to work for me. I did the best I could myself, studying the textbook and discarding all medicines formerly used. My knee was almost instantly healed, and when the practitioner came to visit me I was just returning from a walk. Since we have been connected with Christian Science much good has come to us. We have been helped wonderfully financially. All sorts of sickness have been overcome, wretched circumstances have begun to become lighter, and inharmony is gradually changing into harmony. The Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, teaches us through her writings to look confidently into the future, and she explains that in the measure in which we possess trust in God, He will reveal His love.

We thank God for all the blessings He has bestowed upon us through Christian Science.

(Miss) Martha Sievers, Hamburg, Germany.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science—indeed I could not live without it. I did not turn to it for physical healing, but through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, together with the Bible, and the help of a practitioner, I have been healed physically and mentally. Bowel trouble, headaches which lasted for several weeks, and sleeplessness, have all been overcome. I am thankful for the help received when our son was born. The Christian Science periodicals are a great source of help, strength, and education, and I am thankful for the copies sent to me by friends. My earnest desire is to learn more of this healing truth given to us by that noble woman, Mrs. Eddy, and to follow God more closely day by day. I hope sometime to be worthy of church membership and to help others to this healing truth.

(Mrs.) Jolanda Thompson, Grafton, N. Dak.

I feel a great impelling desire to add my testimony to the thousands which appear in our periodicals, telling of an experience that I recently passed through which proved unmistakably the operation of Truth. I had passed through a series of domestic problems each one of which seemed to add a greater burden, until I found myself in the place where I had a large summer home to look after with no help, my two little girls aged two and five and a half to care for, while my mother was in bed, seemingly unable to help herself, under a physician's care. I was able to do things that I had never done before, upheld and sustained by Truth. One day I began to experience severe pain and pressure which made it difficult for me to stand and walk without suffering. I phoned to a practitioner and was treated absently, but the pain seemingly increased each day, although I said nothing about it to my mother and was able to keep the semblance of suffering from her notice; and it did not keep me from my daily duties, which were attended to the same as usual. When I awoke one morning it seemed almost impossible to arise; I did my mental work first and then arose and was able to do the physical work necessary. Later in the day while I was on my feet, something dropped, and stooping to pick it up, I realized that I was free—free from pain and pressure. What I picked up was a stone, a jagged, hard substance which had passed from me. When the physician came to the house and saw it, he told my husband that he had never seen so large a stone pass without a surgical operation. Another physician who inquired into the case said it was almost an impossibility. However, in Science we know that nothing is impossible to God. Through this experience my mother turned to Science for treatment and was up and dressed and downstairs within the week, while materia medica had promised nothing less than six to eight weeks in bed, with medicine and material appliances continually. The following week I was healed of a serious bite from a green house fly, in two absent treatments. These two experiences have been a wonderful, uplifting help to me, and have given me a firmer foothold in the only truth there is, the understanding of man's relation to God and the establishment of that relation which brings dominion and peace.

I am very grateful for Christian Science and all that it has done for me. I have had many wonderful proofs; everything has become so beautiful to me, since I began the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I came to the United States six years ago and went through much discouragement and trouble. For over a year I talked to hardly anybody except my little boy; and almost forgot what a smile was. I was separated from my family by a misunderstanding and could not see anything but darkness and fear. Then a friend told me about Christian Science. I went to a practitioner for help, and after I got some understanding of that wonderful truth everything turned to light, happiness, and peace. My sister and brother whom I had not heard from in several years, turned back to me, and I received a letter from my father saying that he was going to a practitioner in Copenhagen, Denmark, for treatment.

Through all this wonderful proof that is coming to me I can see clearly that I have found something valuable, God's love, and I am very grateful to know that He is Love and everywhere; that He supplies all that we need. I have a big opportunity in my work, work I never knew I could do before. My little boy is three years old and I see him once a week. One day I told him what God is and next time I came he said, "Mamma, God is Love; God loves me." Before that I thought I was separated from him, but since then I have known we are not really separated, we are close together. I am very, very grateful to God for His divine love every day, to Jesus our Way-shower, and also to Mrs. Eddy, who discovered this beautiful truth.

(Mrs.) Anna Miller, Chicago, Ill.

Christian Science is indeed the Comforter in all times of distress, and I am sure all those of us who are receiving its daily blessings are so grateful that in this hour of seeming strife it enables us to look beyond the dark clouds and see the light of Truth ever shining, and God ever with us.

I have been healed of many diseases, such as stomach trouble, diphtheria, poor eyesight, and many other troubles. Fear and self have been overcome to a great extent, but I am most grateful for the knowledge of God as Love, and for having learned to know man's relation to Him as perfect idea through our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," written by our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who so unselfishly taught us how to put the Word of God to practical use in our daily lives.

I am happy to know we are overcoming evil and striving to know more of good. Our Leader says (Miscellany, p. 210), "Keep your minds so filled with Truth and Love, that sin, disease, and death cannot enter them." I find all our literature a constant help, and The Christian Science Monitor a very helpful daily newspaper. I am thankful for all the blessings, and for the little I understand of Christian Science.

(Mrs.) Florence Conabeer, New York, N. Y.

I feel a deep sense of gratitude for the good which I have received through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and of the Bible as interpreted by her. I had been taking medicines for over eighteen years for a chronic stomach trouble, and now for seven years the healing truth as revealed in Christian Science has been my only help. It has enabled me to overcome nervousness, misery, and fear. Christian Science was not by any means easy for me to understand, and many times have I been tempted with discouragement; but I kept on reading, and finally the light came, and now I know that nothing is impossible in Christian Science and hope I shall some day be able to help others. While I am grateful for the physical help, yet the spiritual uplift that has come to me through this study, means more to me than words can express. I am truly thankful to God for the revelation of this truth, and my desire is so to live it that others may know it by its fruits.

(Mrs.) C. M. Seymour, Laredo, Texas.

Just a little testimony from one who is a member of The Mother Church, relative to the power of Truth to destroy error quickly and also to the mental source of contagion. In this town where nearly everybody had a certain epidemic we, my family and I, were not afraid of it, but did not put forth much mental effort to prevent it; consequently one evening, after a hard day's work, the symptoms came on me very suddenly. My first thought was, that I must go at once to bed and be sick; my next was, What am I trying to be a Christian Scientist for? I laughed, and declared the truth, knowing that disease was not legitimate, was not a law of Him who said, "Let there be light." At once I was free from the distressing symptoms, and very grateful for the result of the above mandate,—"And there was light." For some years we have been having our services in a private dwelling, as we are not many, but we know that Truth is ever at work and the Word never returns unto God void.—William G. Ziesler, Buchtel, Ohio.

Having had many proofs of the power of divine Love to heal, I gladly give grateful acknowledgment through the columns of the Sentinel. It is now about thirteen years since I heard of Christian Science through the healing of a relative of stomach trouble. The textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy was lent to me, and I was persuaded to read it. I devoured the book and the uplift was so great that it seemed my trials and cares were all at an end. But I found that in trying to apply what I had read to my daily needs, I must begin with the simplest problems, learning "precept upon precept; line upon line." Of the many healings we have experienced, I will mention but a few. Six years ago my twelve-year-old daughter became ill with sore throat and fever and after a few days, an eruption appearing, we thought it best to call in a physician to diagnose the case. He pronounced it scarlet fever, but knowing we were Christian Scientists, did not offer to leave any medicine. Truth was triumphant, and with the loving help of a practitioner the child made a speedy recovery and not one of the other children became victims of the disease. The suggestion of bad aftereffects was also met and overcome. Another daughter was afflicted with rheumatism and for two days was unable to move herself, but after one week's treatment she was up and walking in the house, and in a few more days was out of doors, taking long walks, all trace of the disease having vanished. There were similar cases in the neighborhood where the patients, using material means, did not recover for nearly two months. Other ills which have yielded to the power of Truth are a malignant sore, tonsillitis, and influenza. For all these benefits, I am very grateful, but far above these is the right understanding I have gained of God and of man in His image. Am also thankful for the writings of Mrs. Eddy, for our periodicals, lectures, and for recent class instruction. My desire is to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth and to lose no opportunity to demonstrate this knowledge in the casting out of evil.

Mrs. William G. Ziesler, Buchtel, Ohio.

Loving gratitude for the instantaneous healing which came to me about five years ago causes me to add my testimony to the many which will help others. For several years I had a constant intense pain and, like those who know not the truth, was always filled with fear. I was also a most miserably nervous woman. While for years Christian Science was brought before me, yet I never for a moment considered it. However, my husband prevailed upon me to take it up. When the soil was ready for the seed, I went to a practitioner for help. It was lovingly given. My healing was instantaneous. It took away all my nervousness and pain and a chronic twice yearly attack of tonsillitis. I have had many wonderful healings since; there have also been healings in my immediate family. My gratitude is first to God, then to Mrs. Eddy, who opened the way for us all to the blessed revelations of Christian Science.

Mrs. Joseph Cornfield, Detroit, Mich.

Twenty-five years ago my husband passed on. I was left with a year-old daughter, and at that time was too ill to be taken to our old home. My brother brought us to our sister's home, where we lived for two years. I had gone back to teaching, but suffered daily from weakness, faintness, and backache. I had no desire to live and could not see how I could face the future even for my child. The winters were a dread and full of suffering. When my little girl was three I found a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." I read almost all of my time when out of school. It seemed to me too much for any woman to dare to claim, and I looked up every Bible passage quoted by Mrs. Eddy. Whole books of the New Testament were fairly devoured. My great fear was that it was too good to be true.

In a few months my eyes became so much better that things which before had seemed distant looked near. I took off the glasses I had worn for seventeen years and which had lately been ground especially for me. In one treatment I was healed of terrible pains from what was pronounced organic valvular heart trouble. I ceased to have tonsillitis and pleurisy. I began housekeeping as well as teaching, and was better in many ways. My daughter ceased to need medicine three times a day for indigestion, and has only been ill twice since we came into Science, excepting very brief attacks that were over in a night.

We joined a happy, growing church, and I learned to rejoice and in a great measure was healed of sorrow and entirely healed of a desire to die. We have learned to help each other to some extent, and have been allowed to be the channel for helping some friends. I can think of no greater joy than to live so that we may be ready to give this help to others. Christian Science has changed a life of despair into one of joy and gratitude. I have taught in the city schools continuously twenty-five years, and feel that every day has been a demonstration of the power of Christian Science to strengthen, guide, and heal.

(Mrs.) Flora R. Barton, Minneapolis, Minn.

Christian Science has brought peace and harmony into our home, and I feel it is my duty and also a privilege to give this testimony of the efficacy of Christian Science to heal instantaneously.

On December 30, 1919, our little girl four years of age was standing near the sidewalk, watching some boys playing hockey. A baker's wagon was standing near by and the puck hit the horse's head and it took fright and backed up the wagon, knocking our little girl down on her face. The back wheel went over her leg. She was picked up quickly and brought into the house to me. She was unable to stand and was suffering with severe shock, her face was very much swollen and bruised, and she was cut near her nose. I am very grateful for the understanding I had of the allness of God and the power of good in a time of need, for I had no fear and was calm and able to apply the truth as taught in Christian Science. My husband thought I had better telephone to the practitioner and ask him to help our little girl. Whilst I was telephoning my husband undressed her and found the marks of the wheel on her leg near the thigh. I called the practitioner about noon and at one o'clock the child got out of her bed and walked into the kitchen and said, "Mamma, I am all better." Every discordant condition had disappeared, she was herself again except for a mark near her nose, and this disappeared next day.

I myself have been healed of a severe attack of quinsy in three treatments and, through the help of the practitioner giving me a clearer knowledge of God, I have been able to overcome corns and a large bunion on my left foot. My toes were overlapping each other, which caused them to fester, and I would suffer intense pain at times; but they are now straight. I find when we try to be honest, sincere, and desirous to know and understand more about God and His goodness, we are shown the way by the teachings of Christian Science. My one desire is to know more of this great truth that makes us free.

I am indeed grateful to God, and to Mrs. Eddy who has been so patient, loving, and unselfish in giving to the world this "pearl of great price."

(Mrs.) Agnes E. Harling, Montreal, Canada.

When I became interested in Christian Science I was suffering from the claim of weak eyes and had worn glasses for over two years. When I was a small child my parents were advised by an eye specialist to put glasses on me as my eyes were in bad condition, and at times I was compelled to miss school, but not until I was grown and began doing office work as stenographer, did I submit to the use of glasses. Frequently I had severe headache, believed to be caused by my eyes, and while suffering with one of these headaches, I asked for a treatment by a practitioner, in whose home I was visiting, and the pain left me instantly. That was my first experience with Christian Science. A few days later I asked this practitioner to give me a treatment for my eyes, which she did, and I put away my glasses and have never worn them since, although I have done office and book work continuously since that time, and for the past twelve years.

I was troubled with a weakness that caused pain in my back most of the time, and more than once broke down under this claim. At one time I was so helpless I could neither raise my head nor turn myself in bed, and was able to do scarcely anything for many months. I have been entirely freed from this weakness and pain by the help of the same practitioner, with only a few absent treatments. I now work from ten to fourteen hours a day and have missed only one day through physical disability, from my daily work, in the past four or five years.

Many other discords have been overcome through the study of Christian Science and I am grateful to the practitioner who so lovingly and patiently helped me to rise above the claims of mortal belief when my understanding of Christian Science was not sufficient to overcome these claims, and I am thankful to God for His omnipotent and omnipresent love, and to Mrs. Eddy for her untiring effort in presenting this Science to the world.

(Miss) Metta M. Asper, Downs, Kan.

During my first week's reading of Science and Health I gained such a concept of Spirit that I knew I did not have to look through matter to see and so laid away my glasses forever, after having worn them ten years. I have also been healed of chronic bowel trouble. When our baby was seven months old she seemed quite ill, so we asked for treatment from a practitioner. For four days the child had every symptom of whooping cough, but ten days after the first discordant condition was manifested she was entirely healed.

I have had many other proofs of God's loving, watchful care, and while grateful for the physical healings I am more grateful for the fact that it has been revealed to me through Christian Science that we have an unfailing source of help to turn to always. I am so grateful that this truth, which is the light that lighteth the world, has come to me.

(Mrs.) Edith Warner Burnside, Sacramento, Calif.

The understanding of Christian Science, however small the knowledge may be, brings to me a perfect sense of peace and rest. I have experienced several healings of sorrow during the last eighteen months: the losing of four brothers in the war and the passing on of my dear husband seemed to me a great test. I prayed humbly and earnestly to seek fresh strength and courage from an all-wise, loving Father-Mother God, the great Healer of all sorrow; and the need was met. There were moments when the human self cried that I should not see them again; then there came a comforting thought that helped me very much,—that it is wrong to think of those who have passed on as dead; in doing so we are hindering instead of helping their demonstration that Life is eternal. Then I felt very peaceful and happy about them, and I know that in raising our thoughts higher, we can learn to look beyond the stifling veil of sense and see "the wide horizon's grander view, the sense of Life that knows no death." Clinging to Christ, Truth, I was able to gain a clearer realization of the fact that God is good.

I would also like to tell of a healing that I had quite recently. One morning while at work I got my right foot fixed between a lift and the siding, the lift going about two yards before I managed to stop it. I found on getting my foot out, that the upper part of my shoe had been torn away, also I had three badly crushed toes and a sprained ankle. Keeping my presence of mind, I was able to declare the truth of God's allness, and that no accident could happen to God's spiritual ideas. I was able to keep on with my work as usual. I am very grateful to say I experienced no pain in the foot whatever but just a little discomfort from the stiffness and swelling. In about a week the foot was completely healed. There was not a moment that I was kept from doing all that was required of me. I feel so very grateful to God for the many blessings which have come to me and for all that I have been able to overcome through the slight understanding I have gained through the teachings of Christian Science, and I thank the kind friends for their loving, patient encouragement in helping me over the stepping-stones from darkness into light. My desire in sending this testimony is to try to help others who are passing through the seeming sense of loss and separation.

Mrs. Herbert L. Smith, London, England.

I am certainly very grateful for the understanding of Christian Science which has been unfolded to me during the last three years. One of my daily desires was for a smoke, and I may say it was a seeming friend that I could not do without. This desire has entirely left me through the awakening and perception of the nothingness of this desire, and higher and better desires have taken its place.

I am very grateful for "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy; also for the privilege of attending church services, for the reading rooms and all the literature; for the loving guidance of practitioners, and to Mrs. Eddy, who through divine instruction has outlined and planned that we should have these blessings.

Arthur G. Lothgren, Vancouver, B. C.

Prior to 1916 I had had many demonstrations of healing through Christian Science, but had not taken a sufficiently active interest in the subject to enable me to make demonstrations for myself. The winter of that year I called on a practitioner for help at my approaching confinement. The practitioner turned my thought from the contemplation of the physical condition and awakened me to my duty of spiritual advancement. Though the mother of seven children, with all of the duties involved in the bringing up of a large family, I took the time to read our Lesson-Sermon every day. There were many discordant conditions in our home, but through the loving help of the practitioner they were overcome, and at the birth of my child every condition was so perfectly natural and harmonious that we marveled.

I have since that time been able to overcome many kinds of sickness for my children, through my understanding of Christian Science. This baby, when about eleven months old, fell, striking his face against a hot stove, and was badly burned. All the neighbors noticed the burn and predicted that he would be scarred for life, but he was perfectly healed without any scar being left. Last winter my children and I came down with influenza at the same time. My eldest son came home one morning very ill. We telephoned for help in Science, and by evening he was practically healed. The next day he was able to go out to attend to the needs of the other members of the family, all of whom had beautiful demonstrations of Love's healing power. Words fail me in my attempt to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for this wonderful gift to mankind.

Signs of the Times

[The West Australian Church News]

Christians cannot accept the view sometimes advanced which would regard a humane or liberal education as suitable only for those entering the professions, and which would estimate the success of the education offered the great majority of the population by its ability to qualify them for merely more efficient labor in their various occupations. There must be diversity of educational methods, because there are diversities of gifts. But the basis of differentiation should be differences of taste or of capacity, not differences of class or of income. The manual worker needs a liberal education for the same reason as the barrister or the doctor—that he may develop his faculties and play a reasonable part in the affairs of the community.

Is there nothing more required? Yes, the greatest thing of all. Men cannot live the full life by bread alone. There is something more wanted. Man is a living soul, and even here in this world it is true that righteousness exalteth a nation. Drunkenness, sexual depravity, dishonesty, idleness, wastefulness, are all dangers to a community. They hinder progress, they enfeeble the bodies and the minds of our people, and so are a drag upon prosperity. We have work to do to train the young, to be good citizens, in bringing back the wanderer, and lifting the fallen out of the gutter so as to make them men again.

[Hortense Levi in New York (N. Y.) Tribune]

Educate doesn't mean to talk sweetly and softly to the violent radical who is actively spreading dangerous and destructive propaganda. It means the instruction of the masses whom the radical finds so easy a prey. It means to fortify the people—the great majority—with truth and facts, to arm them with clear understanding. Then they will not accept their first practical civics lesson given them on the street corner by the anarchist. And they will not be blinded to the general or the ultimate good by the appeal to class action and the promise of plunder.

Teach the principles upon which our government was founded and which are to-day the basis of our Constitution and laws; teach us to understand and uphold these principles: teach us to apply them and not to destroy them in our seeking after governmental perfection—and there will not be room for an anarchist from Maine to California.

[The York (Neb.) Republican]

A mind harrowed by fear is the finest ground in the world for the propagation of seeds of disease. But simply telling people not to be afraid because it is dangerous to their health to be afraid is not likely to get one far. The Christian Scientist professes a reason for his complacency, and that is why the seeds of fear are not so likely to take root in his consciousness and grow into manifestations of disease.

[Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends]

History is replete with lessons of the folly of suppression. Many a religious and political martyr should have taught us long ago that you may torture and kill and silence men, but you do not silence truth. The ancient truth spoken when Christianity was the feared and hated doctrine still holds to-day: "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it." Yet while suppression cannot silence truth, it can work many evils. It can produce stagnation of men's minds, and in so doing cut the taproot of democracy. It can bring disaster to those who impose it, as it did when the Federal Party passed the Sedition Law of 1798 and, in the words of a leading historian, "from the day the bill became law, the Federal Party went steadily down to ruin." It can produce revolution. Let France and Russia bear witness. "I will make them conform or I will harry them out of the land," cried James I of England against the Puritans, and these words, it has been said, "heralded the struggle which within half a century was to deliver up James's son to the executioner."

The following article, under the heading "Notes from the Field," which appeared in The Christian Science Journal of August, 1892 (Volume X, page 211), the number of the Journal in which our Leader's article "Pond and Purpose" first appeared, is republished by request:

JUST now, the enemy (?) is sending out many arguments into the field, regarding the situation and the students in Boston. All the students connected with the JOURNAL and Publishing Society do so much to help us on the outside, I feel that now is an hour when we should reflect back that help. The statements as they reach us, speak of "disloyalty," "jealousy," "ambition," "malpractice," etc., etc. No particular ones are responsible for these rumors,—they simply seem to be in the mental atmosphere, trying to compel us to breathe their miasmatic qualities.

It is sufficient for us all to recognize that they are statements of error intentionally directed at the Cause. Thus uncovered, we can steadfastly stand, and let error go through its chemical, knowing that Principle is always victorious. We all undoubtedly regret the present delay in the work of building the church; but when we know that the Church of Christ (Scientist) is Mind, we know that the Temple is already built, and that all the shafts of Satan cannot loosen even one stone thereof. As Mind does govern all, "physically, morally and spiritually," we also know that the type of the One Church will be expressed. Whatever falsity of thought there is in mortal mind that stands in the way, will be uncovered, handled, and destroyed, and we all will enjoy the blessings that the demonstration will bring. If students only would look upon all manifestations of evil as simply occasions for demonstration, how much easier it would be for all. We too often forget that it is Principle that is pouring out the vials of wrath upon the error, causing it to manifest many plagues to sense, in order that we may discern the work that Principle wants us to do. Even Peter was turned over to Satan to be sifted; but the experience was not given him to undergo until he was able to bear it. So, let the students in Boston who at this hour are compelled to meet directly the shafts of the enemy, stand firm; "accusing not one another;" but, "dwelling together in one accord," meet the emergency quietly and courageously. Remember that one "little pebble" of spiritualized thought is enough to slay the giant.

As Mind is the Church, Principle is the Board of Directors and Wisdom is the Board of Trustees, who is there, or what is there, among the children of men, that can prevail against either of these facts of Being? Can any thing come between us and the Mind that guides the Founder of the Church of Christ (Scientist)? Can any thing prevent the building of the Temple for which she gave the land (of spiritual reality)? Can any thing interfere with the omni-action of Mind? No! Mind does the healing, the teaching, the preaching, and the printing; and nothing can interfere.

The Mother gave the Journal of Science to her children, wherein they might print their work, their experiences, their demonstrations, their spiritualized thoughts from Mind. Nothing can interfere with the work of the editor of that JOURNAL. Love is the Editor, forever printing inspired words, and recording the inspired works of her children; for her children are the expression of her own immortal qualities.

To my vision the situation is absolutely impersonal. It is error stirred up to its utmost limits, previous to its destruction. It is neither directors, trustees, editors, persons nor things. It is simply the error being whipped out of its strongholds. That the situation is an ominous one for the enemy, is evident from the storms and floods and calamities that are sweeping all over the land of mortal belief. It is only a "little while" until Pharaoh will be compelled to "let the children go."

These thoughts are sent with only the one simple desire to help. The thoughts may not be much, but we know that desire is prayer, and prayer is power. Love does rule and guide. Love is Mind.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII APRIL 17, 1920 NUMBER 33

Tradition

HUGH A. STUDDERT KENNEDY

ONE of the most tenacious clogs on the wheels of progress has ever been tradition. The human mind, easily wearied of truth, eagerly welcomes anything which, while relieving it of the necessity of denying its very self, seems to permit a certain complacent assurance that it is concerned with holy things. The doing of certain definite acts, the fulfillment of certain definite requirements, the observance of certain forms of speech, all offer a ready way to "the accumulation of credit," infinitely preferable to the human mind to that daily and hourly effort to understand Principle, which is the essence of the teaching of Jesus, as it was of the prophets before him and since his time.

Now, every great progressive epoch in the world's history has been marked by a break with tradition. From the departure of Abraham from Ur of the Chaldees to the ministry of Jesus, and from the ministry of Jesus to the writing of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, the great rallying point has ever been the "simplicity that is Christ." Two thousand years ago, Jesus, proving the power of Principle as no man had ever proved it before, declared that this power had been made of none effect amongst the Jews. How? By their traditions. The whole course of Jesus' ministry, indeed, was marked by a steady repudiation of tradition. "The kingdom of God," he told his disciples, "is within you." To this man, utterly free from tradition, all things were subject; as they were, in a measure, to his immediate disciples. And yet, less than four hundred years after the Ascension, tradition was so firmly enthroned again that all Christendom was making a single letter in its creed a cause of division, hatred, and bloodshed.

So it has been throughout the whole course of Christian history. John Huss, John Wycliffe, Martin Luther, Ridley, and Latimer, and men of their time, John Wesley, and many others owed their power to the glimpse of Principle which enabled them to break, in a measure, with tradition. And as it was with Abraham, with Moses, with Jesus, and all others who followed where they led, so it was preeminently with Mary Baker Eddy. No one, since the days of Jesus, broke so utterly with tradition as did the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. She restated primitive Christianity, and she, once for all, safeguarded it against tradition, for all who would follow her teaching, by revealing the great fact that Christian Science, or the Science of the Christ, rests on demonstration.

Mrs. Eddy found it necessary, at all times, to be on the watch against the effort of the human mind to batten tradition, in some one or other of its thousand different forms, onto the cause of Christian Science,—tradition in regard to persons, places, forms of speech, festivals, observances. Steadily she urged the getting away from and the guarding against them, summing up the whole matter, every now and again, in some such wonderful sentence as, "The Christian Scientist is alone with his own being and with the reality of things" (Message for 1901, p. 20). Her rebuke of mere tradition and its exercise was stern and pointed, as witness such passages as Science and Health page 366, line 30, to 367, line 9, or page 460, lines 14 to 23. For no one saw more clearly than did Mrs. Eddy how readily tradition could find an entrance through the tithing of "mint and anise and cummin," in the form of doling arguments, for instance, or in a punctilious carefulness after scientific speech. What we understand of Truth is our only defense, and what we believe of error is our only danger. The mere use of words, apart from our thought regarding them, neither helps nor hinders. In her article entitled "Inconsistency," on page 235 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," Mrs. Eddy writes: "To teach the truth of life without using the word death, the suppositional opposite of life, were as impossible as to define truth and not name its opposite, error. Straining at gnats, one may swallow camels."

Practice not Profession

ALMA LUTZ

"WHAT I say unto you I say unto all, Watch," was the warning of Jesus to his followers. Nineteen hundred years later one of his most humble followers, Mary Baker Eddy, in her Message to The Mother Church (Message for 1900, p. 2), made this vital statement: "The song of Christian Science is, 'Work—work—work—watch and pray.'" This counsel is of utmost importance to all Christian Scientists, to-day and always, because the ways are subtle and hidden that lure one from a demonstrable to a theoretical religion. How much easier it is to preach than to practice! What a comfortable sense of self-righteousness and self-gratification preaching brings, and what watchfulness, self-immolation, and sacrifice are involved in the actual practice of Christian Science!

Even a slight study of the earthly career of Jesus will convince one that in every instance he proved his words by his works. For three hundred years his disciples followed his example, proving their religion by healing sickness and sin, and even by raising the dead. Then Christianity became popular. It was accepted by the court and, in consequence, thoughtlessly by the populace, so that as time went on neither the letter nor the spirit of primitive Christianity was understood by the majority of believers. Gradually a personal, material, even idolatrous element crept into the Christian religion, robbing it of its vitality. Symbols and ceremony took the place of the simplicity of Jesus' teachings. Men were separated from God by artificial mediators, by man-made doctrines and creeds, and it followed that only the outside of the platter was made clean. Truth, however, is immortal. In every age there have been clear thinkers who have found in the Bible, with its records of Christianity, inspiration to come out from the world of man-made theology and be separate, who have tried to acquaint themselves with God and be at peace. Luther, Wycliffe, Calvin, Wesley, and the Puritans, groped for the pure religion of Jesus; but it was Mary Baker Eddy who found it, and called her discovery Christian Science. The lost element of Christianity—healing the sick through the understanding of God—has been restored through this Science.

The first followers of this religion not only had the usual persecution to meet from denominational religion but from the medical profession as well, and these trials made them firm in their faith and willing to be judged only by their works. The growth of Christian Science has been steady and sure. To-day its message has reached the uttermost parts of the earth. Everywhere it has its churches gratefully and bountifully self-supported. That religion whose first reception was beset with ridicule, persecution, and injustice is attaining popularity. The same fervor remains among its followers, the same boundless gratitude for its healing message. Besides, there is the added strength of years of experience, years of earnest, conscientious work. Now perhaps more than at any other time is it necessary for Christian Scientists to be alert and watchful, to think clearly, and to remember that, as James said, "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."

The responsibility for the proving of Christian Science does not alone lie with officers of churches and societies, nor with practitioners only; it rests with each individual Christian Scientist. We cannot delegate to others the work that is ours to do. Unless as individual Christian Scientists we are daily living our religion, trying each day to know more of God and to put this knowledge into practice, we are a drag and are not true to the wonderful trust committed to us. As we look back over the history of Christianity we see hundreds of sects, each one presumably starting with a motive higher and a vision clearer than the sect from which it separated, but losing the vision after a comparatively few years and sinking back into the category of sects many. Each Christian Scientist should ask himself these questions: Does my religion mean everything to me? Am I, as an individual, keeping it pure, active, and practical, or am I sinking into lethargy, shifting my responsibility to others, and so far as I am concerned, letting my religion drift in the direction of the many sects which are groping for Christ's Christianity?

The true Christian Scientist holds fast to the teachings of the Bible and of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and does not wander in the bypaths of personal opinion. The Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount govern his thoughts and actions. He does his best to follow in the way that Jesus mapped out, and is a consistent exponent of Christianity. Honesty and earnestness, willingness to work for God without fame or the world's approval, even without recognition, are Christian duties. The true Christian Scientist does not go to church out of habit, to see his friends, or because the best people in his community attend. He goes to give as well as to get. He adds his mite of understanding to the reading of the great truth in the Lesson-Sermon, so that those who hear may themselves be healed. Great healing work will be done at Christian Science services when individual Christian Scientists have so studied and lived the truth expressed in the Lesson-Sermons that when they hear them read they fully comprehend their meaning. The Christian Scientist is not a dabbler. He does not use Christian Science now and then, when it is convenient or when there is no opposition; but always, because he trusts it absolutely. He does not relieve himself of all responsibility by calling a practitioner whenever there is a problem to solve. He calls a practitioner when he actually needs help, but he first does his best to work out his own salvation.

Christian Scientists need to study the life and teachings of Jesus continually, to keep ever before them his constant practical application of his religion. One of the very first duties that he taught his disciples was healing the sick. Following in his footsteps, Mrs. Eddy left this rule for Christian Scientists (Manual, Art. XXX, Sect. 7): "Healing the sick and the sinner with Truth demonstrates what we affirm of Christian Science, and nothing can substitute this demonstration. I recommend that each member of this Church shall strive to demonstrate by his or her practice, that Christian Science heals the sick quickly and wholly, thus proving this Science to be all that we claim for it."

Jesus charged his disciples time and time again to beware of the hypocrisy of the Pharisee and of trust in riches. He showed them how always under all circumstances he turned to God for guidance and strength, never trusting in human opinions or human methods. Above all, his message was love. He took the sternness, coldness, and ritualism out of the religion of his day and brought to light the wondrous love of God. Jesus did not theorize about love. Love shone in his daily deeds. He displayed infinite compassion toward all,—toward the sick and the sinning, toward rich and poor, toward friend and enemy. He had time to give to all,—time for the publican and sinner as well as for the rich and learned Pharisee. Living in utmost simplicity, he sought neither pomp nor worldly power. His one purpose was to do the will of the Father.

With this example before him there is no excuse for any Christian Scientist to be cold or unsympathetic, unkind in word or deed, or "cumbered about with much serving." The true Christian Scientist will be approachable, trustworthy, sympathetic, loving, forgiving, a true friend. He will be ready to heal every inharmonious condition by his understanding of the truth and by his practical application of divine Love in the little things of daily life,—comforting with an encouraging word, a friendly smile, or a little act of kindness.

Personality

DAISYMAY CAMPBELL HUBER

THE human mind runs to extremes. Gaining the first glimpse of God as Principle, it jumps to the conclusion that Christian Science denies God as Person. Then follows the experience of getting away from personality, which is of longer or shorter duration according to the time it takes the human mind to arrive at the illogic of its own conclusion and find that Christian Science denies no such thing.

On page 27 of "No and Yes," Mrs. Eddy asks, "Who can say what the absolute personality of God or man is?" On page 4 of the Message for 1900 she says, "In divine Science, divine Love includes and reflects all that really is, all personality and individuality;" and again, in the Message for 1901, under the caption, "God is the Infinite Person" (p. 5), she says, "Do Christian Scientists believe in personality? They do, but their personality is defined spiritually, not materially—by Mind, not by matter. We do not blot out the material race of Adam, but leave all sin to God's fiat—self-extinction, and to the final manifestation of the real spiritual man and universe."

This, then, is the crux of the matter. Christian Science denies the materiality, the finity, of Person and personality, but it does not deny Person or personality. For so many years God was known as person in the sense of an enlarged man that Mrs. Eddy saw the necessity of removing this limited concept before God could be clearly understood; hence her use of the term Principle as a synonym for God and her insistence upon the understanding of this term as applied to God. She did not, however, deny God as Person, and a careful study of her writings will reveal this fact. In Science and Health, the term Person as applied to God is used three times. In the other writings it is used twenty-nine times, while the term personality, which literally means Person manifest, is used many times throughout her works, sometimes in reference to the finite, material, false sense of Person, which must be put off; at others in the scientific sense, as God's manifestation, which God preserves forever.

God, then, is the infinite Person, and His personality is reflected in His whole vast creation. Personality is restored to its rightful classification, and the problem of getting away from personality is solved not by fleeing from all persons and things, but by welcoming each opportunity for becoming aware of true personality.

Silencing the Serpent's Voice

HELEN K. BROCK

EACH mortal finds himself over and over again listening to the voice of the serpent, which whispers suggestions that are sometimes openly evil, more often, however, masquerading as good,—suggestions of doing "evil that good may come," of enmity on the part of those with whom one would be friendly. These present themselves in varying ways to the thought, wearing a garment of reliability in order that they may gain ready admittance to the unwary—and often to those who deem themselves wise—and find lodgment there until at last the truth is learned and what before was entertained as truth is found to be but lies, nothingness, nonentity. Whence come these suggestions? Where did evil come from in the beginning? The answer to these troublesome questions can only be that evil, being a belief in the opposite of good, never came from Truth, and is a lie. When in our sleeping dreams we have passed through strange experiences and seem to have conversed with and listened to what was but an apparition, upon our awakening do we concern ourselves with the query as to where it came from? Do we not know without question that it was without origin, and thereby neutralize or destroy its influence?

In the second chapter of the great allegory of creation we are told that Adam fell into a "deep sleep," but nowhere are we told that he awakened from this sleep. In the first dream of which we have any record, to Adam and the woman Eve who shared his dream, evil appeared in the guise of a serpent stealing furtively into their happy, harmonious sense of existence, beguiling them into disobedience to the divine command, with promises of wisdom equal to divinity: "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." The voice of the serpent and the evil suggestions of to-day are all a part of the waking dream of the ages which began with the dream of Adam and Eve. As a result of this first disobedience, mortal man still dreams of life in matter, in a material body,—and his chief concern is how this material body shall be clothed, fed, housed, and amused. He dreams of happiness, when his body shall be satisfied with that which can be provided for its comfort; but he is bound to a cruel taskmaster which demands more and more, and he falls an easy prey to the suggestion of imposing suffering upon himself and others that prosperity may be enjoyed later on,—this suggestion finding expression in wars, strikes, and crimes of various characters.

A lie, however, has no foundation, no basis of truth. When traced to its starting point it is always found to have no existence whatever, consequently no beginning. Truth and error never mingle. A lie therefore has never any element of truth, and is only able to simulate truth to the extent that the lie is believed. The destruction of this lie will be final and universal just in proportion as each one yields to the omnipotence and ever presence of God, good, and relinquishes belief in its own entity, thereby accepting the governing wisdom of the divine Mind.

We are told in the Scriptures, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christian Science imparts a knowledge of the truth, and has come to the world to make men free from the burden imposed upon them in the Adam dream of existence, to awaken them from the "deep sleep" of materiality to the glorious reality of harmonious spiritual existence, and to silence forever the voice of the serpent. Through the understanding of this great truth, man will at last come to the realization of that which is prophesied in Revelation, "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him."

In special comment upon this passage Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 567): "That false claim—that ancient belief, that old serpent whose name is devil (evil), claiming that there is intelligence in matter either to benefit or to injure men—is pure delusion, the red dragon; and it is cast out by Christ, Truth, the spiritual idea, and so proved to be powerless. The words 'cast unto the earth' show the dragon to be nothingness, dust to dust; and therefore, in his pretence of being a talker, he must be a lie from the beginning. His angels, or messages, are cast out with their author."

Just One Thing to Heal

MABEL K. DIXON

THE complexity of thought with which the so-called human mind approaches any subject, thinking no doubt that this attitude shows erudition, is that which claims to make the simplicity of Christian Science a great stumbling-block to its comprehension and acceptance. On taking up the study of Christian Science the human mind tries to make something very abstruse out of the metaphysical handling of the subject of healing, presenting such a multiplicity of things to be taken into consideration that it loses sight of the fact that in any case that could possibly be brought for healing—let it be physical or otherwise—the simple truth about it is that there is but one thing to heal, and that is the false beliefs about that specific case. There are two things to be taken into consideration in any condition that is to be healed—the false beliefs about this condition, and the spiritual truth about its opposite which destroys the beliefs. In other words, the spiritual truth is what God knows about the real, while the false beliefs are what the human mind believes about the condition.

And how, asks the human mind, am I to find out what God knows? To which we answer: The Bible and our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy are explicit in telling what God is and what man is, and the manner of proving their unity. God is Spirit, and man in His likeness is spiritual. God is Mind, and man as an idea of that Mind, reflects from it all he needs to know, and as all true knowledge is spiritual, it requires spiritual understanding to comprehend it. How are we to get spiritual understanding? There is but one place where it can be obtained and only one way of obtaining it—from God, and by praying and working for it.

Digitized by Google

If a condition does not yield as soon as we think it should, we must keep on affirming the spiritual truth which is the exact opposite of the false beliefs, keep on denying that a false thing can be true, keep on asking for spiritual understanding, without which there never was and never will be a healing; and this spiritual understanding brings to our work the operation of divine Love which uncovers all that is to be denied and alone gives the vitality necessary for demonstration of the spirit of scientific healing.

Christian Science warfare is with false belief, no difference how many subdivisions and differentiations the human mind may claim to give it, and we must not get sidetracked, but stick to the fact that there is but one thing to heal and just one way to heal it. It would surely be illuminating if we could see ourselves dressed up in our false beliefs. We would not for a moment submit to letting our material dress caricature us as we allow our mental dress to do, seemingly unaware that to the seeing eye and understanding thought the mental dress is just as apparent through conversation and actions as the material dress is to the physical sight. Think of the time and thought expended on the minutiæ of material dress, and the comparatively little time given to the consideration of the robe of righteousness! Personal appearance should not be neglected, but how much more time should be given to the things that do not perish with the using. Then let us not be confused over the multiplicity of mere words but, going on with steadfast simplicity, let us follow Mrs. Eddy's instructions (Science and Health, p. 419): "Your true course is to destroy the foe, and leave the field to God, Life, Truth, and Love, remembering that God and His ideas alone are real and harmonious." And there is but one foe—the belief in evil—which brings us back to our starting point, that there is but one thing to heal, and just one way to heal it.

The Sabbath

ROBERT C. BRYANT

THROUGHOUT the history of the Jewish people, up to the time of Jesus the Christ, the sabbath was the most important religious institution. Of the Ten Commandments, the one concerning the observance of the sabbath is elaborated most at length and with the most careful detail. Christ Jesus recognized the importance of the sabbath, and historic Christianity has in turn accepted this Jewish institution and given it a place of first importance in its own system of belief and worship. But why this great emphasis on the sabbath? It could not be merely to provide one day of rest in seven for mankind. Important as this may be, it does not account for the place occupied by the sabbath in religious thought.

The spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures in Christian Science reveals the deeper meaning of the sabbath and makes very clear the reason for its great importance. The record of creation, as given in the first chapter of Genesis, speaks of the six days in which God formed the earth and the heavens. But these "days" were not days of twenty-four hours each, for solar time did not yet exist; nor were they periods of time at all. When we understand that God is divine Mind, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, we must see that time is only a human concept and does not exist as a condition or property of Mind. All that God, divine Mind, is and thinks and does must be as infinite, eternal, and unchangeable as God Himself. All that God creates always has been and always will be, an idea in Mind. There never was a time when any part of God's creation did not exist. God did not create light in one period of time and after that create the firmament in another period of time. In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read (p. 502): "The creative Principle—Life, Truth, and Love—is God. The universe reflects God. There is but one creator and one creation. This creation consists of the unfolding of spiritual ideas and their identities, which are embraced in the infinite Mind and forever reflected." And on page 504, continuing, Mrs. Eddy says, "The successive appearing of God's ideas is represented as taking place on so many evenings and mornings,—words which indicate, in the absence of solar time, spiritually clearer views of Him, views which are not implied by material darkness and dawn."

The "days" of God's creation are, then, conditions of thought only. "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Thus we see that divine Mind, conscious of the completeness and perfection of its own creation, has perfect rest,—not cessation of activity, for that would be death, but rest from any sense of incompleteness, imperfection, or inharmony. The sabbath, then, is that condition of thought in which the completeness, perfection, and harmony of all creation is seen and understood.

"And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work." This work must be to see divine perfection. "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work." In it thou shalt find complete rest. Here, then, is the reason for the great importance of the sabbath to mankind, and the secret of its emphasis in the Scriptures and in all Christian thought. Its application is universal and relates to human experience right here and now. To the extent that we understand the completeness and perfection of all things in God, divine Mind, to that extent do we enter our sabbath or rest,—not cessation of activity, but freedom from every sense of and belief in incompleteness, imperfection, and inharmony, which appear to mortals as varying forms of sin, disease, and death.

ALICE HENSLER

THE understanding, in ever so small a degree, of the power of Truth, holds countless blessings for mankind. When man has learned to trust this power and is constantly on guard to apply it, realizing that God's law is all there is, that God made all good, to be manifested to-day, yesterday, and forever, he will find himself enjoying a freedom he never knew before, a freedom that naturally follows his release from the bondage of his false sense of self.

How much precious time have mortals spent reveling in all manner of weird imaginings, worrying over evils that never occur, mentally building up impassable bridges, and so keeping themselves out of the good that is their rightful inheritance, the good that flows from the fountain of Truth. To know and to trust the power of Truth, of good, is peace ineffable, the peace "that passeth all understanding." In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 468) Mrs. Eddy says, "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all." This was very forcibly brought home to me some twelve years ago, before I had begun really to study Christian Science.

It so happened that frequently, according to mortal sense, I would contract very severe colds, accompanied ofttimes with loss of voice. Upon one of these occurrences and just at a time when I had much need of my voice, and not realizing that Truth, the great Physician, alone can heal, I sought aid from a doctor. In the office of this doctor a card was displayed in large type, that all who saw might read, "God heals, and the doctor takes the fee." After submitting to what I deemed a very disagreeable treatment, I referred to the card, "God heals, and the doctor takes the fee." "Well," the doctor replied, "you are intelligent enough to know that unless God helps me, I cannot help you." That was the turning point for me. I determined then and there to learn more of the truth of Christian Science that makes for freedom. Here was a doctor telling me he could do nothing unless God was with him. Surely I as one of the Father's children have also a place in His kingdom. I have but to knock and it will be opened. From that time forth I included in my daily prayers, "Open thou, O Lord, the eyes of my understanding." And many times since has it been demonstrated to me that if we are obedient and come with honest hearts, His ever presence never fails us. Jeremiah tells us, "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."

It is the duty of all true Christian Scientists to hold to the straight and narrow way, without swerving, to keep their vision clear, so as not to lose the road that leads to Truth, to Life, and Love, and to demonstrate that we know the way. Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 359), "The way is absolute divine Science: walk ye in it; but remember that Science is demonstrated by degrees, and our demonstration rises only as we rise in the scale of being." Let us ask ourselves to what degree have our demonstrations risen; how are we rewarding our revered Leader's patient, faithful work. This reward cannot be rendered through the channels of selfishness, idleness, strife, bickerings, self-aggrandizement, and the manifold temptations lurking around the corner, trying to becloud our vision, to win us from our high purpose, even as the Master himself was tempted. And as the Master's faith was founded on the rock, so must our faith be, undaunted by the waves of criticism and high-sounding words that have nothing to offer but empty phrases. Let us keep our gaze to the light, the light of divine Principle. God is that Principle and man is His image and likeness. In these turbulent times, when all the world seems more or less discordant, it behooves us as Christian Scientists more than ever to do as our revered Leader tells us in Science and Health (p. 392), "Stand porter at the door of thought," watching and praying for that Mind to be in us "which was also in Christ Jesus."

For all the blessings that have come to countless thousands through Mrs. Eddy's book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," we owe endless gratitude. It is a debt that never can be paid, but as true and faithful disciples we can uphold and perpetuate her teachings by faithfully living up to the standard she has set for her followers. How I bless that Key, our Leader's gift to all. It has enabled me better to understand the meaning of Jesus' words, "Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God."

["Healing"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Nov. 7, 1919]

Christian Science is known particularly by its fruits. Because, however, the effects of its practice are more apparent than the means used to produce them, Christian Science is popularly believed to be a system of treatment without medicine, quite regardless of the mental condition of the practitioner or the patient. Yet it is demonstrably true that disease is the result of thought and that it can only be healed by changing or eradicating the thought which causes it. In other words, disease, which is an effect, is the product of thought, which is cause; and this is equally true of overt sin, for disease is sin, and sin is disease, whichever way you want to look at it. Hence it follows, since effect cannot be separated from its cause, if you are going to heal disease you must first remove the thought which causes it.

To any one who seriously contemplates Christian Science healing it must be evident that it is holy work and rests upon something higher than the human mind. It is the human mind which seems to be capable of entertaining thoughts whose externalization is sin, sickness, and death, and it is from these very effects that this same mind seeks to be saved. Naturally, then, it turns to something beyond and above itself and finds surcease from its troubles in the realization of the existence of infinite intelligence, incapable of entertaining thoughts which can result in evil. This infinite intelligence is God, or Mind, the Mind which Paul says "was also in Christ Jesus." And it is in the proportion that those who practice Christian Science are conscious of the divine Mind that healing is experienced for themselves and others.

Now it must not be supposed for a single moment that mortals can be healed of their ailments while they believe sickness to be a reality or that it is part of the divine plan. If disease were a part of the divine plan it would be as eternal as God, for creator and creation, Mind and its manifestation, are coexistent and coeternal. If disease were a reality it would be true, and if true, it would be a part of Truth and therefore a part of God, for God is Truth. Christian Science does not teach that God or His creation can be destroyed or that anything which is true can ever be changed. But it does teach that what seems to be, yet is no part of the divine plan, can be proved to be what it is—a false supposition of the human mind, which has no place in the spiritual creation, government, or economy.

Uninstructed in the things of Spirit, mankind are convinced that sickness is as real as health, and it is this conviction more than any other one thing which is the chief cause of disease. Christian Science has come to change this. It rouses mortals out of their belief in the reality of matter and mortality. It changes their thought-processes by turning them into new channels. It causes humanity to contemplate something better, higher, holier than the pleasures and pains of material sense, and sets them to work to learn of the real and eternal, of that creation of which it is written that "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good."

Mrs. Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, speaking of the action of Christian Science in human affairs, says: "The effect of this Science is to stir the human mind to a change of base, on which it may yield to the harmony of the divine Mind" (Science and Health, p. 162). Herein is succinctly described the whole process of healing, which comes only as erring, mortal thought, ignorance of the nature and character of God and man, false beliefs based upon sensualism and materialism, give place to right thinking; in other words, as the carnal or mortal mind is destroyed through the knowledge that all things were made by God, infinite good, "and without him was not any thing made that was made."

The teaching of Christian Science does indeed stir the human mind. It startles it and astonishes it; and one of the first things it does is to force the individual to acknowledge that, if he desires to be freed from the pains of sense and the effects of sin, there is something which he himself must do. So accustomed, however, is mortal man to accept as real and God-created whatever is apparent to the physical senses that it is very difficult at first for him even to be willing to question their testimony. But when he realizes that there are in everyday experience things which these senses cannot explain, he begins to be willing to acknowledge the existence of a power which, if understood, can govern mankind in perfect harmony. He begins to acknowledge that God is absolute good, and from this there grows the perception that the universe, the effect of the activity of this perfect cause, should not and does not in reality contain or express any quality which is contrary to its Principle. In other words, a man who, through the exercise of spiritual sense, acknowledges that God is supreme, the creating, governing, infinite Principle, begins, by an inevitable process of logical reasoning, to question the genuineness of everything which does not conform to the standard of like producing like, a perfect creation made and governed by a perfect creator and maintained by Him in a state of continuous perfection.

Thus is a man stirred to his depths. He perceives that if he is to continue conscious of his own existence, it can only be as he knows himself as spiritual, as a child of God. And he realizes that he must empty his mind of every thought of evil, matter, sin, sickness, and death, of belief in the reality of any quality or condition which does not originate in God, the divine Mind, and fill it with thoughts of Love, Truth, Life, of spirituality, purity, health, of patience, kindness, gentleness, of confidence in and assurance of the government of God; in short, he must eschew evil in every form and order his every thought, word, and act in strict obedience to Principle.

[John M. Dean in Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times]

As reported in the Times a no doubt well meaning lady critic of Christian Science has been giving out a wealth of misinformation on that subject.

"Science falsely so called," was evidently a term used by Paul in warning Timothy against false or haphazard methods in every realm of thought, including religion. Incidentally it may be remarked that Christian Scientists are thoroughly familiar with this warning and its wholesome advice is very helpful to them. That true Christianity must be scientific and therefore demonstrable, may be a new thing to most people, yet being the truth it is as old as God. Christian Scientists have a considerable acquaintance with the Bible, for they make it their daily study and, while they undoubtedly interpret it differently from others, it is their chart of life. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy is a commentary on Scripture, and its revelations of the long hidden truths of the Book of books bring about a constant spiritual unfoldment to those who really want to understand it.

Christian Science denies the existence of sin on the basis that, as the loving God could not and would not make it, it was never made. They do not deny it as a belief which is a corollary of a purely mortal and material sense of existence, but as this sense of existence has no real relation to spiritual and divine living and is provably destructive, they contend that it is not an entity and is therefore no more real than wrong thinking makes it. In other words, it has no more power or reality than the mathematical mistake that two times two are five. When the student of mathematics learns that two times two are four, that is the end of the mistaken belief. It is not an entity to be perpetuated or passed along to some other person. It was never more or less than a false belief, and thus it spontaneously disappears from the consciousness of the one who was deluded by it. The Scripture reference, "The wages of sin is death," receives full support from Mrs. Eddy's statement (Science and Health, p. 6), "Every supposed pleasure in sin will furnish more than its equivalent of pain, until belief in material life and sin is destroyed." That sin is God-sent and therefore is indestructible and eternal, is unthinkable to those who take the trouble to reason independently of man-made doctrines.

Those who prate of a "personal God" differ widely in their concept of His personality, and it is to be doubted if even our present critic could give a very definite impression of her own understanding of the personal nature of Deity. The Christian Science God is the God of the Bible, who, we are therein told, "is a Spirit." If, then, God is Spirit, His creation must inevitably be spiritual, unless we are going to discard the invariable rule that "like begets like." "God hath made man upright," says the Preacher; "but they have sought out many inventions"—and this is the only logical explanation of evil.

In Science and Health (p. 468), Mrs. Eddy in her "scientific statement of being" says, "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all." This is not pantheism, for the manifestation of God cannot be God, but is that which emanates from God. Is not this in full accord with the teaching in I Corinthians, which plainly urges complete submission to the divine power in order that "God may be all in all"? Christian Scientists readily recall the statement attributed to an East Indian religionist as to an alleged similarity between Christian Science and ancient esoteric teachings, but they also recall that this person's opinions showed throughout a woeful lack of knowledge as to what Christian Science really is. That it has no relation whatever to pantheism will be proved beyond question to any unbiased thinker who will read a Message written by Mrs. Eddy to The Mother Church, entitled "Christian Science versus Pantheism."

Christian Scientists readily admit that they fully credit the statements of Jesus himself as to his real nature. He never claimed to be God, but plainly called himself "the Son of God." He also said, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God." Jesus was the Christ, and this fact enabled him to say, "Before Abraham was, I am." He was not speaking thus of the personal man, Jesus, but of the Christ-nature which he embodied more than all others. As Mrs. Eddy puts it (Science and Health, p. 312): "Jesus' spiritual origin and his demonstration of divine Principle richly endowed him and entitled him to sonship in Science. He was the son of a virgin."

Christian Science has never had to resort to questionable or adventitious aids for its propagation. Truth never requires unkind or malicious means for its establishment. Like the sun, it shines on and has no need to criticize the light of other worlds. That which is true will endure, while that which is false will perish. This is all that any Christian need ask. Christian Scientists themselves are naturally the only logical exponents of their faith, and presumptuous hostile critics would do well to remember that fact. When every Christian gets so busy doing good that he has no time to throw mud at his brother Christian, then, and not until then, will the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man be established.

[C. W. Hale in Terre Haute (Ind.) Tribune]

The sermon reported in a recent issue as having been delivered by an evangelist, indicates that he has a wholly erroneous concept of what Christian Science is, and does not understand what it teaches. It reveals again the fact so often proved in the practice of Christian Science that a material interpretation of the Scriptures leads to contradictions and confusion, while a wholly spiritual interpretation opens up the treasure house of the Bible, and reveals its teachings as wholly consistent and logical.

Christian Science accepts unreservedly the teachings of the Bible, and endeavors to fulfill and obey all the commands and admonitions of Christ Jesus. It does not "strike out of the Bible the whole doctrine of the atonement," but gives to mankind the highest and holiest sense of what the atonement is, and proves its teaching by practical demonstration in the healing of sickness and the overcoming of sin. Christian Science teaches that the mission of Christ Jesus was to reveal and prove the love of God to man, and to demonstrate the way out of sinful beliefs into man's rightful heritage as "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." Christ Jesus showed to mankind the real relationship of God to man, and demonstrated the atonement, man's at-one-ment or unity with God, and consequently his dominion over all phases of false beliefs and everything that would claim to separate him from God.

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, makes this clear on pages 33 and 35 of her book, "No and Yes," where she has given the following: "The sacrifice of our blessed Lord is undeniable, and it was a million times greater than the brief agony of the cross; for that would have been insufficient to insure the glory his sacrifice brought and the good it wrought. . . . It was not to appease the wrath of God, but to show the allness of Love and the nothingness of hate, sin, and death, that Jesus suffered. He lived that we also might live. He suffered, to show mortals the awful price paid by sin, and how to avoid paying it. He atoned for the terrible unreality of a supposed existence apart from God. He suffered because of the shocking human idolatry that presupposes Life, substance, Soul, and intelligence in matter,—which is the antipode of God, and yet governs mankind."

Apparently this critic of Christian Science does not understand the scientific accuracy of Mrs. Eddy's work, nor does he seek the basic meanings of words as used in her writings. The use of the word "Principle" as a synonymous term for God when properly understood gives to mankind a broader and more demonstrable knowledge of God, and enables him to realize more clearly and prove God's power. It takes away the erroneous beliefs in a physical, manlike God, forever eliminates any concept of God as formed of material flesh and blood, and reveals Him as being omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, the one eternal cause and creator. The definition of principle as given by Webster is, "a source, or origin; that from which anything proceeds; ultimate element or cause."

Again referring to "No and Yes" we find that Mrs. Eddy says on pages 19 and 20: "God is infinite. He is neither a limited mind nor a limited body. God is Love; and Love is Principle, not person. . . . Person is formed after the manner of mortal man, so far as he can conceive of personality. Limitless personality is inconceivable. His person and perfection are neither self-created, nor discerned through imperfection; and of God as a person, human reason, imagination, and revelation give us no knowledge. . . . When the term divine Principle is used to signify Deity it may seem distant or cold, until better apprehended. This Principle is Mind, substance, Life, Truth, Love. When understood, Principle is found to be the only term that fully conveys the ideas of God,—one Mind, a perfect man, and divine Science."

The teachings of Christian Science are accurate and scientific, and cannot be fully comprehended by a superficial perusal of a portion of Mrs. Eddy's writings. Not in one instance does Christian Science take anything from the teachings of the Bible, but by its spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures brings health, holiness, and happiness to man.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Bromsgrove (England) Messenger]

From reading the remarks of a clerical critic at a meeting in the Institute at Bromsgrove recently, one might be led to imagine that Christian Science was something quite distinct from the gospel of Christ. Christian Science is the gospel of Jesus the Christ; it is the Science that he taught and demonstrated, and which has been rediscovered by Mrs. Eddy. We are glad that our critic acknowledges that there are genuine cures in Christian Science, but he also says it contains grave errors and mistakes. Christian Science is based on divine Principle, with definite rules. If these are obeyed, then the results are as certain as properly worked out sums in mathematics. If our critic takes for his premise the fact that God is Spirit, infinite, omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, then the only possible conclusion he can arrive at is that God, Spirit, is all and there is none else. Every statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy is either a statement of this premise or a conclusion drawn therefrom. There are no grave errors or mistakes in it. The millions throughout the world who are able to demonstrate Christian Science in part are becoming a vast "cloud of witnesses" to the truth of Jesus' teaching, and humanity is feeling the impulse that is being given by them to the restoration of Christian healing.

Without Haste, Without Rest

ADELAIDE KEITH MERRILL

WITHOUT haste, without rest,
God's work in us is done.
We may not see from sun
To sun His purpose clear,—
Why clouds must bring the rain,
And wind must stir the blade
Till "full corn in the ear"
Completes His work,—
Without haste, without rest.

Without haste, without rest,
The evening shadows fall,
And darkness covers all
The earth, and we are still.
Quiet and confident
We wait His coming day,
In peace to do His will,
Working as God works—
Without haste, without rest.

A New Heaven and a New Earth

The overturning force of Principle cannot be stayed in the physical universe. The leaven of Truth is perpetually at work. And though men, in their material blindness, may misconstrue the signs of the times, the metaphysician makes no mistake about them. To the idealist the great war was to be the entrance chamber to a new heaven and a new earth. But this heaven and this earth, though he realized it not, were to be equally of the earth earthy. The hopes of the world were to find their expression, after the terrors and agonies of the battle field, in a peace whose symbol was to be ease in matter. The chief baker and the chief butler were to lie down together, and the senses were to lead them. The human mind did not, of course, put it so crudely as that; the human mind never does. All the same it was what it meant. The to-morrow of "Jack Johnsons" and "Big Berthas" was to be a to-morrow of lotus leaves.

There is, however, an ancient proverb, a proverb which, if Master William Langland is correct, we owe as usual to the Greeks, and of them to Plato, to the effect that man proposes, but God disposes. What Plato, or whoever coined the expression, really meant was obviously that men play with material effects, with a vanity which has not yet even discovered that the word itself means nothingness, and remain all unconscious that the only real power is the spiritual causation underlying everything. It was this causation which, overturning and overturning human vanities, brought about the great war. It was this causation, still overturning and overturning, which brought about the great peace—a peace which is only war under a new name. For, just as Jesus the Christ told men of the first century, "I [the Christ, Truth] came not to send peace, but a sword," so, the metaphysician of the twentieth century is able to realize that the more Truth displaces the lie of the human mind, the more furiously must rage the chemicalization to which Mrs. Eddy refers on page 401 of Science and Health, when she writes, "What I term chemicalization is the upheaval produced when immortal Truth is destroying erroneous mortal belief."

The great war stirred the depths of human nature. It brought to the surface all that was at once best and worst in it. And when the war was over this best and worst could no more lie down together than the lion and the lamb. Prohibition was found fighting with appetite, suffrage with sex domination, class equality with class discrimination, and everywhere purity with impurity, and selfishness with selflessness. It was a new phase, that was all, of the old struggle between good and evil, of Merodach with Tiamat, as the pagan ages pictured it, which in Christian theology was symbolized as the battle of Michael with the dragon. "The determination," as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 28 of Science and Health, "to hold Spirit in the grasp of matter is the persecutor of Truth and Love."

The new heaven and the new earth, then, which every human being brought out of his sense of the great war, was a heaven and an earth of dense materiality, or of such dissipated materiality as the vision of the Christ had engendered in his individual case. It is to this materiality that is owing the great wave of disappointment which has threatened to submerge the world in a new era of strife, in which the conflicting forces shall be no longer political but social, whilst the weapons are being forged less in the arsenals than in the forums and in the study. Adam, as Origen pointed out centuries ago, being Adam, in other words human nature being what it is, this disappointment was almost inevitable. The strained hopes with which those who had spent months of privation and misery in the trenches came home to face a world which had exploded in patriotic sentiment during the war, without lessening its own materiality, were bound to breed disenchantment. There was a willingness, it is true, to do something for the soldiers, but it was a willingness, Adam being Adam, which was to be exhausted generally at the expense of somebody else, and the intensity of which faded as the weeks passed by. Added to this there was perhaps an extravagance of expectation upon the part of the soldier, not in the least remarkable, Adam being Adam, which tended to exalt his claims above those of any one else, as if no one else had done anything toward the great achievement.

Thus the feeling of disappointment began slowly to filter through all sorts and conditions of men, because only here and there was there one who was realizing that earth can never repay human suffering, and that every hope of permanent material happiness is built on an illusion. The wise man knows perfectly well that the great danger comes to him when all men speak well of him, and, in the same way, if there had been a greater perception of the Christ, Truth, in the world, the expectations of a new heaven and a new earth would have been built less on a hope of ease in matter, after the war, than on a realization of the fact that the war itself was rather an opportunity for proving the nothingness of matter than an acid test of human endurance to be rewarded with an aftermath of material rest and pleasure.

This surely is the Holy War, the war in which Michael fights against the dragon, in which spiritual strength closes with the material senses, and this is the real Armageddon. The new heaven and the new earth will be found not in the concerted rush of the crowd, but, individually, as each cross-bearer finds his way unemotionally and scientifically along the narrow way in the footsteps of the Christ. The clue to this new earth is no material Theseus thread; it is what the New Testament calls ἐπίγνωσις τοῦ θεοῦ, a scientific knowledge of God, Principle. This knowledge constitutes a realization of the nothingness of matter, and a perception of the fact that material phenomena are a succession of mental concepts, as Mrs. Eddy explains when she writes on page 123 of Science and Health, "Divine Science, rising above physical theories, excludes matter, resolves things into thoughts, and replaces the objects of material sense with spiritual ideas." Everything that exists exists as thought, and this, on a material plane, has been the teaching of all idealistic philosophy, from Plato to Lord Kelvin.

Mrs. Eddy went further than this philosophy in going to Jesus of Nazareth for her Science, and accepting the fundamental difference drawn by him, for Nicodemus, between the Spirit and the flesh. Not only did she insist with the idealistic schools that matter was a phenomenon, but she insisted on the great fact of the idealism of Jesus, that the noumenon of mortal mind or energy was itself a mere illusion, a counterfeit of the divine Mind, God, Principle. "The kingdom of God," Jesus himself declared, "is within you." The realization of this is the scientific knowledge of God, Principle. It is man's citizenship of the new earth, a world of a gathering spiritual understanding of the nothingness of matter, which must inevitably give place to man's citizenship of the new heaven, a heaven not of clouds and mystery, but of spiritual harmony, the government of divine Mind.

FREDERICK DIXON.

On Guard

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE heals. True healing is, of course, the replacing of any seemingly wrong conditions with right activity. This replacement is by no means limited to what is called physical disease. Every discord, whether of business, of the household, or of the community, as well as any sickness or sin, has to give way sooner or later before the harmony of the divine Mind. Because real Life with its whole manifestation is indestructible, every supposed phase of destruction has to subside into its native nothingness. In fact, the ever presence of Life keeps any supposition of an opposite null and void. This is the unerring watchfulness of the divine Mind. Not for an instant could divine intelligence and its manifestation be touched by any belief in nonintelligence. Thus infinite consciousness forever knows the eternality of its idea.

As Mrs. Eddy tells us on pages 150 and 151 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "God is universal; confined to no spot, defined by no dogma, appropriated by no sect. Not more to one than to all, is God demonstrable as divine Life, Truth, and Love; and His people are they that reflect Him—that reflect Love. Again, this infinite Principle, with its universal manifestation, is all that really is or can be; hence God is our Shepherd. He guards, guides, feeds, and folds the sheep of His pasture; and their ears are attuned to His call." The one infinite cause perfectly sustains its effect; and the genuine effect is influenced only by the demonstrably true cause. In this way Principle keeps ward over its alert idea. By giving expression only to the divine Mind, idea is ever successful and satisfactory.

One turning to Christian Science for healing of any sort is satisfied, therefore, just in proportion as he comprehends Principle and its idea in place of any seeming opposite. For such a one, daily alertness must consist in the knowing that, no matter what may seem to arise, spiritual intelligence is manifesting itself in spiritual action. This spiritual action is the genuine idea, here and now altogether apart from any belief in matter. The illusion of mortality, with all its limitations, vanishes in the presence of the immortal idea. To be on guard, then, is to understand that the divine Mind does govern the true man, in spite of any supposition to the contrary. It is wholly the process of Mind, not any material sense of things. It is the awake realization of Truth, to which every one must turn. It is living and doing, which must be entirely in accord with Principle. Certainly this is a high ideal for endeavor; but through the earnest study and application of Christian Science it is actually attainable. With simple sincerity, each one has but to practice what he learns.

Seeing the need for constant alertness, Mrs. Eddy arranged for various aids along the way. She provided for church services, lectures, reading rooms, practitioners, teachers, periodicals, and other means for the turning of attention to Principle and away from mere mortal appearances. Of the periodicals she wrote, in a little article called "Something in a Name," now published on page 353 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "I have given the name to all the Christian Science periodicals. The first was The Christian Science Journal, designed to put on record the divine Science of Truth; the second I entitled Sentinel, intended to hold guard over Truth, Life, and Love; the third, Der Herold der Christian Science, to proclaim the universal activity and availability of Truth; the next I named Monitor, to spread undivided the Science that operates unspent. The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." Thus, in her words, the Sentinel is "intended to hold guard over Truth, Life, and Love."

Any student of Christian Science, even though he be but a beginner, will find it interesting and helpful to look up, with the aid of the concordances to all of Mrs. Eddy's works, which may be consulted in any Christian Science reading room, the various passages in which she has spoken of the Sentinel. Compare with these, then, the passages where she uses the word "guard" either as a verb or as a noun. When one has done this, one is ready to turn with fresh enthusiasm to the Sentinel and the other Christian Science periodicals, determined to see more of the true idea, instead of mere pages of print and paper. What manifests the perfect watchfulness of Principle does not depend in the slightest on human personalities. Idea emanates completely from the divine consciousness. Certainly, therefore, no mortal is really responsible for it. Throughout the world, seekers for Truth can turn together to the one Mind, which is ceaselessly unfolding. If they will but look steadfastly to God and the divine unfoldment, they are bound to see and experience good.

Earnest reading requires the giving of intelligent attention to Principle first of all. Just to know that divine intelligence controls the true man is good in itself. When one brings this simple understanding to bear on whatever one reads in the Christian Science periodicals, one is ready to appreciate what God is revealing as the veritable expression, regardless of any seeming. By looking with consecration to God and His idea, one necessarily finds permanent healing and happiness. Right seeking does not accept blindly any mortal appearances, but insists on proving what God knows. The alert determination to accept only divine intelligence as the guarding and guiding power wins the way to health and holiness. It is, therefore, always a joy to be righteously on guard, which is, in other words, to live and act forever in accord with the one, truly loving, divine Principle.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

MADISON, WIS.—On Sunday morning [Jan. 18], Second Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city will hold the first service in its new church edifice, 263 Langdon Street. A number of Christian Scientists, in August, 1918, formed the organization of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, of Madison, a branch of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. Services were held in a private home, then in the G. A. R. Hall, and soon the Knights of Pythias Hall was secured, where services have been held up to the present time, although it is frequently overcrowded. In the spring of 1919 the Hiram Johnson property of 263 Langdon Street was purchased and immediate steps were taken to remodel and enlarge the building for church purposes. The corner stone was laid August 20 of last year.

sand dollars. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of two hundred and seventy-five and is expected to provide for the temporary requirements of the congregation. The lot is sufficiently large to allow for future extensions as the growth demands.—The Madison Democrat.

DENVER, COLO.—Work has begun on the new church building for Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist. It will be a beautiful and imposing structure, located on the triangular plot of ground at West Thirty-first Avenue, Lake Place, and Grove Street, and will cost close to one hundred thousand dollars. Grading and excavation already are in progress. The Sunday school room will have a seating capacity of seven hundred and the auditorium eleven hundred.

The Lectures

NEW ORLEANS, LA. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Julius L. Beer, who said in part:—

In this crucial hour there goes up from the agonized heart of humanity a plaintive cry: Whither shall we turn? Whence shall come our help? And in response to this appeal there comes out of the void, floating down the centuries, that same voice, gracious and sweet, yet penetrating and clear, saying with infinite tenderness, "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Now, as then, and as in all the days to come, it is God alone who can save. Christian Science comes at this time to interpret the Master's teachings, his message of salvation, in terms comprehensible to present day thought and in a manner adapted to meet every human need and satisfy every human aspiration.

PORTLAND, ORE. (Fifth Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Helen Jeselson, who said in part:—

Christian Scientists the world over are rejoicing that after centuries of sorrow and doubt and longing, following the advent of our Savior on earth, there came at last one strong enough and pure enough and faithful enough to relight the torch of spiritual understanding and bring again in its entirety to a troubled world the religion taught by Jesus of Nazareth. This is why our hearts go out in gratitude to Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, that through her consecration and life work we have been enabled to grasp this glorious Principle underlying all religious healing and demonstrate, in a degree, the coming of the Christ in our consciousness.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Third Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Henry J. Holm, who said in part:—

Jesus not only performed many wonderful works but he also taught others how to do so. He left no tangible rule, however, by which men could learn to apply this healing power. Throughout the Christian era many well meaning men and women have tried to emulate the works of Jesus, but because their methods were not built upon the rock, Christ, they had no enduring basis. It remained for Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, to restore to the world primitive Christianity and the healing of physical ailments in the way that Jesus taught and practiced. Her spiritual understanding of God enabled her to reduce to writing, so that all might understand, the rule or method by which the sick are healed, the sinning redeemed, and discord of every name and nature destroyed through a correct knowledge of the power of God.

SUPERIOR, WIS. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Thomas B. Mills, who said in part:—

On the wayfarer who listens and observes, Christian Science inculcates faith in and loyalty to the laws of God; it impresses the truth that those laws are unchanging and enduring; it emphasizes that fundamental of right living, the understanding of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; and admonishes us that at all times and in all ways we are our brother's keeper.

There never has been a time in human history when the strife torn peoples of this world needed the appealing, compelling forces of spiritual awakening as now. In the struggle for place and power, in the white heat of contest, men in their passions have been swept from their moorings, and are fervently asking for a light to guide them, asking that the Master shall say again to the tempest, "Peace, be still." Christian Science teaches that there is a God-given power freely granted and abundantly bestowed, rescuing man from sin, sickness, and death. It demonstrates that God heals today as in that wonderful time nineteen hundred years ago, when Jesus taught and healed in the beautiful hills of Judea and by the blue waters of the Sea of Galilee.

CATSKILL, N. Y. (Society).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Miss Lillian Banks, who said in part:—

In the days of Jesus of Nazareth, when John the Baptist sent his disciples to inquire of him, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Jesus referred to his works of healing as evidence of his Messiahship. Jesus taught his followers to have faith in God and to prove their faith by their works. He left this promise to all mankind, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." So, in our day, as proof of the Christianity of Christian Science, thousands lovingly testify that through its ministry they have been freed from the bondage of sickness and sin and have received untold blessings.

Can the religion of Christian Science be other than Christian when its message of love brings healing to the sick, comfort to the sorrowing, rest to the weary, and forgiveness to the sinful? The truth as revealed in its teaching has ever been available and free to all,—but the eyes of men were blinded that they saw not, and their ears were dull of hearing that they understood not, else the healing power of early Christianity would not have been lost for centuries. Just as clouds deprive us of sunlight but do not affect the sun itself, so the darkness of material thoughts dimmed the light of spiritual understanding but had no power to harm the Christ, "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, gained her understanding of spiritual law from the Bible. Through her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she has revealed the true relationship between man and God; has made God's law and its operation known to humanity; has proved the healing Christ to be ever present.

CENTRALIA, ILL. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Flora T. Harris, who said in part:—

To a world which has long been dissatisfied with the promise of a future world salvation and one which is to-day laboring as never before to establish "peace on earth," Christian Science says in the words of Job, "Acquaint now thyself with him [God], and be at peace;" and in the words of Paul, "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." Being universal in its healing and beneficent influence, it is the voice to this age crying, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by D. D. Baird, who said in part:—

Christian Science, being the exact teaching of Jesus the Christ, offers the remedy for ills of every kind that confront mankind to-day. It matters not whether it is an ill of the flesh, a financial difficulty, or discord of some other nature, the remedy can be found and the healing effected through the proper understanding and application of the teachings of Christian Science, as set forth in the various writings of Mary Baker Eddy, its Discoverer and Founder.

OSKALOOSA, IOWA (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Grace Bunker, who said in part:—

In his Sermon on the Mount, Jesus said, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; . . . and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

To those who are asking and seeking and knocking, the door to a better understanding of God is being opened through the study and practice of the teachings of Christian Science; and this better understanding is bringing blessings of health, happiness, and peace, blessings not only for Christian Scientists but for all mankind.—Oskaloosa Herald.

NORTH PLATTE, NEB. (Society).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Milton L. Overstreet, who said in part:—

We are to have the pleasure this afternoon of listening to a lecture on Christian Science, the oldest and newest science known to man. It is the science of being healthy, the science of being happy, the science of knowing, understanding, and demonstrating the laws of the government of God, and was accepted and practiced by the prophets long previous to the example of our Master, the great Wayshower, Christ Jesus.

Testimonies of Healing

I submit my testimony, which I trust will be as much help to others as previous testimonies have been to me. As Christian Scientists study the Lesson-Sermons and put into practice what they learn each day, they are building an ark for protection against the evil of this world, whether it presents itself in the form of limitation, cold, poor health, unkind feelings toward our fellow men, or any of the numerous so-called errors.

Recently the writer went through an experience that proved the protecting care of our heavenly Father over His children. My husband and I live on a ranch about forty-five miles from town. We left home about noon one day in our car to go to the near-by town for supplies, which we purchased; then went to a hotel for the night. On awakening the next morning we found a heavy snowstorm was on, but as the roads had been so good in coming, we, as well as others, did not doubt reaching home in safety. We started about noon. When we had gone about fourteen miles from town and were on the coldest flat, where no one lived, with the snow blinding and our light not working, we found there was nothing to do but stay in our car until next morning, as the drifts were becoming more dangerous. My husband, knowing what a Montana blizzard meant, was full of fear, but different passages from the Bible and Science and Health would come to me and all fear would leave. We closed up the car as well as it could be done, but the wind was growing stronger all the time and it was getting colder.

I felt a wonderful peace and told my husband I was not afraid, I knew we would come out all right. But he said, "You do not know the Montana blizzards; you are not afraid because you do not know the danger." I answered, "God will protect us from all danger." Later my husband tramped a place for us to walk back and forth in. We walked for a while in the blinding wind and then I proposed going back to the car and taking a nap. He said, "You can sleep, but I will stay awake all night." I knew his fear was of freezing, but I finally prevailed on him to get into the car and rest. I knew we could sleep if we needed to, so we put our quilts over us in the seat, and leaned back. Then there came to my thought the words of one of our Leader's hymns (Poems, p. 4):—

> O gentle presence, peace and joy and power;
> O Life divine, that owns each waiting hour,
> Thou Love that guards the nestling's faltering flight!
> Keep Thou my child on upward wing tonight.
> . . . . . .
> His arm encircles me, and mine, and all.

I dozed off and found upon waking that my husband, too, had had a restful nap as he was sleeping when I awakened. It was now 10:25. We were getting cold again so we got out and walked some more, then went back to the car and slept. This time we had a longer sleep, as the fear was not so great on his part, and it was 2:25 when we awakened. The next time it was 4:25. When we awakened again it was about 5:15, and we could see the sun coming up in all its splendor, and my heart was lifted up in thanks to our heavenly Father.

My husband went for help to the nearest place, about twelve or fourteen miles away, and I knew that God would help us through the day as well as through the night. At twelve o'clock my husband came back; but in the meantime I read some Sentinels I had, which were very helpful. He had found a sheep camp, where they loaned him a horse to ride to a certain place where they said he could get a man to tow us in. This saved him a twelve-mile walk. The man came and took us to the camp, where they gave us a warm dinner. They asked how it was we did not freeze to death and said, "Are you not cold?" I answered, "No."

We reached the road house that evening, car and all. There we met others who had been in the storm but not as long a time as we, and when they heard we had spent the night in the car they were astonished that we were not hurt in some way. The following day we started to our ranch, the roadman having loaned us his sleigh and promised to take care of our car until it was convenient for us to take it home. Being a southern girl and always of a cold nature, it took scientific work for me to overcome cold. It was between ten and twenty degrees below zero the night we were out. In Psalms we read, "I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety."—Mrs. O. L. Browning, Eight Point, Mont.

When a boy of twelve years I sustained a gun-shot wound in the heel of my right foot, the bullet lodging between the heel bones. An army surgeon attended and informed my parents after his examination that to remove the bullet would leave me with a stiff foot, and it was decided not to have the operation performed.

My wife and I became interested in Christian Science and about the first thing we thought of was the removal of this bullet through the application of the truth. After eleven years of earnest work the demonstration was made; the bullet came out without any discomfort or pain whatever and with no other treatment but Christian Science. The wound is perfectly healed and the foot is just as good as ever. This had been an open wound for forty years and called for daily attention. To say that I am grateful to God for this healing is hardly enough, and I do hope that this testimony may encourage some one else to hold fast to the truth for the final manifestation of the healing, because it will come sometime and in God's way.—Frederick E. Ernst, St. Joseph, Mo.

I have had so much help and comfort since coming into Christian Science that I feel it a duty to tell of it. This beautiful truth was brought to me three years ago by a young man who knew very little about it. He came to my door in answer to an advertisement of a room to rent. After he had been here a few days, as I was very nervous and worried with many troubles, he asked me if I would allow his mother to write to me as he knew she could help me. I consented and she asked me to get "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and gave me the Lesson-Sermons to read. In about a week I left off glasses, which I had worn for fifteen years. She had been an infidel when this boy lived at home and he had never been inside of any church in his life and knew only what his mother had written him about Christian Science but he had enough love in his heart to ask her to help me. He attended a lecture with me and was healed of smoking and profanity and then became a student of the Christian Science textbook and the Bible.

When my own son was leaving home for college I thought that so many young men begin to smoke, drink, and do other shameful things after they leave home, and I was afraid my son would learn those things. Then the mother, who had helped me so much, wrote to me that when her son was away she had seen him as God's child and knew God would be with him in every place. Then as I thought of what God had done for this young man I knew He would also guide and protect my son. From that day I have known him as God's child, and he contracted none of the habits which I had feared, but studied his Bible and attended Christian Science lectures. He seemed to be broad-minded and always stood very high in his examinations.

When the war call came he volunteered to go to Canada and help out with the wheat harvest. While there he wrote to me that the mosquitoes were so fearful he could have no comfort; they were so abundant and large that they were like clouds of smoke. I realized that God gave man dominion over all the earth and he, as God's child, could not be tormented by that pestilence,—and the mosquitoes all left his habitation. Later when he was studying navigation with the Navy and was on a boat loaded with iron ore, I was awakened one night with the clear understanding that he was in distress and needed my help, but I realized at once that "underneath are the everlasting arms," and God controls the wind and the waves, and since he was God's child what could I fear as there is no place where Love is not. I went peacefully to sleep, and a week later when he was home for a day, he said he was never seasick but once. At midnight a week before, he was standing on watch in an electric storm and began to feel very ill and was going to call for help, when suddenly he found he was not sick any more.

When a younger son was about ready for college I worried, fearing my financial supply would not be sufficient to keep them both in college at once; but when the time came for him to enter, he had had four scholarships offered him, and he said surely God had showered upon him more blessings than he was able to accept. He was allowed to wait on the table for his board. He also helped at the State Agriculture barns on Saturdays and earned enough for his room rent. I had feared that I would not be able to meet his needs, but when they came they were already met and I had nothing to do for him. This son was once healed of a growth in his throat; the healing was instantaneous and by a practitioner he had never seen. Now I can say, "Who is so great a God as our God?" and the thought is continually with me, as Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 110), "Beloved children, the world has need of you." I am most thankful to have been able to help others and can say that my every hope is to have more of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."—(Mrs.) EUNICE FLEMING, Chicago, Ill.

Christian Science came into my life nearly five years ago while I was spending the winter at a southern health resort, where I had been going for several years because the physicians had so ordered on account of a so-called chronic bronchial condition. I had been considered frail for many years and as I look back, my condition at that time seemed to be habitual exhaustion, weariness, and fear, though I was naturally energetic.

I had no thought of physical healing in taking up Christian Science. After attending a Wednesday evening meeting I was so impressed by the sincerity of the testimonies given, that there was a desire to look into it. I went there with a desire to know the truth, although at that time I had no concept of what constitutes Truth. A copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," was given to me to take home. I read hours every day and in time went through everything they had to lend. I did not accept all that I read, but enough truth was found to show me that this was what I had been hungering for all my life, a chance to prove that God does exist and is man's ever present help. The little understanding that had been gained was put to work and proved that Christian Science does what it claims to do. As the study continued, other proofs were forthcoming; I was then convinced, and from that day have taken not a drop of medicine. I left the South in May of that year and have never been back since, because Christian Science has taught me that health is a condition of Mind and not of climate.

The study of Christian Science has given me faith in the allness of God; it has given me an understanding of the Bible that makes it a daily help. It has given me the true idea of health, and I know now that "God's promises are kept," whereas in the past I thought I was governed by my body, had to listen to its seeming complaints, and bow to conditions over which I thought I had no control; for when physicians laid down their laws, I thought they knew, and believed the things they said. It has taught me that the body never made a retort of any kind; that divine Mind reports only that which is true—health, harmony, and immortality. The study of Christian Science has given me almost unlimited endurance and strength. I think my first demonstration was the overcoming of fatigue.

I have been healed of chronic headache, indigestion, lumbago, bronchial trouble, a kidney difficulty, and many other ills, including some of disposition. For the glorious liberty that Christian Science has brought into my life I am indeed grateful, but above all I am most glad to know God aright, to learn to submerge self, my mortal desires, and to let divine Mind be my guide at all times, to study to do the will of God, good. One of the things for which I am most grateful is that very early in my study of Christian Science I felt the desire to own all of our Leader's works. I had accepted her teaching as true, I had recognized her writings as my necessity, and while error suggested that some of them could be borrowed for a time, the thought was overcome, and within a short time all—including the concordances—were in my possession. Words fail to express the joy, the spiritual uplift, that came to me from class instruction. The Bible and Science and Health have been proved to me to be fountains of light.—(Mrs.) EMMA YOUNG, Des Moines, Iowa.

I was raised strictly and made to study the catechism every Sunday, but when I was eight years old my mother passed on, and later I led a rather wild life. When I was twenty-eight years old I joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for years tried to lead a good, Christian life. I took prominent part in several revivals but often would leave the church after listening to some of the most powerful sermons feeling that something was lacking, though I blamed my own dull perception.

I was afflicted with bowel trouble for more than forty years and although I took all the medicine recommended by my physician, I gradually grew worse until at length I was confined to the house, in bed most of the time. One day a friend called my wife on the telephone and during the talk asked if I would try Christian Science. I told her I would try anything, so she came to see me and brought "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. When I first began reading this book I did not understand it at all, but I kept reading and gradually the light began to dawn. I have not taken any medicine since that day, now eight years past, and am a well man, can eat anything I want to; nothing seems to hurt me physically; but best of all I have a clearer understanding of the Bible and feel so joyous, so happy, when I realize that God is the only power and that sin, sickness, and death are not known to His children. I feel at times I could shout for joy, for life is almost a continual round of gladness in knowing that God, the loving Father, is always watching over me. Oh, if I could only get my friends and neighbors to realize as I do, the joy of living each day nearer to God, the loving Father, it would be the greatest day of my life. To study the weekly Lesson-Sermon and learn the great truths unfolded to us about Christ Jesus and his wonderful example, brings wonderful blessings. I feel more grateful each day for the wonderful help given to us by that consecrated woman, Mary Baker Eddy. Her work for mankind will live forever and grow brighter as the years go by.

Christian Science was brought to me by a dear friend, in a time of great need, and I shall never cease to be grateful that I was ready to accept it without questioning. I cannot forget the joy that came with a realization that "thus man was," as Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 573), "no longer regarded as a miserable sinner, but as the blessed child of God." Later in my study of this wonderful key to the Scriptures I found I had caught a glimpse of the real man.

I have had a number of physical healings in my twenty-three years' study of Christian Science, but the one that seems to mean much in my daily life is the healing from headaches. From childhood I had been subject to severe headaches and as the years went on they grew in frequency and intensity and held me in bondage. I was never able to make engagements either for business or pleasure, without reservation and was consequently deprived of many useful activities. Physicians searched for the cause in order to prescribe a remedy, but utterly failed. This healing in Christian Science was slow, but the healing of other discordant conditions made me press on to work out my own salvation, and I rejoice to say that my freedom came.

While I am very grateful for all the physical healings, the better understanding of God as Principle, of man's oneness with Principle, and of the brotherhood of man means far more to me. It is my privilege to be a member of The Mother Church and of a branch church and to have a part in their activities. I am also most grateful for class instruction, which has given me a broader and more practical understanding of Christian Science and its application to human experiences.

Christian Science has brought health, joy, peace, and activity into my life, and has sustained me in sorrow and through trying experiences as nothing else could. Words cannot express my gratitude to God, and to our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for this revelation of Truth to mankind; and it is my earnest desire so to live that my life may attest my sincerity.

(Mrs.) Elizabeth Morrison, Norwalk, Conn.

I would like to tell what the teachings of Christian Science have done for me. I hope to help some one as I have been helped by testimonies. When only fifteen years old I began teaching Sunday school in a denominational church. As my education broadened I began to question the inconsistencies taught in the Sunday schools; still I plodded on and did my church duties. When the great test of my life came and ministers told me that God took our child for some good purpose, I openly rebelled and I refrain from contemplating what might have occurred if a Christian Scientist, a friend from childhood, had not written me not to think that God did it. From that minute my regeneration began. I eagerly followed her advice and talked with a Christian Scientist concerning death. I was very thankful to begin to see ever so slightly that God does not cause death, but I grasped more fully the understanding of God as Life eternal when I recently had the great blessing and growth afforded by class instruction. As the true meaning of life dawns upon human consciousness, what a delusion death is seen to be! How could the thinkers have been so mesmerized when the Bible abounds in teachings and experiences proving that man, the idea of God, held forever in divine Mind, cannot die! Nothing but a life devoted to the work of God in Christian Science can express at all my gratitude to our loving and courageous Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for breaking the bondage in which the delusion death seemed to hold me.

Three weeks after my first reading of Christian Science literature, I asked for treatment for a stubborn cough which had baffled several doctors. That was destroyed through the kind and efficient work of a practitioner. Since then, nearly four years ago, I have never used a medical remedy. When I think how full of blessings and joy and health these last four years have been, I deeply regret that I did not know Christian Science earlier. Gratitude fills me every time I read a periodical prepared by our own Publishing Society or think of how our Directors and the activities of The Mother Church help us so lovingly. Through these ideas of divine Mind we begin to appreciate God's love for man and Mrs. Eddy's obedience to God.

I was convinced of the truth of Christian Science by the example of several faithful Christian Scientists. Then the time came when I needed it, but I did not turn whole-heartedly to it, and shortly afterwards I had to go through a great trial. My husband was killed in France, and the blow seemed almost more than I could bear. I had taken very little interest in the Christian Science periodicals, but it was through Truth's leading that a kind friend brought me the very thing I needed, a beautiful article in The Christian Science Journal, which pointed out how grief is error, selfishness, and hence nothingness. From that day I was completely healed, and grief has never recurred. Six weeks after my husband was killed, my second baby was born. I had Christian Science treatment and a Christian Science nurse and experienced barely two hours' pain. No sad thoughts were entertained; in fact I could only rejoice over this proof of God's loving care. Although with my first baby I was in a miserable state of health before and after he was born, on this last occasion I never knew a day's illness or weariness.

Some months after this we were about to leave home for a visit. The night before, my eldest boy, then three years old, was suddenly taken ill and shouted so loudly in his delirium that I thought he would rouse the neighbors. At first I was very fearful, but I turned unreservedly to God and all fear left me. He slept quietly, and when the next morning the time drew near for us to start on our journey, I roused him, and he readily ate the food I gave him. He was puzzled that he could not stand steadily, but managed to walk downstairs without help. Error was whispering to me, "You are mad to take him out," but all the while I knew that with God all things are possible. Our journey was delayed owing to fog, and we arrived at our destination at ten o'clock at night, and he took a ten minutes' walk from the station.

During the journey I was so filled with the knowledge of God's ever presence that none of us suffered from weariness or irritability.

My younger child is now nearly three years old and has never taken medicine. An acute attack of dysentery was overcome in twelve hours. All his teeth have come without even my knowledge. I used to have various physical ailments which I thought were quite legitimate, and a severe pain in my right foot which was presumably gout, and which I had endured for over two years; these as well as corns have been completely healed. As a result of the clear realization that Love fills all space, I seldom experience any pains or aches or tiredness.

For all this, especially for the wonderful peace which comes with the understanding and proof that God is Love, I am deeply grateful, also for the splendid Christian Science periodicals.

I have known about Christian Science for twelve years now, and feel that I should send a testimony to one of our periodicals. I have never had a serious illness, but as a child was supposed to be delicate. All signs of this have disappeared, and I can do anything I want to and hardly know what it is to feel tired. On one occasion I had a fall from my horse and twisted my leg from the knee downward; that night I could not turn over in bed without lifting my leg with my hands, but I treated myself, and though I was a little lame next day, the leg improved very quickly and in about a week's time was quite well again. Christian Science has been an enormous help to me during the war by enabling me to know with absolute certainty that good must conquer. Also in the different kinds of work I have taken up I have been helped by trying to realize that I had not got to do the work myself, but only to be a channel through which God's perfect work could be manifested. For all blessings received and for our literature I am very grateful to God, divine Love, and to Mrs. Eddy, who has shown the way in this age.—(Mrs.) MARGARET E. SCHOLFIELD, Howden, Yorkshire, England.

I have received so much help in Christian Science that I feel it my duty to write a few lines of gratitude hoping that it may help some one to whom the way seems dark and dreary. The true way was first brought to my notice, nearly eight years ago, by a loving Christian Scientist. I read a little at that time from Science and Health and can now see that I was helped at that time. About four years later I was stricken with a severe nervous attack, and for months lived in great fear. Worse than all the rest was the constantly present fear of insanity. I struggled on in this way for a time; then the same kind friend who first brought Christian Science to my notice suggested to my sister with whom I was staying at this time that Science was the only way out of bondage.

With the loving help of this faithful Scientist I was enabled to grasp a little of the blessed Truth which does indeed set man free. Besides the mental healing, which has come gradually, I have been healed of what the doctors called a valvular affection of the heart; of so-called Spanish influenza by one absent treatment; of the smoking habit while reading "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mary Baker Eddy. For these and many other healings, physical and moral, I am indeed thankful. I am also grateful for the loving help so cheerfully given by all Christian Scientists and for the Christian Science literature, and I find as I am willing to give up a material belief that a spiritual truth is gained.

In early womanhood I united with a denominational church, and faithfully did what I considered my Christian duty,—performing all kinds of material labor for the church,—but must confess I knew not the meaning of the word "Christian." About twelve years later I experienced a great sorrow which destroyed my faith in God, for I believed He had permitted my suffering.

Stomach trouble for eighteen years had been treated by both allopathic and homeopathic physicians, and it was only a hypodermic that would relieve the pain; then it took several days to recover from the effects of the drug, and by that time I would have another attack. I could seemingly digest no food. About this time Christian Science was proposed to me. I sought a practitioner and asked for help. In two weeks I knew I was healed. What inexpressible joy to be free from pain and the fear of suffering. Then I began reading Science and Health, which was only words to me for more than two years, but gradually the light began to dawn upon my consciousness. Never once have I been tempted to turn back, knowing so well there is nothing to turn back to. I must press on, I must gain the "pearl of great price," spiritual understanding. I have been healed of hemorrhoids and an internal trouble and have also overcome hate and am being healed of high temper and sensitiveness.

A year ago I had the privilege of proving the power of God in mental surgery. I fell downstairs, breaking the clavicle of my right shoulder. For an instant I was stunned; then I reached for the hand of proffered help, and arose. I called over the telephone for Christian Science help, and taking some Christian Science literature I tried to lie down, the most difficult thing I ever attempted to do, but finally succeeded. I read for half an hour, realizing that God's law is now in operation, and fell asleep to awake a half hour later free from pain. After the first day I used the arm and in six days was combing my hair.

Words seem so empty to express the gratitude I feel, but I am trying to live the life that blesses. I enjoy the privilege of teaching the infant class in Sunday school and from these innocent babes have learned many lessons. I am grateful to God for having given to the world Mrs. Eddy, who was pure and consecrated enough again to give to us this Christ, Truth, which is leading men out of the darkness of materiality into the glorious liberty of Life and Love, and to the understanding of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood and motherhood of God.

I wish to tell all who read the Sentinel a few of the many blessings that have come to me through Christian Science study. For the last twelve years I have depended entirely on it for the healing of seven children in all of their childish ailments. It is such a comfort to know that God is always at hand, although one is miles from any one else, and that He never fails us if we turn to Him. My little girl of seven was healed in one week from an accident to the eye. One girl of four was healed of an attack of appendicitis in two hours. Mrs. Eddy has done more for the world than any one since Jesus.

Signs of the Times

[Rev. W. M. McCleaver in Visalia (Calif.) Times]

All great movements, as well as all progress, are slow in the sight of men's impatience. But the solemn fact is ever before us, that the foundation upon which we shall build to-morrow is the one we are building to-day. This is as true of nations as individuals, of centuries as days. Then what we are to be to-morrow is the sum total of the facts of our lives to-day. What the world is to be one hundred years from to-day does not depend so much upon the unborn generations as it does upon the generation of this hour.

Whether we admit it or not, the world's court of society to-day is staggering under the same old question that Pilate's court propounded to the Son of God two thousand years ago: "What is truth?" The rise or fall of every age and of every nation has been founded upon the answer they made to this question. And the rise or fall of the ages of to-morrow will depend upon the strength of this hour to what is truth.

The missing link of civilization can never be discovered in the physical order, but must be dug from the mountains of the moral universe of God. This missing link is moral truth that brings us back to God. There must be a restatement or a new statement of the science of life if we are to be saved to truth and by the truth that makes men free.

[G. F. M., in Le Ralliement, Lausanne, Switzerland]

There are plenty of physicians to offer suffering humanity the greatest variety of medicine, but those individuals listening to them are having in this hour some cruel experiences. It is incumbent upon the Christian church to give to-day a practical demonstration that it has found Him who healeth. Let Christians be an example of confidence, brotherly love, and desire for peace; let them unite to serve him only who can say in the name of a God who is Love: Come unto me, and ye shall be saved!

[The Gate City, Keokuk, Iowa]

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, distinguished scholar long at the head of Harvard, whom that university has made president emeritus, is quoted as saying that the world may be on the brink of a tremendous spiritual revelation or discovery which will recast our religious beliefs precisely as we are constantly recasting our scientific beliefs.

Science has from time to time discovered laws of nature the earlier statements of which remain, if not unchallenged, almost universally accepted. There may be a dozen such great enunciations, Kepler's laws, the law of the indestructibility of energy, and a few others. Aside from these scientific landmarks of ages, so little remains of the science of half a century ago that the books of that time are practically valueless. May it not conceivably be the same in matters of religion? May it not be that the few fundamentals, including some that are common to all the nobler faiths which have influenced mankind will alone survive the twentieth-century restatement which Dr. Eliot forecasts?

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

Modern industry is something more than a vast aggregation of mechanical appliances presumably working together to produce certain material results. Modern industry is carried forward by millions of human beings, brought into temporary cooperative relations with one another and moved chiefly by the commercial instinct. They all have the impulses, tastes, ambitions, passions, common to humanity. Selfishness and violence may to-day break out in the men wearing greasy overalls and tending the machinery in a superheated underground room; to-morrow these same qualities may find expression in the office and the counting room. You may raise wages, establish rest rooms, introduce the profit sharing system, and admit the workmen to a share in the management, and yet the dove of peace will not long tarry in that establishment unless a respectable number of persons at both ends of the business are personally actuated by the Christian spirit. Until Christ's law of brotherhood is operative everywhere and the test of conduct in personal relations for all alike, we are still far from the goal of a permanently successful and entirely peaceful social order.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

THE editor of the China ———, our oldest and biggest newspaper, said to one of the workers, who went to see him about printing the lecture: "No, I don't get the MONITOR now and I miss it. In fact I told the people to see about a subscription for it the other day. I think the MONITOR undoubtedly the finest U. S. A. paper, and I only know of one English paper that equals it and sometimes gets ahead of it. It's a good example to have about." This is from a man who five years ago (less, I think) would not print the notice of our service and we have to thank the MONITOR for changing his thought. He said he did not think that they would have space for all the lecture but added, "I want that lecture. Please let me have it intact."

I HAVE been a subscriber to the MONITOR from its first issue, and find it becoming better and more indispensable each year. I have been particularly grateful of late for the metaphysical articles on the Home Forum page, and the editorials have always been my delight. I have frequently been asked how, with so little time, I could keep myself so well-informed as to the affairs of the world, and my reply is always that I owe it all to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. At this time more than ever before we need the broad grasp of events and fearless adherence to Principle that the MONITOR editorials have always shown, and I realize that I cannot afford to miss a single issue.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII APRIL 24, 1920 NUMBER 34

Right Practice

ROBERT RAMSEY

WHEN Shakespeare wrote, "There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so," he directed the searchlight of genius upon human experience. Now what is called human genius is alertness consciously directed to some specific subject, but actually piercing the human and reaching toward some divine reality. Shakespeare's genius advanced him from the belief that things were necessarily as he saw them, to the perception that human experience is governed by the human mind; but he did not consciously emerge from material belief. The genius of Mrs. Eddy was more than human genius because it was divine inspiration; she consciously reached the true idea of being in its relation to God when she perceived and could declare (Science and Health, p. 468), "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all."

Jesus was constantly presenting this same idea, as, for instance, when he said to the rich young man, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God." Even though it may be true that "there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so," the attempt to be materially optimistic, to accept sense testimony, and then try to "think" things good, is not the practice of Christian Science. The practice of Christian Science involves the recognition that both the bad experience and its seeming cause, wrong thinking, are illusive and unreal. This recognition must be based on the reality and allness of God, in order to have the illusion disappear. To reduce this to practice in daily life is the work of the Christian Scientist.

Suppose one is faced with an aggressive material suggestion of sin or sickness, what is the mode of procedure? Clearly, since God, divine Mind, is good, the manifestation of infinite Mind must express good. Evil is not a creator; evil is the denial or attempted destruction of good,—a thing which is impossible since good is infinite. The appearance of evil in sense testimony, therefore, is the illusion of material sense, which is capable of being proved unreal by the spiritual sense of infinite good. This sense of infinite good must be lived, not reached spasmodically, and the Christian Scientist may not have a clear enough perception of it to dissipate immediately the illusive sense. If this is the case, then he must, by a process of argument, reasoning, study, and growth in understanding based on the allness of God as divine Principle, and of His manifestation as spiritual and divine, convince himself of the unreality of both the bad effect and its supposititious cause, the suggestion of so-called mortal mind.

It must be remembered, however, that as God is in reality All-in-all, no matter how ignorant any one may be of the fact, the aggressive mortal suggestion, the illusion of material sense claiming identity as a mortal, is simply a frightened, false sense of God and man,—of Mind and its expression. Of this we read in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 460), "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient." To this frightened, false sense, this supposition of good and evil, the evil seems to outweigh the good; and it is this acceptance of evil as a reality, this ignorance of the infinity of good, which is the bad "thinking" which claims that it "makes it so." If this frightened, false sense comes to Christian Science for treatment, then the practitioner declares the side of good, of God's allness, and according to the purity of his understanding of reality, demonstrates harmony.

What seems a more difficult proposition, however, for many Scientists, is how to think about the frightened, false sense which does not come as a patient, but simply crosses the path of daily life. Obviously the Christian Scientist cannot go about promiscuously treating such cases, for to do so would be to interfere with man's right of self-government, and would not be Christian Science treatment but a species of mental suggestion. At the same time no Scientist can afford to accept as real any suggestion of error counterfeiting reality. Now this belief in evil is merely one of an accumulation of many false beliefs in evil, both his own and those of all mankind. Every person, therefore, who believes that man is a suffering mortal governed by material law, and that this is a case in point, adds his belief to the accumulation. It is therefore necessary for the Scientist to watch that he shall not make evil seem yet more real by adding his belief to that of others. He therefore destroys scientifically his own belief in evil and thus protects himself, knows that consciousness is clear, and uses the opportunity to ascend in his understanding of God's allness by demonstrating, for himself at least, the possibility of constant right thinking, and thereby in some degree he benefits all mankind.

Children and Liberty

EDITH BOWERS

OF all words in the English language, the word "liberty" is one of the most abused and in this age is particularly abused in reference to children. In the name of liberty, children have been allowed to become tyrants in their own home circles, to be disobedient, lazy, and even insolent, and one naturally asks why this is so.

What is liberty? The Anglo-Saxon race is, of all peoples, the one to stand foremost for liberty of thought and action. The Magna Charta, the Petition of Rights, the Bill of Rights, and the Declaration of Independence, are all documents drawn up at different periods of the world's history by those representing the Anglo-Saxon people, to preserve and promote liberty and at the same time to check license. What these documents have given to us is, liberty to all men to obey one common law for the common good, and not liberty to put aside the law to gratify the will or expediency of the moment. King John's idea of liberty, and later on, that of Charles Stuart and George III, was that the king might do whatever he chose, regardless of the right or wrong of his actions and in utter disregard of the wishes and rights of the people. Obviously such a state of affairs means slavery for all concerned, and the most abject slave of all is the tyrant himself, who, refusing obedience to law, becomes a slave to his own unrestrained desires and rushes headlong to destruction.

In the chapter entitled "Glossary" in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy gives the following metaphysical interpretation of children (p. 582): "CHILDREN. The spiritual thoughts and representatives of Life, Truth, and Love. Sensual and mortal beliefs; counterfeits of creation, whose better originals are God's thoughts, not in embryo, but in maturity; material suppositions of life, substance, and intelligence, opposed to the Science of being." From this interpretation we see that, while God's children are spiritual thoughts and representatives of Truth and Love, who already have the freedom bestowed upon all God's children, still we have in our human experience to meet and deal with the mortal mind beliefs of children, which Mrs. Eddy refers to as "Sensual mortal beliefs; counterfeits of creation." Mortal mind, so called, is always wrong and is often devilish and cunning. Evil, whether it appears to speak through the child or through the adult, is always evil. Just as one would speak with authority to this so-called mortal mind with its belief of an adult, so should one speak with authority when it would use the child for disobedience, insolence, or impoliteness.

One hears it argued, however, that the adult is often unreasonable and arbitrary in his demands for obedience from children. Admitted that this is the fact and that parental and other authority in regard to children was often abused in the past, and in some cases is still abused, nevertheless in the present age it is much more common to find that it is the children who are arbitrary and unreasonable, because they have not been taught the true idea of obedience. The child of a free people rightly rebels against blind and unreasoning submission to personal domination, but when taught that true obedience is obedience to Principle, to the law of right doing, the child quickly grasps the truth and recognizes that true liberty is the liberty to do right, to obey God's law, and not the license to carry out the desires of the human will. Simultaneously he recognizes the fact, when explained in accordance with Principle, that to do wrong, to disobey the law of right, is not liberty but slavery to mortal mind beliefs.

Children of Christian Science parents should be the happiest, the most industrious, polite, and truly obedient of all children. In order to bring about this result, however, one must know, in place of the so-called human child, the intelligent idea of God's creation, who understands clearly what is right. A little girl of nine once asked her governess, "Why do you expect so much more from sister and me than you do from the girls we play with?" The answer, in substance, was this: "Because you are studying Christian Science and therefore better understand the difference between right and wrong than the other little girls with whom I come in contact." This child's face fairly beamed, as she said, "I see, and I am glad you expect so much from me." Of course she was glad, and so are all children glad and happy when they realize that some one not only expects the best from them, but believes them capable of expressing that same obedience and respect for law and order that one actually expects from an intelligent adult.

Let us be careful, therefore, that in our desire to give children that liberty which is man's God-given inheritance, we draw the line clearly between true liberty and license. On page 236 of Science and Health we read: "Children should obey their parents; insubordination is an evil, blighting the buddings of self-government."

"Thou art the man"

L. EMMETT SHERRED

ALMOST forceful story is to be found in the twelfth chapter of II Samuel, where the prophet Nathan narrates to David the parable of the poor man whose one little ewe lamb had been taken from him by a certain rich and powerful man to provide food for a traveler. It is not difficult to understand that the king was filled with indignation as he listened to this story, and he no doubt felt that here was an occasion to administer swift, kingly judgment, very likely waiting with impatience to learn the name of the offender. The king's reign had been very prosperous, and the exalted position which he occupied had enabled him to gratify almost every desire. He had traveled far in the pursuit of personal pleasure and aims since he, as the young shepherd, slew the lion with his bare hands, and, with only a sling as a weapon, had slain the giant Goliath; and perhaps without realizing the heinousness of his misdeed, had violated in the most flagrant manner the sacred family circle. This finally brought down upon him the condemnation of the prophet Nathan. With crushing directness, he said to the king, "Thou art the man."

The lesson contained in this story is worthy of deep study, and an application of the moral which it contains can be made to every one, it matters not what position he may occupy. The real selfhood of David always had been pure and perfect, as the indestructible image and idea of God, and David was no more a king in this respect than every other man who ever lived; but the fleshly mind, the only sinner, had brought upon David the scathing reprimand from Nathan. The counterfeit man, whom we seem to see, is not God's man, but a supposititious, carnal belief, misnamed man, which sins, lies, and practices all manner of wickedness simply because there is no truth in it. It is this counterfeit which deserves condemnation. In the Scriptures man constantly is admonished to put away evil and unclean thoughts, and rigorously to sacrifice the lusts of the flesh. This is not a task for a day, a year, nor for a lifetime, but one that will continue until all trace of mortal thought is destroyed. Until this is done, the charge of Nathan will apply just as surely and forcibly as it did in the days of David. When this fact becomes more fully and clearly understood there will be less lingering among the fleshpots of Egypt, and less delay in setting out on that journey toward the realization of the kingdom of heaven, which sooner or later must be undertaken by every one; but just so long as mankind bows to a belief in the flesh, whether it be of sickness or of lack, of ambition or of anger and vexation, just so long will mankind need the admonition, "Thou art the man."

That the attitude of David led him into conflict with the law of Truth, was exemplified in the stinging rebuke of Nathan; and it is no less the law to-day of inexorable retribution for all would-be violation of Principle. This by no means indicates that a man is forever doomed to punishment and to continual suffering for wrongdoing, but that evil thoughts and unclean desires of whatever nature must be destroyed as Truth replaces the suffering that is the inevitable concomitant of willful indulgence in evil. In Science and Health (p. 497) Mrs. Eddy has given us the clearest possible statement of what Christian Science teaches regarding the destruction of evil. The statement is as follows: "We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts." This will eventually disclose the fact that it is only the mortal belief which suffers, and which will continue to suffer just as long as any man allows the claim of the reality of matter to control him; while the real man is perpetually living in the sunshine of eternal Truth and can never suffer pain or experience sorrow of any kind.

It would seem that it has taken nearly twenty centuries for the world to begin to understand the truths of being so exactly and clearly set forth by Jesus, and it was not until the nineteenth century was well past its sixth decade that these life-giving truths were discovered by Mary Baker Eddy, after having been forgotten for more than sixteen hundred years. Christian Scientists date the new era of truth and love from 1866, when this sacred discovery was made, and from which time Mrs. Eddy consecrated herself to the service of mankind. Now, as the result of her unselfish labors, more and more are the people of the world reaping the benefit in better health and greater happiness and prosperity; and more and more is the world beginning to ponder upon these things. There are many indications that the former unreasoning pursuit of position, power, and riches, is beginning to give place to a deeper consideration of the things that are real.

The mesmeric spell of autocracy, from which the nations have recently struggled so mightily to free themselves, is but a phase of the one error which has enthralled the minds of mortals since the world began. To enumerate these phases would be to rewrite the history of mankind, but a single one may be cited here: Over a year ago an epidemic of fear swept over the country, resulting, among many other things, in the closing of churches, schools, and libraries in many if not all of the states. This was done at the behest of certain officials in authority, but no clear thinking person will say that the epidemic was abated one jot thereby; on the contrary, the state of fear was still further aggravated, and this again resulted in yet further extension of the epidemic.

One of the special phases of this punishment has been the placarding of homes where the disease was supposed to exist. Placarding, of course, means restricted activity, if not complete confinement, of those in the home; an infringement upon the liberty of the individual which, we have been taught, cannot take place without invoking the law of the land. A cause may, for the moment, appear to be a just one, and temporary regulations which may be established may appear to be for the common good, but whenever the will of an individual or of a class is used to fetter the thought and action of others, unless it has the sanction of law and orderly process behind it, that moment the old devil of autocracy raises one of its many heads.

The only true leadership is the attraction of divine Mind, which was revealed by Jesus and put into practice by Mrs. Eddy. As she says on page 102 of Science and Health, "There is but one real attraction, that of Spirit." For uncounted generations the world has been striving to free itself from the shackles of autocratic domination, these struggles having at last culminated in the gigantic conflict, one phase of which so recently has been brought to a close. It may be stated, however, that only since Mrs. Eddy made her momentous discovery has the world begun to realize that every conflict, every struggle, has its origin in the mortal mind; and that the vile brood of errors which have been instrumental in keeping the world in turmoil must first be destroyed before mankind can attain to that long sought desideratum, universal peace.

If the attitude of David merited severe censure, so does any yielding to the desire to rule, which seems to be one of the special phases of the manifestation of the fleshly, carnal mind, which Paul says is "enmity against God," and which originates in poverty of spirit as exhibited in mortal thought. Knowing that it has nothing permanent in itself, mortal mind constantly is striving to acquire what it does not possess, and which, seeming to have acquired, proves unsatisfying and thus leads to the attempt to secure other possessions, which if obtained prove equally disappointing. This is typical of mortal mind, which itself is without entity and, of course, being nothing can acquire nothing that is real and enduring.

How clearly attractive is that state of real being in which the man of God's creating lives, and who, knowing that he is the rightful possessor of every good thing, proceeds calmly on his way undisturbed, because for him there are no discordant conditions. He serenely follows his righteous inclinations regardless of any and all claims of mortal thought. Can anything in the universe be more attractive to the thoughtful individual than the certain knowledge that there is a living Principle which can at all times be relied upon to meet every condition which may arise? This Principle is so infinite and all-powerful that thought humbly bows before it in holy awe. Thus each one must prove for himself what Paul meant when he wrote, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

Encouragement

GERALDINE NELSON

ENCOURAGEMENT is just an ordinary, everyday word, and yet when analyzed it comprises and means a great deal. Encouragement is a positive quality and condemnation, an opposite, is a negative one, which never has accomplished, never will, and never can accomplish anything. Sometimes to gain some spiritual enlightenment one looks up definitions and is metaphysically helped thereby. Now encouragement serves to incite to action; it also supports and advances. Likewise one who encourages helps forward. The study of Christian Science means action, supporting and advancing good, and an increase in confidence is gained, therefore, which is an advancement toward the goal. Jesus was a man of action. "I must be about my Father's business," he said. Again, this study helps forward, for the simple reason that it cannot go backward, and it breaks down all barriers that would obstruct it on its journey.

In instructing, especially children, one learns how the positive quality encouragement when applied helps to bring good results, where the negative seemingly exercised will have exactly the opposite effect. Fear and lack of courage and of confidence to undertake a new task would prevent a talent from being unfolded. But one little word of encouragement given when needed will dispel these negative qualities, and with the unfoldment of the positive God-given abilities the talents will increase rightly. By working along the lines of encouragement character is being unfolded and a spiritual foundation is being laid.

Sometimes it only means just one little step forward to win a battle, though it may need many phases of encouragement dexterously applied to forward that step, and here patience, love, and simplicity must be practiced as attributes of Mind. Mrs. Eddy states in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 454), "Wait patiently for divine Love to move upon the waters of mortal mind, and form the perfect concept. Patience must 'have her perfect work.'" The children are ever ready to listen to something new; their readiness to accept truth in whatever form presented encourages their teachers. Their activity when intelligently directed leads to greater spiritual progress, where others with stubborn beliefs find it difficult to grasp the truth and if it were possible would gladly exchange their own for the simple thoughts of the child, who makes rapid strides toward the real. The poor wise man who delivered the city, mentioned in the Bible, must necessarily have used some simple statements of Truth, because the city was delivered by his work. The writer has gone forward by applying simple methods audibly or otherwise as the case demanded, thus breaking down a whole army of resentful thoughts.

A store where law and order reigns, goods attractively laid out, employees cheerfully waiting to serve, and the office where manager and clerks are busily engaged in honest work, the home where parents and children are united in activities, and the schoolroom where teachers and pupils are eager to impart and learn, these are all proofs of the operation of Principle, the one Mind, God. Therefore in every condition and all walks of life, every one needs encouragement, young and old alike, to go through this battle with erroneous beliefs. But this attribute of God, encouragement, is ever near if one will seek first "the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

"Thou hast no enemies"

JAMES C. THOMAS

THE man who understands the metaphysical fact that infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation is All-in-all has no enemies; and in knowing this, such a man is loving his enemies. The reason for this statement is that the very perception that divine Truth and its expression is all that really exists, is the surest way, in this human sense of things, of destroying any belief of evil. Such perception, if thoroughly established, not only helps the one who believes he has enemies to see that he has none, but aids in healing any belief of tendencies in others, seemingly aimed toward himself. And healing is truly loving. This is the divine way of rebuking and of loving any supposed enemies. The writings of Mrs. Eddy show this, one of her statements, on page 30 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," being: "If we have triumphed sufficiently over the errors of material sense to allow Soul to hold the control, we shall loathe sin and rebuke it under every mask. Only in this way can we bless our enemies, though they may not so construe our words." And in "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says (p. 9), "'Love thine enemies' is identical with 'Thou hast no enemies.'"

Meaning the same thing, although stated in words that seem to indicate something different, is the passage in the Bible, where God, the great I AM, speaks to the children of Israel through the understanding of Moses, and says: "Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. . . . But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries." Of course, this does not mean that God, divine Principle, is an adversary to anything that really exists or that He is a destroyer of men. It signifies merely the same truth that is contained in the statement quoted above from Science and Health; namely, that Principle and its effect constitutes all there is, and is infinitely good. This leaves no room for evil, or any belief in it, and any supposed wrong manifestation is thus destroyed. Hate and good cannot abide together in the same place. Good being the only presence, anything that would claim to be an opposite of good, or God, would be asserting itself to be more than all there is, and this is an impossibility. If one will apply this truth to any belief of hate or enmity or revenge that seems to be present in his thought, he will demonstrate that Principle is indeed the one cause and has never brought forth anything evil.

Considering another as an enemy is no more legitimate than believing that sickness is real. Healing does not proceed from such a condition of thought. One practicing Christian Science could not possibly expect to go on being of service to the world in healing what is wrong while at the same time having an untrue thought concerning another. Good, or holiness, or healing, is present in a man's experience only in proportion as evil is absent. God is, and is eternal only because of the everlasting fact that He contains no evil or element of destruction. If He knew any destroying force and so contained it, He who is infinite Mind would not be endless Life. What is true of God must be true of His image and likeness, the spiritual man. This man cannot have knowledge of any evil, such as hate, because he would then suffer destruction, and as he reflects the eternal, and so is eternal, he has no sense of untrue conditions. Now all this is the only basis from which the human being can work. Just as surely as he hugs to himself the slightest bit of wrong thinking, and believes that he has enemies who should be hated and bitterly condemned, he is inviting disaster—not to those who he supposes are his opponents, but to himself.

Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has put this in a very simple way on page 11 of "Miscellaneous Writings" in an article entitled "Love Your Enemies." She says: "I would enjoy taking by the hand all who love me not, and saying to them, 'I love you, and would not knowingly harm you.' Because I thus feel, I say to others: Hate no one; for hatred is a plague-spot that spreads its virus and kills at last. If indulged, it masters us; brings suffering upon suffering to its possessor, throughout time and beyond the grave. If you have been badly wronged, forgive and forget: God will recompense this wrong, and punish, more severely than you could, him who has striven to injure you. Never return evil for evil; and, above all, do not fancy that you have been wronged when you have not been."

Supply Made Manifest

FANNIE S. WILKINSON

THE law of supply is stated in Jesus' words: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." It is the law of compensation, the inevitable consequence of Love. True substance being Spirit, God, the understanding of this reveals the spiritual idea as a complete expression or manifestation of Principle, God. Since Principle includes in itself all good, the discernment of Truth leads to the perception that its idea is forever conscious of unlimited good,—is the forever expression of all-inclusive Mind.

A student of Christian Science, dimly perceiving this and realizing her need to be healed of a sense of limitation, followed this line of reasoning, willing to realize abundance only as divine Love made manifest or spiritual substance expressed. Daily, hourly, she strove to reflect the love of God in every thought and act, hungering for spiritual understanding that would not be satisfied with the crusts of material reasoning, and humbly desiring to receive only that which is the result of enlarged spiritual perception. The realization came that supply is unlimited, but our own limited sense of good prevents us from receiving abundance. The larger desire for spiritual good must precede the larger expression. Receptivity and gratitude for good already received open the way for further good to be manifested. This truth was glimpsed as the student pressed steadily onward, and yet the sense of limitation was not met. The growing demands of a little family of children were persistent.

Never a doubt presented itself as to the law of supply, but there was a thorough analysis of thought to discover what was unlike the Christ in her own thinking. Many were the stones uncovered which would impede progress along the path of spiritual growth,—selfishness, criticism, the love of approbation; still she pressed onward. The nothingness of personal worship under the guise of love had to be proved, and still further steps were necessary in the demonstration of true substance, for reliance on a probable inheritance of money had to cease. The path became smoother, but selfishness had still to be broken up more completely. About this time the student expressed the wish that she could know that abundance is a fact as readily as she knew without doubt that every actual need is always met. Like a glorious shaft of sunshine, uncovering and destroying the last obstruction to the realization of supply, came the revelation that for years of faithful, untiring service to her little ones she had with a great sense of duty given them every available comfort and care, met every actual need, but—a pause, a lifting of thought to the Christ-ideal—where had been the joy of giving? There had been dutiful serving, but the joyous, spontaneous, loving desire to bestow all abundance upon the little ones and the joy in their joy—it had been absent. Thus in her own experience every need was always met but abundance withheld itself. Yet then she knew: And the days of thy bondage shall be ended.

Thought was filled with light, love, and freedom from a sense of a selfhood apart from God, good. True substance dawned clearer than ever before. A few days later her husband informed her that he had been given a position with brilliant prospects and doubling his salary. She realized in humility the meaning of "bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it," and she joyously acknowledged that "God's promises are kept." The kingdom of God, the consciousness of Love and His righteousness, the rightness of true thinking, had been sought, and all these things in full measure had been added unto her.

HAZEL V. C. FALLS

WHILE struggling with a sense of doubt and fear, Quite forgetting Thou art ever near,
A still, small voice whispered in my ear:
For Thine is the power, and the glory.

With strength renewed I recommenced the strife,
Learning all is Spirit, Love, and Life.
There was peace where doubt and fear were rife;
For Thine is the power, and the glory.

Humbly I give all thanks and praise to Thee,
Rejoicing in the truth that makes us free,
For now and evermore my song shall be:
For Thine is the power, and the glory.

["True Prayer"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Jan. 12, 1920]

Christian Scientists realize that Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever lived, they realize that he possessed a clearer understanding of God and His perfect creation than any other person whom the world has ever known, and they accept him as the highest authority on all questions relating to spiritual, or real being. Accepting him as their authority, they accept also his statement, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," and know that in order to be worthy of the name of a Christian, they must, in some measure at least, repeat the works which he did. And to repeat these works they agree that it is vitally necessary that they should learn to pray as he prayed.

To one who has accepted, through the teachings of scholastic theology, a creed, a conventional or formal prayer, and who has been forced in the hour of distress to resort to the prayer of supplication, to this one, sooner or later, it must become apparent that any repetition of a combination of words, however beautifully formulated, or any expression of blind faith, superstition, or emotionalism, however earnestly voiced, is far from expressing the power that will repeat the works of Jesus. Turning to Christ Jesus' own words, the careful student will find that instead of indorsing or recommending the conventional prayer, Jesus in these words specifically denounced it: "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." On page 1 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes: "Thoughts unspoken are not unknown to the divine Mind. Desire is prayer; and no loss can occur from trusting God with our desires, that they may be moulded and exalted before they take form in words and in deeds." And we should never cease from turning with our whole heart to God in prayer, knowing that a sincere desire for good can never be lost, nor go unrewarded. The sincerity of our desire, however, is attested, not by human forms, emotionalism, or "much speaking," but through obedience, obedience expressed through the sincere effort to bring every thought and action into conformity with the law of God, as taught, lived, and demonstrated by Christ Jesus.

Again, while the student will find the gospels abounding with records of miracles and wonderful healings by the Master, yet he can hardly conclude that Jesus healed the sick, fed the multitudes, or walked on the water, through the exercise merely of a form of supplication, nor will he find throughout the gospels anything to indicate that Jesus expected his followers to heal by any such method. The student will find, however, that Jesus did say, in language unmistakable: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Let us now admit for a moment, that one taking Jesus at his word, and continuing in the way that he taught, should by a knowledge of the truth thus attained, find himself free from everything that is miserable and disagreeable, what then would be the occasion for the conventional prayer, or what then should one desire to plead for? That such a knowledge exists and is available here and now to every one, Jesus proved step by step for all mankind. The question may here arise: But how am I to know this truth and be free from my torment? In the wonderful chapter on "Prayer," the first chapter in Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, tells us exactly how we must proceed to know this truth and experience its healing power. On page 10 of this volume she writes, "Prayer means that we desire to walk and will walk in the light so far as we receive it, even though with bleeding footsteps, and that waiting patiently on the Lord, we will leave our real desires to be rewarded by Him;" and on page 15, we read: "In order to pray aright, we must enter into the closet and shut the door. We must close the lips and silence the material senses."

Here, then, is light for one step leading to the understanding of true prayer. And here also we have a test of our sincerity, for the demand to silence the material senses is an exacting one, and means just what it says. The human mind, however, resists this demand, and will accept almost any excuse to avoid the mental discipline so necessary to understand Truth. Why, it asks, should I give up the evidence of my senses? Christian Science shows that the so-called human mind deduces its conclusions wholly from the evidence drawn from the five physical senses, and these senses being utterly unreliable, any conclusions drawn from such testimony must forever remain entirely separate from reality, or Truth. Christian Science, then, shows plainly that the demand to silence the material senses exists because the testimony of these senses is never true, and because this testimony accepted as true leads to all the suffering known on earth. What is it that declares man to be sick, miserable, or sinful, that man is limited, confused, or afraid? What is it that declares man lacks the desire, the understanding, and the ability to speak the truth, to write the truth, or to do that which is right to do, in all circumstances? What is it but material sense testimony? What then is the remedy but to silence this false testimony with the spiritual facts of being?

Christian Science, repudiating all material sense testimony, accepts absolutely the allness of Mind and its idea as the only reality of being. The Christian Scientist understands that reasoning from this basis constitutes true prayer, and is the only real obedience to the command to "pray without ceasing." He realizes, therefore, that to be a Christian in the true sense of the word, and to pray, as Christ Jesus prayed, "with signs following," means something far more than form or creed, something far more than the mere repetition of words. The Discoverer of Christian Science has told us that the prayer which reforms the sinner and heals the sick is strict adherence to the teachings of Jesus, a consistent, progressive process of right thinking, or correct reasoning, from the basis on which Jesus reasoned when he said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Reasoning from this basis, the allness of Mind, and the nothingness of matter, a basis wholly apart from material sense testimony, honest students of Christian Science are to-day, in an ever increasing measure, repeating the works of Jesus.

[Robert G. Steel in Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald]

A concept of Christian service which includes the public denunciation of the honest religious beliefs of others as a necessary element of preaching the gospel, is strangely at variance with the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount. The revivalist who criticized Christian Science in a recent sermon, as reported in the Herald, not only fractured the Golden Rule but showed such dense ignorance of the subject as wholly to mislead his hearers.

In its theory and practice Christian Science has nothing in common with either theosophy or Buddhism, except those principles of morality and goodness which should be a necessary part of any religion. Christian Science is based solely on the Bible. It accepts the teachings of Christ Jesus in their entirety. It teaches the emulation of the Master in all his ways. Christian Scientists are therefore not only preaching the gospel but are successfully healing the sick, regenerating the sinful, and casting out evil in strict obedience to Jesus' commands.

There is hardly a city, hamlet, or countryside in the civilized world but has its witnesses to the beneficence of the healing mission of Christian Science. There are hundreds of thousands of these grateful people. Scores of thousands have been healed after all other methods have failed. No modern religious denomination has enjoyed so marvelous a growth, and no single agency in the world's history has made more earnest and sincere students of the Bible than has Christian Science. These results have been obtained without public criticism of the religious convictions of others. They have been achieved quietly without emotionalism or sensationalism.

Surely, such results as these cannot be the product of a "tool of Satan," as our critic avers Christian Science to be. Christ Jesus set up the standard by which his followers could be known for all time in that famous phrase, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." Christian Scientists are perfectly willing to be judged by that standard.

Of the clergy's attitude toward Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, its Discoverer and Founder, writes in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 55: "Now that the gospel of healing is again preached by the wayside, does not the pulpit sometimes scorn it? But that curative mission, which presents the Saviour in a clearer light than mere words can possibly do, cannot be left out of Christianity, although it is again ruled out of the synagogue."

[Harry K. Filler in the Matamoras (Ohio) Enterprise]

Readers of the Enterprise were doubtless more interested in reading the admission by a critic that "there is some good in Christian Science" than in reading anything he has yet attempted to say on that subject—and well they might be; for that admission was the only absolutely true thing he has yet said about Christian Science. His previous utterances, for the most part, have been based on conclusions he has drawn from reading what the critics and enemies of Christian Science have said about it. While such tactics cannot possibly do any harm to Christian Science, it does seem too bad that a greater effort is not being made on the part of all churches to make practical for mankind the gospel and teachings of our Savior, rather than to waste time in criticism of people and of religious beliefs differing from their own.

We most heartily agree with our brother that the good that is in Christian Science "is in the religion of Jesus Christ and his gospel." The only thing that differentiates Christian Science from other religious beliefs in this respect is that Christian Science lays more stress on the necessity of living and practicing the teachings of our Savior than does any other church in Christendom. A Christian Scientist possesses a working knowledge of Jesus the Christ and his gospel, which it is not possible for one not understanding Christian Science to possess.

We are frank to admit that the Christian Science church is not considered evangelical by the Federation of Evangelical Churches of Ohio and America; but if to be an evangelical church means to be "agreeable to, or in the spirit of, the gospel or teachings of the New Testament" (Webster's

New International Dictionary) then the Christian Science church is preeminently the evangelical church of America and the world. Its congregations are made up of healthy, happy people whose religion has transformed them physically, morally, and spiritually. The humblest members of this church are learning how to fulfill Christ Jesus' command to "preach the gospel" and "heal the sick." They can prove for themselves that proportionately as they gain the "mind of Christ" they are able to perform the works he promised that his followers should be able to perform. Thousands of persons throughout the world feel and realize that Mrs. Eddy has rendered them a service that is priceless. The demand for her writings was, and is, so great that there would naturally be a large income therefrom. She left her money to her church. It is being used, and will continue to be used, to spread throughout the earth the religion she founded.

Who shall say how much good is in Christian Science, those who do not know from experience of its Christly ministrations, or the multitudes of grateful and sincere men and women who are finding in this practical Christian teaching everything they could need, enabling them to find God and man's true relationship to Him?

Mrs. Eddy has said of the mission of Christian Science (Science and Health, p. 150): "To-day the healing power of Truth is widely demonstrated as an imminent, eternal Science, instead of a phenomenal exhibition. Its appearing is the coming anew of the gospel of 'on earth peace, goodwill toward men.' This coming, as was promised by the Master, is for its establishment as a permanent dispensation among men; but the mission of Christian Science now, as in the time of its earlier demonstration, is not primarily one of physical healing. Now, as then, signs and wonders are wrought in the metaphysical healing of physical disease; but these signs are only to demonstrate its divine origin,—to attest the reality of the higher mission of the Christ-power to take away the sins of the world."

[H. R. Colborne in The Sun, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia]

The headlines of an article in a recent issue of The Sun and the article itself call for some correction, otherwise your readers will be misled into the false conclusion that Christian Science is some sort of mesmerism, hypnotism, and enchantment, of which, as a matter of fact, it is the very antithesis.

Nowhere in the Bible nor in the teachings of Christian Science can there be found any support for the teaching that pain, suffering, or evil of any sort can be removed by the mere repetition of words. It is by the understanding of the truth expressed by words, and obedience to the Decalogue and the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount that real healing is accomplished.

Christian Science teaches that the world as God created it is spiritual, and is governed by His law in perfect harmony, and that it was the knowledge thereof and the utilization of that knowledge and obedience thereto which enabled Jesus, the Christ, to do his healing work, and has enabled and is enabling those comprehending that law to follow his example, according to the measure of their understanding and obedience, in healing the sick and casting out evils.

[Jethro Baker in Derby (England) Telegraph]

In the article, "The Outlook for 1920," in a recent issue, the following striking passage occurs: "The problem of Christian unity is itself a problem of reconstruction, and in this process of reconstruction a thorough study of the church of the first centuries is essential, for they supply the plan or model for the whole work." It will doubtless not have escaped your contributor, nor many of your readers, that the essential feature of the early Christian church was healing. Indeed, it was the direct command of the Master: "And these signs shall follow them that believe . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover," and "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." In other words, Christ Jesus made healing the sick a test of faith or discipleship. That these same "signs" and "works" are being accomplished by the Christian Science church to-day, no doubt, explains the popularity of Christian Science which is referred to in the same article, although theosophy and spiritualism have nothing in common with Christian Science. That the Christian churches of to-day are wakening to the demands of these times makes the present outlook distinctly one of promise.

Funds of The Mother Church

The following letters were sent to the Editorial Department by the Treasurer of The Mother Church, on April 10, 1920, with a request for publication in the Christian Science Sentinel:—

"Am inclosing my check for per capita tax for the present year. Am happy that I can make it more than I ever before felt able. My husband and I have been blessed in a fuller realization that divine Love supplies all our needs and this is a small token of my gratitude for Christian Science."

"Inclosed find check for twelve dollars to be applied on The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. It is given with gratitude and rejoicing for the blessings which have come to us through Christian Science."

"Through the teachings of our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I am learning more each day how to accept the good that God is ever giving, and that one way of expressing gratitude is by giving. Inclosed find check for twenty dollars, which is a small token of gratitude, to be applied to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. Last summer I had the pleasure of visiting the buildings and grounds of this Association for which I am very grateful."

"As an expression of gratitude for our many benefits in healings and the spiritual light as to God and man as Mind and idea, we inclose a check for ten dollars to be used for The Christian Science Benevolent Association."

"We are inclosing a check for forty dollars to be divided equally between The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund. We are sending this in deep gratitude for the many, many blessings received daily through Christian Science, and our hearts go out in love and thankfulness to God and to our dearly beloved Leader for this blessed truth."

"I am inclosing herewith check for six dollars; one dollar is for my per capita tax for the year, the other five I wish to have placed in The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, for the many blessings I have received since studying Christian Science. I am grateful for the wisdom and understanding, grateful for the happiness and harmony and peace that I find in being obedient to the law of God. I am grateful to our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for showing us the way. I have had many beautiful demonstrations. The proof of one Father came to me in the healing of my only son when he joined the navy. When I said, 'Thy will be done,' I could 'loose him and let him go.'"

The Federation of the World

One of the most curious traits of the human mind is manifested in its perpetual effort to counterfeit the divine. Thus it preaches a material good which is the very antithesis of the spiritual; it strives, through marriage, to produce the perfect man; and so, by means of the lust of conquest, it aims blindly and wildly at a material federation of the world, the realization of the brotherhood of man.

This last effort may be seen perpetually germinating in the minds of the empire builders, those political imitators of the architects of Babel. Darius and Xerxes dreamed the dream, as did Alexander and Timur; the Cæsars made a tremendous effort for its accomplishment, and even Paul was not above a natural pride in his Roman citizenship, and anticipated the "Civis Romanus sum" of Lord Palmerston by eighteen centuries. Perhaps the last European monarch to lay claim to world empire was the Burgundian who proclaimed the Pacific a Spanish lake and boasted that the sun never set on his dominions; for after this the saying of the Bourbon, even with all its implication, "There are no longer any Pyrenees," is a veritable anticlimax.

Really what all these men, without knowing it, were aiming at was the impossible. The only thing that is true about any lie is that no man can tell a lie about nothing, and therefore that a lie predicates the existence of a truth to lie about. Cæsar could no more build a universal empire on foundations of a belief in a material law of inharmony, than the builders of Babel could carry their walls to the stars, while ignoring the physical law of gravity, even though it had not yet been stated by Newton. It took Christ Jesus' understanding of the nothingness of matter to break the law of gravity, just sixteen centuries before Newton got it stated, and so to prove it to be an illusion of the human mind; and, just in the same way, it took his knowledge of the spiritual facts to proclaim the fatherhood of God, and so to wean Paul from his boast of his Roman citizenship to a pride in his citizenship in heaven, his conversation in heaven, as the King James translators rendered it in language which has become archaic.

The whole problem, of course, as is always the way with anything that concerns Christian Science, resolves itself into a question of a true application of Mrs. Eddy's teaching as to the unreality of matter; for as she writes, on pages 9 and 10 of "Unity of Good," "What is the cardinal point of the difference in my metaphysical system? This: that by knowing the unreality of disease, sin, and death, you demonstrate the allness of God. This difference wholly separates my system from all others." The League of Nations, whatever its faults and its shortcomings may be, is at least an effort to realize for humanity something of the brotherhood of man. This is no plea for its acceptance or rejection, nor is this the place nor time for such a plea. But it is a recognition of the fact that the conscience of the world is growing at least uneasy, and is, as yet blindly but still determinedly, rousing itself into an effort to close the door on the battle field, with a moral as well as a political key.

The unreality of matter, as explained in Christian Science, not only reduces matter to a phenomenon dependent for its existence, in accordance with the teaching of natural science, on a noumenon termed mind or energy, but reduces this noumenon, in turn, to a counterfeit of divine Mind, or spiritual energy, and thus insists upon the unreality of matter with a completeness never dreamed of by Plato, Berkeley, or Lord Kelvin. The only truth, then, about mortal mind or physical energy is that there exists divine Mind, a spiritual energy, whose true being alone makes possible the lie of the existence of the supposititious mortal mind or physical energy. Now, Christ Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Consequently, just in proportion as the individual succeeds in living and laboring in accordance with Principle, he realizes the truth about spiritual causation and is freed from a belief in the lie of a material counterfeit causation. Thus, if he has been imagining that the federation of the world can be brought about through the instrumentality of a human mind, itself instinct with inharmony, the preposterousness of the idea is exposed to him; and he begins to realize that this federation can only be brought about as men and nations consent to be in obedience not to so-called human laws but to spiritual law, not to men but to Principle. This was precisely what Christ Jesus meant when he insisted that men could not gather grapes from thistles, or that the same fountain brought not forth sweet water and bitter; and it is exactly what Mrs. Eddy means when she writes, on page 277 of Science and Health: "Natural history presents vegetables and animals as preserving their original species,—like reproducing like. A mineral is not produced by a vegetable nor the man by the brute."

Properly understood, then, the federation of the world is the atonement of the world. It is, in short, the extension to the whole body of the individual's demonstration of his at-one-ment with Principle. "I and my Father," Jesus said, "are one": Principle and the reflection of Principle is everywhere inseparable. This is the actual and eternal spiritual fact concerning which the political ideal of the federation of the world is the supposititious counterfeit. It is obvious, therefore, that until the human mind is purified from its animality, self-seeking, and jealousy, a true world federation is an impossibility. An "International" built upon class consciousness is, in its very nature, a contradiction in terms. Only in proportion as the carnal mind gives place to the Mind of Christ, can the at-one-ment of man with Principle be demonstrated; and, in just the same way, only in the exact proportion in which mankind learns to walk in the footsteps of the Christ, and to curb and destroy its enmities and passions, can it reach its political at-one-ment, the federation of the world.

Readiness to Write

"Write the vision," Habakkuk was told by divine inspiration, "and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it." The healing wholeness of Truth is always plain and simple to the sincere seeker. Though it may be stated in an endless variety of language, the story of what the divine Mind knows is forever the same. True intelligence shows itself as right action in the entire experience of the real man. This is the spiritual fact which Christian Science reveals in place of any seeming. The proof of it in all manner of ways is joyous living. Through long words or short words, phrases that one has to study with care or sentences that one accepts without question, this idea expressing Principle is all that can stand out as real. Each reader, therefore, is entitled to look for actual intelligence manifest, and for nothing else. Sincerely to seek the truth is to desire the complete understanding of what good is, regardless of any old prejudices. Together, then, the one who reads and the one who writes must rejoice that infinite Mind alone can make anything clear.

In these days, when a whole world is taking the pen in hand to write in one way or another, it is more important than ever to know the truth about expression. Expression of intelligence is really easy, whether it be in writing or in any other activity. If it were really hard to manifest Principle, then God, to that extent, would not be good. The very goodness of righteous living lies in the simplicity of genuinely conscious being that is altogether apart from any supposition of matter. When one knows that he is conscious as the effect of one infinite Mind which is the only cause, he is glad just to be alive. Hence his whole living unfolds as the expression of Mind untouched by the dream of materiality. By right reasoning, fearless acting, straightforward speaking, and clear writing, one relying on intelligence proves that the way of spiritual happiness is easier than any illusion of an opposite. Such a one knows what he knows, undisturbed by any seeming turmoils of mortality. All of his doing is the replacing of false beliefs with the truth. The vigorous humility which acknowledges Principle's unerring operation as the only actual doing is full success. As Mrs. Eddy declares in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 150), "Pliny gives the following description of the character of true greatness: 'Doing what deserves to be written, and writing what deserves to be read; and rendering the world happier and better for having lived in it.' Strive thou for the joy and crown of such a pilgrimage—the service of such a mission."

Writing, therefore, to be a service to God and to mankind, must represent doing. It must manifest the same Principle that has been and is manifested in daily right living. Infinite Principle with its unlimited application is the one boundless subject. From the knowing of how divine intelligence produces right action, the presentation of this truth for the benefit of all unfolds spontaneously. Sincerity is the first requisite in giving expression to good. Indeed, without sincerity there is nothing that can properly be termed expression. In consecration to Principle alone will one find writing easy. Each one, however, is free to prove this consecration for himself, if he will, and as he does prove it, his calm but sure joy is encouragement to the many. Making his whole experience demonstration of divine wisdom, he is glad for every opportunity wisely to tell the story of God's goodness. On page 458 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy tells us that "Divinity is always ready." It is, in fact, free readiness, emanating from the divine Mind, that brings out the healing wholeness of Truth in the writing of an article or even of a friendly letter. The truly ready writer is the one who alertly knows that every word must heal.

Suppression is, of course, just a form of fear. In place of any mortal sense of suppression or depression, God gives full expression. Activity in accord with Principle never can be suppressed. Any kind of trouble whatever is a belief that activity can be limited. The remedy is the knowing, with sheer joy, that the divine consciousness is ever conscious of action that is infinite. Every sort of human condemnation, whether of the supposed self or of what is supposed about some one else, subsides before the glad giving of expression to divine intelligence. This is the giving that is worth while. It demonstrates Truth. The spirituality of right action proves that immortal Life is good here and now, without limit. Every condition of mortal seeming must be replaced by Principle and its idea. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 570 of Science and Health, "Millions of unprejudiced minds—simple seekers for Truth, weary wanderers, athirst in the desert—are waiting and watching for rest and drink. Give them a cup of cold water in Christ's name, and never fear the consequences. What if the old dragon should send forth a flood to drown the Christ-idea? He can neither drown your voice with its roar, nor again sink the world into the deep waters of chaos and old night. In this age the earth will help the woman; the spiritual idea will be understood. Those ready for the blessing you impart will give thanks. The waters will be pacified, and Christ will command the wave." This giving of the cup of water is, of course, infinite. In one case it may mean writing; in another, intelligent speaking; or in still another it may mean silent right reasoning. In any case, however, it involves first of all the knowing that activity in accordance with Principle is the only manifestation of divine Love. Being divinely created, this activity is absolutely irrepressible. It is all that can ever be truly understood as the actual experience of the divine Life. The knowing of this is the eternal vision which must be written and rewritten so plainly "that he may run that readeth it."

Current Notes

CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.—A copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was presented to the University Library, in June, 1891, by one of Mrs. Eddy's earlier students; but so far as we know, Christian Science was not studied in Cambridge till the winter of 1895, when it was brought to the notice of a family in the University through the healing of a near relation in Scotland. In March, 1898, two students and their children met in a college lodge, Sunday by Sunday, to read the Lesson-Sermon; before long others joined. So began the little service which has grown slowly but steadily into the present church.

In the autumn of 1899, the weekly collections provided the means of hiring one of the Victoria assembly rooms, and the first public service was held on November 26. In 1901 uncertainty of tenure led to a move to a house on Emmanuel Street, where they continued to meet until 1911, when the house was pulled down to provide a site for the extension of Emmanuel College. Once more a forward move became necessary. The only home that could be found after diligent search and inquiry was the present church building, and here the first service was held in July, 1911.

Ever since 1911 a fund had been gradually accumulating, from offertories in church and other donations, and bit by bit the mortgage had been paid, until at length in December, 1918, the entire sum had been raised, and it was possible to dedicate the building free from debt to the service of Christian Science, October 19, 1919.

DURBAN, NATAL, SOUTH AFRICA.—The reading room is increasingly fulfilling its mission as the center of the distribution work, meeting the needs of inquirers by the sale of literature, and providing facilities for quiet study. This good work is being continued during three evenings of each week. The lending library has also accomplished much good work, the twenty-seven copies of Science and Health have been in continuous use. Three extra copies have now been added to meet the growing need. There are also forty-two lending copies of our Leader's other works available for borrowers. A grand work is being accomplished through the Distribution Committee, which consists of twenty-six members. The literature is distributed by seventeen workers, each having a separate town district; also six distributors for the "marked copy and interested readers" section; and one distributor for postal work. The two railway station boxes, each in charge of a distributor, are continuing to prove most excellent channels, having attracted many inquirers to the reading room and services. Much more literature could be taken by these boxes, if available.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Second Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Charles E. Heitman, who said in part:—

If there is one vanity more deeply rooted than another in the so-called mind of mortals, it is that of self-sufficiency; and in spite of the repeated declarations of Christ Jesus that of himself he could do nothing, but that it was the Father that worked in him, and the equally plain statement of the apostle Paul that our sufficiency was of God and not of ourselves, yet the fact remains that we cling to the belief of personal power, until the force of circumstances compels us to seek help from a source beyond ourselves.

It is under such circumstances that most of us have turned to Christian Science with the hope that it would enable us to gather up the scattered ends of a life made unhappy by seeming failure or some phase of sickness, sorrow, or sin. I know from experience that just in the measure that we turn to Christian Science with a whole heart, willing to be obedient to its teachings, willing to lay down our erroneous sense of personal pride and power, and willing humbly and gratefully to acknowledge God as the one infinite source of all power, just in that measure will we receive untold blessings in the form of health, happiness, and success.

PITTSBURGH, PA. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Emily F. Johnson, who said in part:—

Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." This truth, as understood in Christian Science through the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy, has been the liberator of thousands who were in bondage to sickness, sin, want, and woe, and who, as a result of its practice, are now enjoying health and happiness in the spiritual peace which they have found.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF. (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by J. W. McAdam, who said in part:—

The people of the world to-day are feeling the need of a practical religion; they are reaching out for that which will protect and provide for them and those they love; comfort them in sorrow; heal their poverty and sickness; and bring peace to mind and body. Christian Science shows us how this great need may be supplied, and to-day there are thousands of living witnesses to its efficacy. It heals by that law of God which Christ Jesus taught and demonstrated so clearly and which he commanded his followers to teach and demonstrate.

GEELONG, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA (Society).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by John W. Rutherford, who said in part:—

The Discoverer of Christian Science and author of its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy, states on page 406 of that book, "The Bible contains the recipe for all healing." That being so, every one possessing a Bible is also the owner of that wonderful recipe, if he knows it. Here I may say that, although I have possessed a Bible for very many years, it is quite recently that I learned of the recipe; but whether one knows it or does not know it, the revelator of Christian Science demonstrated that fact long ago, the proofs of which are constantly accumulating, so that in almost every city, town, or village of the civilized world witnesses may be found who will testify to it.

On a memorable occasion Jesus gave some certain instructions to his apostles. He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel," and on another occasion he said, "Heal the sick." This long neglected function of practical Christianity, the healing of the sick in the way Jesus taught, is again being brought within the reach of suffering humanity by the teaching of Christian Science. To quote again from the textbook from page 143, "The sick are more deplorably lost than the sinning, if the sick cannot rely on God for help and the sinning can."

WATERTOWN, S. DAK. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Miss Brownie Mather, who said in part:—

The present time seems to be full of turmoil and unrest, and mankind generally has never been so anxious for the truth as to-day, nor has there ever been a time when the truth was so sorely needed as it is at the present time. Christian Science brings a message of the truth which makes free, and it is so practical that even a little child can understand and apply it.

Watertown News.

PARSONS, KAN. (First Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by William E. Thomasson, who said in part:—

Throughout the world to-day there seems to exist a state of confusion and unrest. A spirit of greed, envy, jealousy, and hatred seems to have prevailed until the whole world is in a state of chaos, the cause of which undoubtedly is wrong thinking. The Bible tells us that the root of all evil is the love of money, and we might well add, of all things material; and it commands that we love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our soul, and with all our mind, and that we love our neighbor as ourself.

Christian Science has returned to mankind the "pearl of great price," or the healing element of our sacred Scriptures, and is therefore offering to the world to-day the only possible relief for the situation; that is, the spiritual illumination of the Scriptures which creates a desire for spiritual wealth—and God's supply is inexhaustible.

STONEHAM, MASS. (auspices Reading).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Roy M. McCloud, who said in part:—

The quest for happiness has been the chief interest of all men since the beginning of history. Many think that this may be attained through material wealth, pleasure, power, or fame, but these are found to bring only a temporary sense of happiness; for none of these can give consolation in sorrow, insure a harmonious environment, nor heal physical pain and suffering. Neither do they give an insight into the really deep things of life. But it has been proved in the experience of many that Christian Science studied and practiced can and does do all these things.

BEDFORD, IND. (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by George E. Cananthers, who said in part:—

Christian Science is always knocking at the door of every individual consciousness, asking for admission, and if we are willing to lay aside every prejudice, give up our preconceived opinions, and open the door of our thought to this healing truth about God and man, there is no one that need remain in bondage to sickness, sin, or sorrow.

WAUSEON, OHIO (Society).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by L. H. Deyo, who said in part:—

Christian Science has come to this age teaching that true religion is the practice of the Christianity which Jesus taught and practiced, healing alike the sick and the sinning, involving no element of material worship, leading its followers into the realm of pure spiritual thinking.

EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Alfred B. Gilbert, who said in part:—

Christian Science comes teaching the same simple, lovable truths about God and man that Jesus of Nazareth taught and practiced centuries ago with such wonderful healing results. Humanity can never really love God while believing that He is the source of all the pain and sorrow of life. It is only when we learn that the nature of God is wholly good that it is possible to understand the true nature of man. It is spiritual understanding, not material knowledge, that enables man to gain true healing, and Christian Science has made this possible again in our own time.

Testimonies of Healing

With love I write my testimony for the Sentinel, to the glory of God who with loving care has guided me to eternal life.

In 1912 I became sick very suddenly, and all the action of the body seemed to stop. At that time I had no understanding of Christian Science, but was just beginning to be interested in it. The morning I became so ill, I seemed to be passing on, but got over the attack and told my sister I was sure that God had not sent anything like that to me, but had helped me to overcome it. In a short time after, another attack came, harder than the first. A practitioner was sent for and I experienced great help, although these attacks recurred for some time. I am surely a living witness that death was overcome with the understanding of Life as God. Although there were many battles to be fought before complete victory was won on the side of God, good, the attacks yielded to the power of Truth until they ceased to have dominion over me. I feel that I can never be thankful enough to the practitioner who so faithfully and patiently worked for me, also to my friends that stood by me in the hour of need.

Christian Science has surely proved to be a blessing and help at all times, both for me and my family, for it is always available in our daily living and can be applied to all our needs, through the understanding of God gained from reading Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy, together with the Bible, and also other Christian Science literature. Many problems have been worked out through entire reliance on God as the only power and presence. Blood poisoning, high fever, colds, pain, Spanish influenza have yielded to the power of Truth. Christian Science was also a great help for our cattle while we had a farm. Surely it is true, if Christian Science is good for one thing, it is good for everything. This has been proved to me, and I am thankful to God for all the good He has bestowed on them that trust Him; also to each active Scientist who is helping to bring health and harmony to a needy world.

Mrs. J. P. Swanson, Ryssby, Sweden.

It is with deep gratitude for Christian Science that I am prompted to give a testimony of a permanent healing I received about nine years ago; it is a happy change from eighteen years of weak, sinking spells, nervous headache, and quinsy every winter. I also had had inflammatory rheumatism twice, being confined to my bed for nine weeks the last time. When I began to recover I had found myself in a constant state of fear of a return of the pain, this fear culminated in nervous prostration, which left me a complete mental and physical wreck. At this point my husband took me to several sanatoriums. After being in the last one for a very short time I was taken seriously ill. I was in an unconscious state for five days. My case was pronounced absolutely hopeless by the doctors.

My husband was sent for and at his arrival decided to try Christian Science, so he called in a practitioner and brought her to see me. The doctor was not giving me any medicine. He said that there was nothing they could give me as the case was hopeless. After five days, I regained consciousness and started to get better. Then dropsy appeared but even this added condition did not keep me down very long. I grew steadily better and in a very short time my husband was able to remove me to the practitioner's home, where I remained for about three weeks. It was while there that I learned to know the truth about God and man. My healing was so complete, thorough, and permanent, that I have never had the slightest temptation to use material remedies of any kind since that time. Whenever little ailments arise, we apply our own knowledge of Christian Science and we have always received the help needed with the exception of a few times when we have had to ask for help from practitioners. Their work has helped us to see more and more that there is no light so great as the light of Christian Science if we will but use it.

Among the demonstrations we have had in our home, I wish to mention one of the healing of my son. Coming home from college he went to work in the harvest field, and not being accustomed to hard work, and the weather being very hot, he was overcome with the heat, and became paralyzed in his lower limbs. Christian Science help was immediately obtained and in two weeks he could walk almost as normally as before.

For many years I belonged to a denominational church and I attended for a time after my healing, but the time came when I had to take a firm stand for Christian Science. It has given us a new idea of God and man, a right idea that we did not have before. In our former religion we were taught that God sends sickness and suffering, but we now know that to be a false doctrine. Christian Science has taught us that God knows no evil, does not cooperate with it in any way or for any purpose, therefore He does not send it to His children. I feel grateful to God, and to Mrs. Eddy who by her consecrated life has enabled us to enjoy this great truth.

(Mrs.) Sarah K. Hoffman, Radcliffe, Iowa.

The preservation of human life is not the highest ideal of Christian Science. If it were, none could have received more than I. In November, 1911, I was taken to a hospital and operated upon for tubercular peritonitis. I had had pleurisy in the preceding summer, and after returning to college in the autumn it was only a short time before the more severe trouble presented itself.

The physicians pronounced my case hopeless and stated it was a matter of from one to three months. One lung was said to be nearly destroyed, and in addition my heart was seriously affected and the main trouble of peritonitis was supposed to be worse than any of the others. The doctors were among the very best available, one being a specialist on tubercular diseases. He considered my condition so hopeless that he would not admit me to a sanatorium of which he had charge. I was taken home from the hospital, and a friend who had been healed of a cancer persuaded me to try Christian Science.

I sought help of a practitioner but did little to help myself. Even so I improved perceptibly and the family physician, who continued to make friendly calls, stated a healing process was going on in my lungs he could not understand. He did not know I was having Christian Science treatment although he had said medicine would be of no avail. I continued treatment for several months and then stopped. Later I took the work up again, this time applying myself to the task, as well as asking a practitioner for help. My recovery was rapid, and in ten weeks complete. I was then doing all kinds of work on the farm at home and working as long as any one.

Since then I have been examined by physicians several times when it seemed necessary to convince others of my health. One of these times was on going to camp. Uniformly there has been nothing wrong found with me physically. Christian Science has helped me many times since then to realize my birthright, and although there are still some mental imperfections to be overcome it is with confidence and patience one is able to look forward. This testimony is written in the hope that some one else may be helped even as I have been.

I feel very grateful for what Christian Science has done for me. After twenty-three years of suffering, during which time I had the best of medical help, I found myself in a most hopeless condition. I was suffering from Bright's disease, rheumatism, bronchitis, nervous headache, and heart trouble. I have been twice in the infirmary and the doctor said I had come too late to be cured and there was nothing for me but to stay in bed always. I felt life was not worth living. I went to church or chapel when I could walk so far, but I got no comfort. I had a severe attack of bronchitis that kept me in bed six weeks, and I was only well for a few weeks when it returned worse than ever. It was Wednesday afternoon, and I asked a friend if she could tell me the doctor's hours at night, when suddenly the thought came to try Christian Science.

I went to the Christian Science church that night, and I shall never forget the beautiful service. After the service I was introduced to a practitioner, who talked to me very lovingly and asked me to see her the next day. I went home that night with hope in my heart, and slept nine hours, something I had not done for a long time. I can never be grateful enough for the healing I have had, but I am much more grateful for the spiritual understanding of God I am gaining every day. It seems such a wonderful change to me after so many years of misery. I am thankful to God for this knowledge, to Mrs. Eddy, and to the practitioner for helping me to find the way to Life and Love and peace. I am also grateful for Science and Health. It has given me a better understanding of the Bible. I find great joy in reading the Christian Science periodicals and other Christian Science literature. I have had many demonstrations of divine Love, and my hope is to go on with this beautiful study so as to help others to this healing Truth and Love.—(Mrs.) MARY ELIZABETH WILLIAMSON, Manchester, England.

It is with deepest gratitude that I acknowledge this Truth and blessings from the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I was for years a member of a denominational church, and tried to reconcile the teaching and practice with the teaching of Christ, but found it contradictory and unsatisfactory. Later, after the long illness and death of a loved sister, who was also a member of the church, and a lovely Christian, I turned away, feeling there was something wrong when the prayers of minister and church, the devoted reading and prayers of a good mother, doctors and a specialist all failed to help or even bring relief from pain, and recourse to a little brown pill proved more efficacious and stilled the suffering.

I wondered and pondered on the healing of individuals and the multitudes by Christ, and I was thoroughly tired of the empty forms and creeds that preach patience and submission to sufferers as God's will and law. I read much, and tried to find something to satisfy the longing and solve the problems of life, and was rewarded, years after, by Christian Science, which I accepted at once, and proved before the end of the month, by being healed of several minor complaints, severe sick headaches, neuralgia of the heart, and sore throat. An attack of bronchitis in my little grandchild, when coughing was distressing and incessant, was stopped quickly, and she slept quietly all night. Thus I proved that I had found the "pearl of great price" and I studied the wonderful little book which is pointing the way and leading us into the promised kingdom, when all things shall be added unto us. In the years following I have had many healings. Rheumatism, lumbago, and throat trouble were overcome quickly.

I must mention here a bad fall I had, when I tripped, falling forward and striking my face on the pavement. A lady near helped me up. She thought I was badly hurt, and wished me to go into her home nearby. My nose was bleeding, also my lips. I thanked her, but declined to go in, and went on, did what I started out to do, and returned home, going immediately to my room and looking in the glass. The swelling had gone down and there was not a mark. I then went to my daughter's and asked her to look closely at my face. She did so, and then asked why I had made such a request. I told her, and again she looked my face over; not a mark or scratch could be seen, and no discoloration followed.

These are only a few of the good things "added" unto us, and the understanding through Christian Science of the ever presence of divine Love is a constant cause for gratitude.

About eighteen years ago Christian Science was presented to me. At that time I greatly needed to know a God of love, as my belief in God as understood by the denominational churches had been rudely shaken. The thought given me was, "God is Love, and God is the only power." Those words remained with me. I could not forget them. Upon returning to my home in Juneau, Alaska, the prevalent trouble, neuralgia, returned and I was in greater pain than I had ever been before. My first thought was the old remedy, morphine tablets. I took all I dared to take and was walking the floor, when suddenly the above quoted words recurred to me. I stood still and said aloud, "If these words are true, God can send no pain, no suffering. I will try it and see." I then commenced affirming that God is Love and the only power, over and over again. After about an hour the pain ceased entirely and I went quietly to sleep. I have never had a touch of neuralgia since. When I awoke next morning and found myself perfectly well, no soreness, no intermittent twinges as formerly, I knew that the words spoken by my friend were true and that underlying them there must be some law, some power, which I must try and understand.

Later, upon returning to Seattle to live, I commenced the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and step by step have I proved this to the extent of my understanding. Having had a chronic belief of lack and limitation I have seemingly made very slow progress along that line but there has been so much encouragement and so many proofs other ways of the ever present and governing law of Mind that I have been able to overcome discouragement and doubt. It would take too long to enumerate all the blessings which have come to me and mine through Christian Science. All manner of physical ailments, accidents, discord, and limitation have been healed.

As an illustration of the protecting care of infinite Love I will relate an incident which caused me to rejoice and be exceeding glad. From girlhood I had had a dread of the service of legal papers. A number of years ago the mortgage on our home was to be foreclosed. I had such a dread of having ejection papers served on me that for days I did not answer the bell without first looking to see who was there. Meanwhile I was trying to know that all these terrifying fears which were holding me in bondage could not and did not come from God, good. One morning after having had a period of greater enlightenment than usual I answered the door and found the much dreaded deputy. My fears had vanished; I invited him in. He made no effort to serve the papers, stating that he had come for that purpose but would not serve them as he felt certain that if I would call upon the mortgagor time would be extended and that I might be able through the medium of a quitclaim deed to get something, if only a little, out of the transaction. After a pleasant and wholly harmonious conversation the deputy withdrew, leaving me with the feeling that I had been standing on holy ground. Suffice it to say, I followed his advice, was given ample time to find another location, and a reasonable cash amount was received which enabled me to move without contracting any obligation. Truly if we abide under the shadow of the Almighty no plague can come nigh our dwelling.

I am profoundly grateful to those friends who have so lovingly and patiently aided me in my journey out of materiality. While the way has been narrow and rugged and my advance seemingly slow, yet I can honestly say in the words of our well loved hymn, "Mother's Evening Prayer," by Mary Baker Eddy (Poems, p. 4):—

O make me glad for every scalding tear,
For hope deferred, ingratitude, disdain!
Wait, and love more for every hate, and fear
No ill,—since God is good, and loss is gain.

If one should read this testimony of gratitude, who, like the writer, seems to be ascending slowly, let him be reminded that one day is as a thousand years with God and that if we wait and faint not we shall certainly receive our reward. In conclusion I want to express appreciation for Article VIII, Section 14 in the Manual of The Mother Church, which instructs us that it is a duty and a privilege to subscribe for the Christian Science periodicals, Journal, Sentinel, Monitor, and Quarterly, without which no student of Christian Science can afford to be.—(Mrs.) Alma D. Bixby, Pullman, Wash.

I take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. In the fall of 1905 I went to work for a friend who was a Christian Scientist and always kept his books and literature at his office. At first I thought I should not read his Science and Health as it must only be intended for those who believed in Christian Science, and being brought up in a denominational church I was far from taking any stock in the teachings of Science. One day I became possessed with a desire to read the book, so asked his permission to read it, which was gladly given. It was about three o'clock in the afternoon when I commenced to read, and I became so absorbed in it that he had to remind me twice when it was time to go to supper. After that, every spare moment I had was spent in studying Science and Health.

Previous to this time, I had suffered for years with what was called chronic stomach trouble, for which I had been doctoring for a long time, with only temporary relief, although I was on diet all the time. Before I had finished reading Science and Health through once, I was completely healed, and since that time I have eaten and drunk anything I cared to, without any signs of a return of my former condition. I was also healed of the tobacco and liquor habits, of profanity, and many other wrong conditions. My wife and little girl have received untold blessings from our understanding of this blessed Truth. My little girl will be twelve years old in about three months and has never taken a drop of medicine.

For these many blessings I am very thankful, but what seems the greatest blessing to me is the satisfactory understanding of the Bible we get when studied in connection with our textbook "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I can now understandingly and truly thank God for those blessings of Life, Truth, and Love. I am also very grateful to our dear Leader for bringing this wonderful truth to us, which when universally understood and practiced means freedom for all.

N. D. Campbell, Halliday, N. Dak.

After spending the greater portion of seven years with doctors and in hospitals, due to paralysis, I gladly turned to Christian Science about five years ago. The first lesson I remember reading from The Christian Science Quarterly contained the statement from the Bible, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The thought at once came clearly to me that when I really did know the truth I would be free to walk. From that time on I spent many hours daily in earnest study of the Bible and Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

One evening a few months later I did realize this truth, and knew I was a perfect idea of God. The healing was perfect with the exception of a difference of one inch and a half in the length of the so-called paralyzed leg. Five years have passed, but a few weeks ago one evening when starting out to the mail box the thought came to me like a sunbeam through a windowpane, that I could not walk any way but upright, having been created by the One who created all things perfect. The healing took place immediately, and I can now walk and stand with ease, which has been an unknown possibility since I was eleven years old.

I am indeed grateful for the small knowledge I have of this wonderful truth given us by Mrs. Eddy and also to all who have helped me to understand it. The most I can say is that when rightly applied it has never failed to heal mentally or physically.

(Miss) Alberta C. Fielder, W. Philadelphia, Pa.

It is now more than four years since I began the study of Christian Science, and both my thought and my outward circumstances have wonderfully changed. Before that date I was much interested in new thought, theosophy, and spiritualism, but though I found some of these ideas stimulating and vaguely beautiful, they gave me no understanding of how to demonstrate harmony here and now. An attempt I made to gain material advancement along "new thought" lines proved a failure, leaving me in a depressed, confused state of mind, full of self-distrust and beliefs of limitation. Though I did not turn to Christian Science for physical healing, I have not had any experience of sickness since I began to study it; people often remark on my more vigorous appearance, and various trifling ills have disappeared.

I appreciate more and more the wonder of the work Mrs. Eddy was enabled to accomplish. In my own case, Christian Science has made the Bible a practical help to me and given me new confidence in prayer. It has taken the sting from disappointment and filled the future with hope. It has turned tasks and problems into opportunities and privileges. It has taught me better how to love. I think the better understanding of God as Love is to me the greatest of the blessings I have received through Christian Science, but I should like also to say what a revelation the teaching concerning Spirit as substance, and experience in Christian Science, has been to me. My former thought about the things of Spirit was that they were elusive, mysterious, uncertain. Naturally, such beliefs were evidenced in an emotional, secretive, unbalanced, unpractical temperament. Through Christian Science I am beginning to learn how one may become calm, exact, orderly, and reliable by right thinking. I have gradually become aware of a great new force at work in my life and my affairs. In some ways it has seemed a disruptive force, but I see now how all things have worked together for good, and harmony has been made manifest in ways altogether unexpected.

I have had few opportunities of meeting Christian Scientists or attending services; but I have had Science and Health and the other authorized literature, and these have been beyond price. Often when reading some article in the periodicals or pamphlets or some testimony which was specially helpful, I have longed to be able to thank the writers. I do so now, and I hope I shall prove by my life my gratitude to God and to all who have helped me.—(Miss) JEAN M. M. CUNNINGHAM, Port Patrick, Wigtownshire, Scotland.

Owing to the many blessings which have come to me since becoming a student of Christian Science, I wish to express my gratitude that others may gain the help and peace of this beautiful truth which Jesus taught and demonstrated, which our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, rediscovered a half century ago, and by which so many have been brought out of the wilderness of mortal laws and illusions into the land of happiness and peace.

I am so grateful for the knowledge that I have of our Father-Mother God who is ever present, as infinite Life, Truth, and Love. It makes no difference how long we have looked to other gods for peace and happiness, when we at last turn to Him in the right way for comfort, He shows unlimited mercy and goodness to all His children.

From childhood I suffered from acute indigestion, chronic bowel difficulty, and many disorders. As I grew older the doctors said I must be operated on for appendicitis, but I did not consent to an operation. About two years before being led to Christian Science I had a very bad fall, injuring my spine, but refused to consult a doctor concerning this. I went on in this manner until life was becoming a burden. My right limb began troubling me a great deal, so I consented to see a doctor and was told that the end of the vertebral column was broken and turned to the right, causing my right limb to become partly paralyzed. The doctor advised me to have local treatments and if I did not get better to have an operation. I accepted her verdict but continued to suffer and grow worse, both physically and mentally, until I finally decided to seek help in Christian Science.

I had borrowed a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy some months before asking the aid of the last physician, and had returned it with the thought that it was all right perhaps for some people, but I did not feel that it could help one in my condition. I went to the Sunday service, however, several months later, and asked to be referred to a practitioner, but was told I could choose one from the Journal and I would be led to the right one. On calling a practitioner I found her unable to see me then and was told to call later, but feeling depressed at that time, I grew impatient and did not ask for further help until two weeks later. On calling for help the second time I chose another practitioner and I shall never forget the wonderful sense of peace and happiness which came to me after the first few treatments. After about two months' reading I was able to lay aside my glasses, and I have had better eyesight than before, for which I am very grateful. I believe, if I remember correctly, that I was relieved of all these other disorders in about eight treatments, and I am enjoying perfect health and happiness to-day.

I am also deeply grateful for the help and protection which was given me during the influenza epidemic. I was called on to take care of patients in one of the emergency hospitals during this period and my thought was so clear that I was not only able to help myself, but those about me, and to do the work that was set before me. This experience meant very much to me, for it taught me that we never lack intelligence or strength when we rely on God. When I felt myself becoming tired I just realized that God is my strength and I was refreshed for further trials. I had never been able to go into a sick room and be of service heretofore, but I have since learned that no matter what we are called on to do in the effort to help our brother it can be done, for the burden is on His shoulders and divine Love leads the way.

When first coming into Christian Science it was quite a task for me to tell of my experiences and healings, as I had never spoken in public before, but I soon learned that it was only timidity and fear which held me in my seat; then as I gradually testified more and more I overcame this fear. Then, too, I wish to speak of a very helpful article which I read some time ago, "Gratitude is the Child of Love," in one of the Christian Science periodicals, which said that if we are truly grateful and thankful for all blessings received we shall freely give as we have freely received and testify at the Wednesday evening meetings, which are set aside for this purpose. After reading this article, the demonstration over all fear and timidity was made, and I am thankful for the privilege of being able to testify at these meetings. Christian Science is truly our daily bread and a gift worth seeking and finding, which neither gold nor silver can buy, and I find it grows more precious each day. I am deeply grateful to our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, that she has given to the world the opportunity of learning this beautiful truth and healing power, and also has brought to light the understanding of God's laws and His unbounded mercy and goodness to man.

(Mrs.) MARIE MCLEAN, Tulsa, Okla.

Look Within

WALTER WILLIAM KAMMERLING

LOOK within if you would find
Wealth and the richest store.
Seek not without; for who thus seeks,
Returns anon as poor.

Look within, if you would live,
And love, and bless, and grow;
Seek not without, for who thus seeks,
Never true life will know.

Look within, if you would learn
True wisdom. All is there
Created, placed within our reach,
By Love's most tender care.

Signs of the Times

[Glasgow (Scotland) Herald]

The cry of the earnest to-day is not for new creeds in religion, art, or literature, but for a restatement of the old by men who have a living conviction of their truth. It is not words that are weak or stale, but the men who utter them. They it is who mean nothing, and so their words, once shattering trumpets, are but sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. No man ever uttered a commonplace who had anything worth saying and a passionate desire to say it; and the real essence of the platitude is that, however moral or edifying, it has no passionate faith behind it. It turns the very words of life into words of death.

[The Leader, Pittsburgh, Pa.]

"The great mass of non-churchgoers do not doubt Christianity. They doubt the church—and its authority. The people want Christ; they do not want to digest an obsolete creed."

This is just one spot in the sermon last Sunday of a middle West preacher. There were other spots just as noticeable. This preacher seemed to have a system saturated with just such sentences. And the fire and force and spiritual intensity he threw into the delivery, convinced all who heard that he meant exactly what he said. Not what his words might be skillfully interpreted to mean, but what they said. Here is another high spot in this astonishing sermon:

"Most of the churches are not for public service, but for private propaganda. The world is sick of churches which shape their teachings to suit business and political leaders. We must go back to the simple teaching of Jesus, and begin all over again to build up a church true to the Savior and the establishment of his kingdom on earth."

[The Hartford (Conn.) Courant]

We can think of no surer way for the people to develop the "flu" in large quantities than for the newspapers to make its spread a feature, and each day tell how much greater is the chance of getting it.

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald]

All of this discussion about the nature and government of God, religion, and the hereafter would be largely futile and unnecessary if we could only all come really to know the "living God" revealed by Jesus in the New Testament. When we can come into real personal relation with Him, our minds will all be enlightened; we shall then not only all see and know Him as He is, but the same truth—the truth—will be revealed to each of us. We shall all agree about the essentials of religion; there will be no Catholic, no Protestant, no Jew, no infidel, no sinner—all will be one in the knowledge of God and His truth, and that truth shall make us truly enlightened and free. Nothing else will.

[American Bible Society]

There is a prophet among the Porto Ricans,—no less than Sr. Emilio del Toro, judge of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, who recently gave a message to the Puerto Rico Evangelico, of which the following is an English translation:

If I had the privilege of communicating with all of the mothers of Latin America for only one moment during my lifetime, I would employ it entirely in recommending that they place in the hands of their children the New Testament, being sure of obtaining for them the most noble and enduring influence of all the influences which could exercise themselves in the human conscience of this world.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

ALLOW me to tell you "by letter" how much good the one subscription to your paper is doing for us here. I am taking THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, but have some friends read it first while it is in the post office, then it comes to me. After that I leave it in the depot, where we have free Christian Science literature. Each day when placing a new paper, I take home the old copies, on account of the Children's Pages and Home Forum articles. These I take to a mother, who loves to read them to her little children, and after she has read them, sends them on to another family. Do you, or can you, know how much good your paper is doing for each one of us, and the whole world in general?

Propitiation

WARWICK A. TYLER

THE human mind is of such a nature that it is necessary for it to believe in something besides itself. When left to its own devices, it mistakes effect for cause, with the inevitable result that it is forever looking to matter for life and intelligence, happiness and substance. The fact is, however, that all reality has its origin and existence in God, the infinite intelligence or Mind; and this infinite intelligence, by the very nature of its infinitude, is so vast and inclusive that it cannot be contained within anything less than itself. God, Spirit, is not confined within corporeality or finiteness, cause does not originate in and is not controlled by effect, nor is the creator subject to that which is created.

The religion of an individual or a people (and religion is but the process or observance which associates man with God) is entirely dependent upon his or their concept of the Supreme Being. It does not matter for one moment how material may be the concept of Deity, what form or ceremonies may be observed in the attempted worship of that concept, how extensive or elaborate the rites, because nothing can be said or done before it is first thought; religion is and must always remain a question of thought. It is probable that the first concept primitive mortal man had of a being superior to himself was when he became aware that existence did not always appear to be harmonious. Because he lacked the ability to reason accurately, and did not realize that harmonious or inharmonious surroundings were but the expressions of right or wrong thinking, he almost inevitably concluded there was a being or beings, a power or powers, which took delight in making him uncomfortable. Instinctively he recognized there was nothing to fear from anything good, and he therefore set to work to devise a means of preventing, or at least neutralizing, the effects of the operation of this sense of malevolence. The result was the effort to appease this dreaded unknown by means of sacrifice. And every student of history, ancient or modern, knows the hideous extent to which appeasement by sacrifice has gone.

The curious thing is that the human mind is so steeped in materialism, so busy grasping for greater material riches or straining to preserve those it already believes it possesses, that it loses sight of the fact that all sacrifice is entirely mental. What but the effect of thought has sacrifice ever been, whether its external expression was in the form of burnt offerings of bullocks and rams to Jehovah, human sacrifice to Moloch, self-sacrifice under the wheels of the Juggernaut, the burning of joss sticks or incense, the wearing of red flannel next the skin, inoculation and other external and internal medication, or the slavish obedience to so-called health laws? And the grosser the mentality of the worshipers, the more material has been the concept of Deity, and the more barbarous the effort to win favor or prevent disaster.

Humanity is ever struggling with this sense of a malevolent power. Many and various are the efforts to counteract it. Yet the remedy is always at hand. All that is or ever has been necessary is a change of concept. Instead of believing in evil as power, instead of fearing that some malevolent power will eventually overcome them in spite of all their efforts to free themselves or bribe it to put off the dreaded day as long as possible, all that mortals need to do is to change their concept of Deity and to know good as the creating, governing, infinite Principle of all being. And this is what is gradually occurring as the darkness of materialism subsides before the realization and understanding of God as infinite Spirit or Mind, as the blind fear and rebellion against the supposed power of unseen forces in prehistoric days, the polytheism of Babylon and Egypt, vanish before the monotheism of the Mosaic Decalogue, the Christianity of the Sermon on the Mount, and the understanding and demonstration of Christian Science.

"God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth," said Christ Jesus. Spirit is Mind. God must, therefore, be worshiped as Mind; He must be cognized mentally, and thought, word, and deed must be conformed to an accurate, or scientific, concept of Deity. In other words, in order to be religious, to prove man's relation to God, one must turn away from the belief in and the serving of matter and evil and gain a right understanding of God as Life, Truth, Love, the infinite Father-Mother Mind, who, eternally loving and guiding His idea, protects from every sense of a being and power unlike Himself. This is evidently what Paul had in view when he wrote to the Romans, "Be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

God is Love. He created and governs man and the universe through divine law. He is not a God of wrath and punishment. He cannot be bribed into doing anything which is contrary to divine law, nor can any outward act bring mankind nearer to Him, unless it is the outcome of a clearer understanding of Principle. He is not pleased with the sacrificial slaughter of human beings or animals, the pouring out of rivers of oil, or the burning of many candles or much incense; but He requires us to live justly and mercifully and to walk before Him in humility. "Herein is love," says John, "not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins;" "and not for our's only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

Christ Jesus was and is indeed the Way-shower. He understood, taught, and demonstrated the unity which perpetually exists between God and man, divine Principle and idea. His unfaltering and unerring example shows that divine Love is not appeased through human suffering or ceremonial rites and sacrifices, but that mankind must become conscious of Love's ever present guidance and protection by living in strict obedience to divine law. Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 19): "Jesus aided in reconciling man to God by giving man a truer sense of Love, the divine Principle of Jesus' teachings, and this truer sense of Love redeems man from the law of matter, sin, and death by the law of Spirit,—the law of divine Love." And then she shows us how we may take advantage of the Master's work: "Every pang of repentance and suffering, every effort for reform, every good thought and deed, will help us to understand Jesus' atonement for sin and aid its efficacy."

Christ Jesus was never deceived by the claims of evil, matter, and the physical senses. He did not for one moment yield obedience to error's demands. His every act proved that he had a correct concept, and therefore demonstrable understanding, of God. To follow his example, to make the demonstrations he made, to exercise man's God-given dominion, we must learn to cast out every erroneous concept of God, man, and the universe; we must completely repudiate the belief that there is a malevolent power which can deprive us of Love's beneficence; we must reject every thought of envy, jealousy, hatred, malice, fear, anger, and pride,—we must eschew evil of every name and nature, and, through spiritual understanding, we must conform all of our thoughts as well as our acts to the example of the Master and live in strict obedience to the law of Life, Truth, Love, the divine Principle of all true being.

One Lord

CLARISSE HALE

FEAR was the primitive animus of worship. In his ignorance mortal man, awed, failing to understand the manifold phenomena of nature, thinking also that the good will of the gods would be of material benefit, worshiped the sun, moon, water, storm, and similar appearances. The fear that was excited by these unexplained phenomena naturally focused the attention on the probable or possible cause of all things, which in turn resulted in the evolution of the myths as an attempted solution of the problem. This tendency to worship a mythological god, one of mortal mind's material concepts, was rebuked by Paul when, standing on Mars Hill, he said to the Athenians: "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you;" and then proceeded to reveal to them God as the only cause and man as His idea, "his offspring," continuing that "we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device." It is perfectly apparent that Paul was referring to the belief of image worship, anciently of stones, the stone and God being identical, later to be separated when the stone became an altar to God. Still the deification of stone and other images has continued, until we find this superstitious idolatry in the form of "lucky stone" which certain European peasants throw into their fields to insure good crops. It is not until ignorance is replaced by understanding that the life and power once attributed to phenomena are restored to their rightful classification, to the one Mind.

With the progress of religious thought we discover a growing sense of unity, but never until we replace objects of sense with the true idea, can we demonstrate that unity with Spirit which is trumpeted forth in Deuteronomy in the recapitulation of the First Commandment, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord." Endowing idols with divine attributes is a mode of mortal thought, the same in quality as that which yields itself to the mesmerism of personality. In that instructive eighth chapter of I Samuel we read that the Israelites demanded a king to reign over them. Why? "That our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles." Mortal mind in its lazy inertness desires only that some one else should do its thinking, its judging for it, and then bows down and worships that one. "And the Lord said unto Samuel . . . they rejected me, that I should not reign over them," and although Samuel prophesied the tyranny and bondage that such autocracy would entail, nevertheless the people insisted on owing allegiance to a king instead of to the one God. To the extent that we allow another to formulate our opinions and judgments for us, that we substitute another's thinking for our individual demonstration of intelligence, we are serving a king; to the extent that we accept erroneous beliefs as consciousness, we are serving other gods. In the relationship of practitioner to patient one should be constantly watchful in no way to usurp the prerogative of the patient to turn directly to God for his guidance, without the help of any mediator.

To-day we deny the power once given to objects and realize that it was belief only that endowed them with attributes they did not possess; we smile incredulously when we learn that the disease supposed to be caused by demons entering a man could be exorcised by a magical formula given for the patient while the medicine itself was given for the purpose of harassing the demon; but is it any less logical or intelligent to think that a demon could thus enter the body and cause disease than to believe in the present germ theory? How can we felicitate ourselves on having reached the stage where we do believe there is one God, Principle or Mind, and that He is Lord alone, until we practice absolutely "the Science of Christianity," which as Mrs. Eddy points out in "Christian Science versus Pantheism" (p. 12), "is strictly monotheism,—it has ONE GOD." Do we realize that in all our affairs we are dealing with Mind and Mind alone? Mrs. Eddy clarifies this fact when she says, "The Christian Scientist is alone with his own being and with the reality of things" (Message for 1901). As we individually demonstrate our unity, our oneness, with Principle, we shall see in thought and action, in harmonious relations with our brother man, that unity expressed.

Christian Science Practical

HENRY M. NEWMARK

WE are living in practical times. Humanity is demanding practical results in every undertaking. It is therefore but natural that all mankind should be demanding immediate and permanent healing, fettered as it is by the bonds of sin and disease. Christian Science is meeting these requirements, and this is the secret of its rapid growth and its increasing acceptance everywhere. This practicability of Christian Science in meeting the problems that present themselves to mankind is freely acknowledged by grateful hearts in thousands of cases throughout the civilized world.

While the investigator learns of the healing experiences of others, and through this knowledge turns to Christian Science for relief, he does so quite generally with little or no confidence in its ability to meet his particular need but largely in sheer despair because of the failure of other methods. Then comes the healing. While not understanding, except perhaps in a small measure, how this has all been accomplished, yet he has attained an abiding conviction, through his own experience, that Christian Science does heal. —like the man blind from birth, whom Jesus healed, who refuted the efforts to discredit Jesus' work, persisting that one thing he knew, that whereas he had been blind he then saw. There arises in the heart of every sincere seeker after Truth a desire to acquire a working knowledge of God, for that is really all that Christian Science is. The unprejudiced awaken to see that immediate steps should be taken to gain a practical apprehension of this law, this Christ, Truth, and to prove that this law is ever operative and applicable to every problem that confronts humanity, whether in an office, at a workman's bench, in the home, or behind a prison wall.

Now, how is this accomplished? Christ Jesus very simply stated the method when he declared that it was by the knowledge of Truth and that this understanding makes men free. In this identical manner Christian Science proves to-day as irrefutably as in the days of its earlier ministry, the truth about God, divine Principle or Mind, and man, His inseparable idea, dwelling eternally in the realm of Mind. This desired healing is only attained through elevating thought out of the shadows of material sense into the full sunshine of spiritual understanding. This rejection of corporeal sense testimony uplifts consciousness to a realization of the perfection of Mind and of Mind's idea, man. This knowledge or Science is now healing and comforting the needy in New York and in London as veritably as it once did in the streets of Jerusalem and on the shores of Galilee. The method is explained with great simplicity by Mary Baker Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," beginning on page 476: "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." In like manner Christian Science recognizes and proves beyond cavil that an understanding of this perfection can come alone through realizing that we are living, always have lived, and ever shall live wholly in the universe of the one consciousness, which is God, and that all suggestions of the senses operating as so-called laws of mortality are lies concerning the reality of Life which is God, eternal Life. Hence, these false arguments can in no wise usurp the government of the one Mind or Principle, God, and the liberty of His idea, man.

It is no different when applying the truth in overcoming sin. It is in the measure that we understand the eternal fact, the infinite unity and completeness of the divine consciousness, God and His creation, generic man, that we witness the separation of the chaff of evil from the wheat of spiritual or true knowledge, the Christ. This real knowing lifts the veil of material sense and reveals the beauty of holiness, the man of God's creating. It was this vision of man the psalmist beheld when he declared: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness [through right understanding]: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

Mrs. Eddy has placed the utmost emphasis upon the practical nature of Christian Science, for it is on this basis alone that she always insists it must be judged. Scoffers and critics who vainly endeavor to explain that Christian Science is not what its adherents maintain are ever faced with the stubborn fact of its practicability, as evidenced in its healing and saving works. For we read in the Preface to the textbook (p. x), "The divine Principle of healing is proved in the personal experience of any sincere seeker of Truth." Then again on page 355, "The charge of inconsistency in Christianly scientific methods of dealing with sin and disease is met by something practical,—namely, the proof of the utility of these methods; and proofs are better than mere verbal arguments or prayers which evince no spiritual power to heal."

Christian Science stands in its practicality. It endures because it fulfills the requirements of Christ Jesus, when he commanded his followers to "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give."

Defense

DORIS A. CHISHOLM

THE writer recently experienced the deepest gratitude toward Mrs. Eddy for her keen spiritual perception and untiring devotion in giving Christian Science to hungering humanity. When seemingly troublous times were considered, it was clearly seen that the greatest protection is given to those who will obey the admonition in Article VIII, Section 6, of the Church Manual: "It shall be the duty of every member of this Church to defend himself daily against aggressive mental suggestion, and not be made to forget nor to neglect his duty to God, to his Leader, and to mankind." According to one dictionary the word "defend" means "to guard, to protect against danger," and our Leader tells us specifically in the section above mentioned that the danger is "aggressive mental suggestion." This rule was thus stated many years ago, and yet to-day it is one thing needful for the proving that the truth is always the truth.

Dwelling in material homes, we feel great security from being molested by thieves, murderers, or in fact, any intruder, as long as the doors and windows are locked and barred; and if the laws of our land are obeyed and other persons' rights are not infringed upon, each individual is left free to enjoy the quietude and comforts of home. Thus it is in our mental home. Constantly being alert to our duty in obeying the laws of God, as taught in Christian Science, in keeping our mental doors locked against all thieving and murderous thoughts, such as fear, prejudice, doubt, criticism, hatred, malice, revenge, sin, and their et ceteras, brings into our experience the consciousness of peace, harmony, health, happiness, prosperity, and all the good that is our rightful heritage. Each individual should constantly strive to know that true consciousness is pure and never permits anything to enter that "defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie."

Paul declared to the people of Athens, as he perceived their spiritual barrenness in their worship of the "unknown God," that "in him we live, and move, and have our being;" and as this great fact is more and more known and realized, it will be a positive defense against everything unlike God, good. As God is omnipotent, omnipresent Love, there is nothing to fear in mental suggestion, and evil, with all its claims, shall be seen in its absolute nothingness. As Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 223), "May divine Love so permeate the affections of all those who have named the name of Christ in its fullest sense, that no counteracting influence can hinder their growth or taint their examples."

The Desert

MILDRED MESKIMONS

IN Christian Science we learn that all things material, all that the eye can see, must be counterfeit of the real, for God's creation is spiritual, not visible to mortal sense. A counterfeit must have a real model after which to pattern. The spiritual idea, or God's idea, of desert, could not, according to His plan, include woe and waste and want. It must be beautiful and useful if Mind made it.

According to popular opinion, however, the desert is rightly named. It is considered a place deserted by all that is valuable in human existence and devoid of all that goes to make up modern civilization. The cross-country tourist, unless he knows and rejoices in the truth, may sigh and say, "How much more of this monotonous desert scenery must I endure?" The inhabitant of the small town in the desert, likewise, if he does not reason rightly, may stand in his doorway and, watching the passing train, say, "How long will it be before I can leave this God-forsaken place?" Certainly it is misunderstanding and a distorted sense of value that would try to keep such from seeing the goodness of God as present even there in the midst of what is called a desert waste.

In reality the term "desert" is a misnomer. By what is the desert deserted? Not by God, surely. God is truly everywhere, not in matter, but omnipresent as Mind. The Bible teaches that God is Love, infinite Love. Infinite Love is even where the mortal mind supposes a desert. It is prophesied that the desert is to blossom as the rose. In this blossoming, it cannot be more the expression of infinite Mind than it really is now. On page 240 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we find, "Nature voices natural, spiritual law and divine Love, but human belief misinterprets nature." The true idea of nature is pointing to Mind, the spiritual intelligence it reflects. God is Life. The sense of things seen on the desert is a belief about life, and has to be replaced by the true idea. Thus, instead of any material sense of cactus, sand lily, sagebrush or mesquite, lizard or coyote, the divine Mind knows its true idea of Life. In Revelation we read, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." "All" means the true idea of desert as well as of valley or mountain. Infinite Mind has created all true vastness.

As Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 87), "In our immature sense of spiritual things, let us say of the beauties of the sensuous universe: 'I love your promise; and shall know, some time, the spiritual reality and substance of form, light, and color, of what I now through you discern dimly; and knowing this, I shall be satisfied. Matter is a frail conception of mortal mind; and mortal mind is a poorer representative of the beauty, grandeur, and glory of the immortal Mind.'" So the mile after mile of desert sands reaching out to the sky are just the counterfeit of infinitude. Vastness signifies strength. In the wilderness Christ Jesus proved strength to overcome the world. In the true vastness that God knows there is peace. Who could not pray aright where Love is ever present and the sense of material things far removed? Oh, weary traveler through the desert lands, and discouraged dweller in little desert town, look keenly and see the ever present, ever unfolding manifestation of Life, Love, and Mind, right where you are. Then the desert can no longer depress you. To you there will be no deserted sense of things, but an everlasting inspiration.

FRIENDSHIP, like every other human need, must be demonstrated through the teachings of Christian Science in order that the true sense of it may be gained and so enjoyed permanently. When we learn to understand what Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 494), "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need," we shall not look to any other source but to the divine Mind for meeting all our human needs. The writer has observed the various deceitful ways of the false suppositional friendship produced by mortal mind. One of the most subtle is that of warning you to be careful of certain persons because they have said certain things about you, and the excuse for the accusation of the others is, "I love you so much that I want to protect you." This indeed is false and deceitful, because true friendship knows no evil, but overcomes evil with good, destroying the erroneous gossip by knowing the truth in its place before it can be repeated. True friendship will in its own thinking immediately annul error with the truth, and then nothing is left to be repeated in the way of warning.

A great help in the doing of this can be found in Mrs. Eddy's words in Miscellany (p. 146): "Christian Scientists hold as a vital point that the beliefs of mortals tip the scale of being, morally and physically, either in the right or in the wrong direction. Therefore a Christian Scientist never mentally or audibly takes the side of sin, disease, or death. Others who take the side of error do it ignorantly or maliciously. The Christian Scientist voices the harmonious and eternal, and nothing else. He lays his whole weight of thought, tongue, and pen in the divine scale of being—for health and holiness."

True friendship represents perfect freedom in God, good, not in error represented by the five senses; it will never maintain anything but love. When we discern the true idea of friendship we will never experience loss of friendship but will know that we can only lose a false sense of it, thus improving our concept of friendship until we discern it as purely spiritual, unselfish, everlasting, never expressible as treason, never grumbling, and ever ready to defend good, to share, to bless. True friendship is not afraid of nor does it indulge in personal attachment, but knows personal attachment to be unreal and subject to the command of Christ Jesus, "Get thee behind me, Satan," to which it must yield. Christ Jesus and Mary Baker Eddy certainly practiced true friendship in the highest, truest, spiritual understanding of it, and they have left their example for others to follow. The harvest indeed is great, and the laborers seem few, but the faithful followers and laborers are ready to give thanks and to prove their gratitude through earnest, consecrated work whereby to bless all mankind.

Obstacles in the Way

MATTIE E. COTTRELL RHOADS

TO the beginner in Christian Science there may seem to be many obstacles, and at times he may feel that it is almost impossible to continue his search for light. Although he may have already tasted of the sweetness and joy of true healing and been loosed from the iron bands of some so-called incurable physical, mental, or moral disease, yet he may feel that to obey the First Commandment and to trust God in all His ways is more than he is yet able to do. On the other hand, he may be so mesmerized by zeal without knowledge, over his new-found health and freedom, that he is sure his salvation is already worked out and that he has nothing more to do but to rejoice and tell of it. One thing, however, is certain; that each one at some time must not only be "a hearer of the word" but he must also be a doer of it, and take up his cross and help in some measure to lift and bear it, both for himself and for suffering humanity. The honest investigation of, and gratitude for what Christian Science is, what it has done for us, will go far toward eliminating the seeming shadows and obstructions that may loom up in the way; but to prove by practical demonstration and by daily living and loving that this Science is all that has been claimed for it by its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, will indeed go still further, and is the only way.

One who had been quickly healed by Christian Science, but who had failed to grasp fully the import of that healing by keeping up with its requirements, said to a practitioner, "I am confused and I do not understand it; I thought that after I had been healed as I was, and had seen the truth as clearly as I did, that I would naturally progress without so much effort or struggle. I do not seem to be anywhere near the point of my first observation; it has been a continual struggle of ups and downs and I have not got anywhere; I am completely worn out and discouraged; the way seems so rough and unexplored."

In answer the practitioner pointed to a snow covered mountain in the distance, and asked him if he could see it. He answered that he could; and then he was asked if he was at its summit. He admitted that he was not. It was then shown him that he could always see far in advance of his present position, and that if he would reach the summit of his vision it would require many steps, and these steps would have to be taken in the right direction. It was also made plain to him that if he should start out to reach the top of that mountain but should disregard and disobey all advice and information as to how to get there, and if he did not keep the path which had been made and pointed out by those who had made the ascent, he would soon find himself traveling a rough way of ups and downs. Moreover, if he did not retrace his wrong, zigzag course, find the right way, and diligently keep that way, he would keep on struggling with adversities, stumbling over fallen logs and sharp stones, and wallowing through dense thickets of underbrush. Thus this struggle would be repeated again and again and without much if any real progress, until he would surely become disheartened and discouraged. On the other hand, if, before starting out on his journey, he would find the right path, then keep up his effort with an honest heart, he would, after patient and sometimes hard climbing, reach the desired summit; he would undoubtedly have as many ups and downs on this route as on the other, but he could rejoice that he was at least on the way, and that he was making real progress.

So it is with our journey out of materiality. If we think, or hope, that harmony and spiritual elevation can be reached through or by indolence, ignorance, or self-righteousness, if we depend on the good we know but do not, or on the good of others to lead and sustain us alone, we certainly shall encounter many disappointments and defeats, and insure failure in the end. We all, through ignorance of or lack of love for God, divine ever present good, have had many trials and hard struggles with our belief in evil, but if we are faithful over the few things that we know of God, of His tender care and love for us in times past, if we are always faithful to our healing experience with its conclusive proof that man never had been sick, and continue daily and hourly to express our love and gratitude for it, every attempt of the enemy will prove to be harmless and we shall meet every seeming lie as master. In this way we will soon be able to detect evil as evil, and will gain the ability at once to see it for what it really is; for, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 330 of Science and Health, "Evil is nothing, no thing, mind, nor power," and on page 71, "Evil has no reality. It is neither person, place, nor thing, but is simply a belief, an illusion of material sense." What a great privilege it is to be able calmly to know that evil, under whatever pretense, is no more when it seems to be present than it is when it seems to be absent; for if God is All-in-all, ever present, omnipotent, omniscient, as Daniel proved when in the den in the presence of the lions, it has no more power to harm or to destroy, for it is nothing in any case.

Selected Articles

["Men of Good Will"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Feb. 9, 1920]

The familiar words, "On earth peace, good will toward men," inextricably associated as they unfortunately are generally with holidays, going to church on a week day, Christmas presents, and so forth, have lost much of their force in the course of the years. Peace on earth seems as far from being realized as ever it was, while good will to men remains to many a beautiful and poetic form of words. Some modern translators, however, have thrown a fresh light upon the subject by giving a different phrasing to the words, for "peace on earth to men of good will" certainly awakens a new train of thought. If the promise of peace was conditional, then it is not to be wondered at that peace is still problematical, if the conditions of its coming are not fulfilled.

It only requires a brief glance at the history of the human race since those words were uttered to see that men of good will have been few and far between. To go no further than the record of the early Christian churches, given in the Acts of the Apostles and the epistles, it is abundantly evident that they did not know how to preserve this mutual good will which was the condition of peace. We find the writers of the epistles admonishing their flocks constantly on the lines of mercy, pity, compassion, courtesy, and so on, leading to the conclusion that the early Christians were just as liable as later ones to the impulses of the human will, and knew little if any better how to control them.

The conclusion to be drawn from these premises is that men have not really understood the nature of this good will, and not that they have not desired to attain it. As Mrs. Eddy says, "If mortal mind knew how to be better, it would be better" (Science and Health, p. 186). To the student of Christian Science, men of good will are those who understand the nature of God's will and desire above everything else that His will should be done in earth as it is in heaven. Many people will say that they have always believed that, but have they realized at the same time the nature of the human will and its absolute antipathy to the divine will? Have they not, on the contrary, endeavored to make a compromise between the two, just as they have been taught that man is a compromise between matter and Spirit, good and evil?

On page 192 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy describes in its nakedness the nature of the human will. "It is," she says, "lightning and hurricane, all that is selfish, wicked, dishonest, and impure." Now, if that is a correct description of the essence of the human will, and yet if the attempt has been to make "men of good will" out of such materials, is it to be wondered at that the result is so far from being that which was promised, so far indeed that there has arisen a despairing conviction that the promise, like the peace, is entirely chimerical? In this connection it is to be noted how constantly Christ Jesus affirmed his freedom from the domination of the human will and his unity with the divine will, from the first boyish utterance that he was about his Father's business, to the last sublime aspiration, "Not my will, but thine, be done," and as a result he demonstrated his control over the essence of the human will in its subtler manifestations, that will of which Mrs. Eddy has also said, "It is the headlong cataract, the devouring flame, the tempest's breath" (Science and Health, p. 192).

Our deduction, then, is that if we desire peace on earth we must set about its attainment in the only way possible, and that is by trying to understand the nature of the will of Principle, and to be willing it should be done whether the carnal mind likes it or not. So doing we shall involuntarily become men of good will ourselves, and not only give out peace, but attract it. It is obvious that such a one will quite naturally and unobtrusively keep the Ten Commandments, for if he knows only the will of divine Mind any impulse to infringe upon the rights or possessions of his neighbors will disappear, and what is not so obvious but equally subject to demonstration, is the fact that he will find his own rights and possessions respected. The reason for this is scientific, for if his treasure is in heaven, in Spirit, Mind, as it must necessarily be if he has only one God, one good, it cannot be taken from him. No rust can corrupt it, nor thief break in or steal.

To the student of Christian Science these matters all seem so simple it is astonishing that men and nations still go on in the old way, each suspecting the other of bad will, of a desire to grab, to graft, to stab his neighbor in the back. On page 340 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy writes, "One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars; fulfils the Scripture, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself;' annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry,—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished or destroyed." We have been educated for so many generations in a wrong concept of God that it has become difficult to see that He is not a human being on an infinite scale, whose will is sometimes pleasant and sometimes most unpleasant, but that instead He is the unchangeable energy or will, always productive, constructive, and active, that He is infinite divine Mind or Spirit, and that this energy becomes manifest in human experience in the proportion that individuals turn away from the carnal will and its desires, and become thereby men of good will.

[Willard J. Welch in Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Gazette]

Some misstatements occur in a sermon, "Why I Am Not a Christian Scientist," reported in a recent issue of the Gazette. The man, preacher or layman, who has not himself healed a single case of disease through the power of prayer to God is in no position to discredit the faith of those who do make such proof of God's power and of His love for man. Many thousands of the world's best citizens are to-day telling the world why they are Christian Scientists by their lives of consecration to God and by their unselfish devotion to the welfare of their fellow men. The man who was hopelessly sick and becomes strong and well through the teachings of Christian Science, who was burdened with poverty and is now successful and happy, who was lost in sin and now finds himself a useful citizen instead of a charge upon the state, demonstrates the truth of Christian Science, and is a living witness to its healing power.

An evangelist is one who brings glad tidings of great joy, who is a bearer of good news, who is filled with a religion so vital that it occupies his whole life. Christian Scientists so live their religion and love it. They know it is here for all alike and rejoice that many thousands have found in it a panacea for all their woes. These thousands are its witnesses to-day. Because Christian Science is a religion which follows Christ, it is distinctly Christian; and because it is capable of proof or demonstration, it is truly scientific. It is surely Christlike to heal the sick, to comfort those who mourn, and to lift up those lost in sin to that knowledge of God which brings them to right thinking and to right living. Many thousands gladly testify that the power of the Christ as taught in Christian Science is as available to-day as in the days of Jesus.

It is a self-evident absurdity to say that an author has not read her own book. It is a matter of history that Mrs. Eddy read and reread, wrote and rewrote, many times, every paragraph of her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," both before and after it was published. That she revised it is also true but the revisions were in the letter only,—that is, words were changed so as to bring out more clearly the spiritual meaning of the Scriptures. The substance of the original revelation in Science and Health has never been changed one iota. How shallow then is the question asked, "If Science and Health is from God why does it need revision so frequently?"

An honest perusal of the Christian Science textbook will show what Christian Science is. It is far from fair to remove a statement from its context. The quotation on prayer which our critic uses, when taken with its context shows that Mrs. Eddy referred to that audible prayer spoken of by Jesus concerning the Pharisees that "they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men." Jesus himself gave his disciples the Lord's Prayer which Mrs. Eddy says "covers all human needs" (Science and Health, p. 16). That Christian Scientists pray unceasingly, respect prayer, and obtain answers to their prayers is shown in their daily lives. Healing is proof that Mrs. Eddy and her followers have reached the heart of prayer.

What Christian Science teaches as to good and evil spirits is found in the chapter, "Christian Science versus Spiritualism," in Science and Health, and the isolated quotations by our friend read together with the context give an entirely different meaning. Mrs. Eddy's definition of angels on page 581 of Science and Health, "God's thoughts passing to man" is true, spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures—proved true by demonstration in the lives of those Christians who now as in all times feel the "angel of his presence." Daniel in the lions' den, and the Christians in danger to-day both have the angels of the Lord as their salvation, as many a Christian Scientist has proved.

Thinking Christians seek the vital truth themselves and do not attack another's faith or attempt to tell others what truth is not. The Master left but one rule for all to judge his followers by: "Ye shall know them by their fruits." A man who does not know what truth is, surely cannot tell what is not truth. The words of Pilate, "What is truth?" are still to be heard, and the reply of Christian Science is found in the Preface of Science and Health on page viii: "The question, What is Truth, is answered by demonstration,—by healing both disease and sin; and this demonstration shows that Christian healing confers the most health and makes the best men. On this basis Christian Science will have a fair fight."

[P. A. Walker in Dublin (Ireland) Express]

My attention has been drawn to a report of a sermon by the Archbishop of Dublin, appearing in the Daily Express. In it His Grace is reported to have said in speaking of pain that "Christian Science, that strange product of their own age, sought to escape the problem by denying its existence." Permit me to say that Christian Science does not seek to escape any problem, but solves it by the understanding of the allness of God, Mind, and the nothingness of its opposite, matter. In denying the agony of the great war, Christian Science shows that the only war is that of Soul over sense, or the struggle to overcome evil with good. The result is never in doubt. Christian Scientists did not attempt to shirk their responsibilities as citizens, but were found taking their places in every branch of the service from the moment war was declared. Also, a large sum of money was distributed in this country from the War Relief fund of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Mass., and the needs of the Army and Navy were provided for in the Welfare Rooms to be found adjacent to the large camps.

Mrs. Eddy says on page 153 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "The fact that pain cannot exist where there is no mortal mind to feel it is a proof that this so-called mind makes its own pain—that is, its own belief in pain;" and on page 171, "The so-called laws of matter are nothing but false beliefs that intelligence and life are present where Mind is not. These false beliefs are the procuring cause of all sin and disease. The opposite truth, that intelligence and life are spiritual, never material, destroys sin, sickness, and death."

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Paignton (England) Observer]

In the article, "Hypnotic Suggestions," in a recent issue of the Observer, there appears a statement which might lead one to believe that Christian Science is a form of mental suggestion. This is not the case. Christian Science treatment is the application of spiritual truth to human error, and is brought about by the action of the divine Mind (the Mind which was in Christ Jesus) in contradistinction to the hypnotic influence of the so-called carnal or human mind.

The great difference between the healing of Christian Science and that of hypnotic suggestion is that in the former case the patient is healed morally, physically, and spiritually, whereas by the latter method the patient loses his individuality and is more apt to be influenced by evil suggestions thereafter.

When our Master was accused of casting out devils, evils, by Beelzebub, he replied, "If Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself." He then went on to say, "But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." This is the Christian Science method.

[Warren O. Evans in Newport (R. I.) Herald]

The topic chosen for a series of sermons by the pastor of the Second Baptist Church, "Urgent Questions for Thinking People," is a good one. The subject taken for the first sermon, however, "Is Christian Science Christian?" while a most excellent subject and one which is attracting the attention of intelligent and thinking people the world over, has led him into such deep water that it will take him some little time to find his way out. It is absurd for him to say that Christian Science denies the Bible, as is apparent to any one who has given this subject even a superficial investigation; for the first of the tenets of the Christian Science church, as recorded on page 497 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook, by Mary Baker Eddy, reads thus: "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life." The second tenet likewise refutes the statement of our critic that Christian Science denies the Christ as the Holy Ghost or divine Comforter, as is evidenced by these words: "We acknowledge and adore one supreme and infinite God. We acknowledge His Son, one Christ; the Holy Ghost or divine Comforter; and man in God's image and likeness."

Our friend claims that, according to the teaching of Christian Science, "a person can get rid of sin by merely asking for pardon, which leaves him free to commit the same act again." Such a statement is wholly false, and the third tenet of the Christian Science church is very explicit and clear on this point, as one may perceive from these words: "We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts."

The problem of salvation has indeed been a deep one for many a thinker, but to say that "Christian Science denies the whole divine plan of salvation" is very far from the fact. Along this line, the fourth and fifth tenets will state the position of the Christian Scientist: "We acknowledge Jesus' atonement as the evidence of divine, efficacious Love, unfolding man's unity with God through Christ Jesus the Wayshower; and we acknowledge that man is saved through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death. We acknowledge that the crucifixion of Jesus and his resurrection served to uplift faith to understand eternal Life, even the allness of Soul, Spirit, and the nothingness of matter." All this is in strict accord with Jesus' statements: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

The sixth and concluding tenet brings out most clearly the attitude and high ideal of the Christian Scientists: "And we solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure." As is perfectly plain to any sincere seeker, Christian Science is nothing more than a return to primitive Christianity, and differs only from the older churches in that it goes a step further and puts into practice all of the commands of Jesus, which include the healing of the sick. As evidence that Christian Science has been and is healing the sick, one needs but to step into any Wednesday evening meeting of any Christian Science church and listen for himself to clear and interesting testimonies of those who have been raised from beds of pain and released from unspeakable suffering and sorrow, as well as freed from all forms of sin.

It was doubtless with great sincerity that this good pastor felt it to be his duty to speak as he did upon this world-wide subject; but if he had stopped to ask himself the question, What would Jesus do? he would have confined his sermon to preaching the Word of God. The writer knows in a measure just how this friend feels and his line of reasoning, for he was once a stanch Baptist himself, having become a member of that church at the age of twelve years, and having been for over twenty years an active member. He was very bigoted and felt that his church was the only church and the only highway to heaven. But when he was called upon to face a condition where it seemed as though God had forsaken him, and Christian Science came into his experience, he realized that he had not gone far enough, had not taken Jesus at his word, to ask, believing, and receive, but had asked, doubting, and hence had not reached the source of all good. He, therefore, can feel nothing but the deepest compassion for our dear brother and the firm conviction that the time will come when this worker in the vineyard of our Lord will likewise wake up to find that all of the commands which Jesus gave to his disciples are possible to follow here and now.

Wednesday

When Mrs. Eddy instituted the Wednesday evening meeting she, at once, offered a great opportunity to the Christian Science movement, and laid a great responsibility upon it. This Wednesday evening testimony was, in her own words, on page 47 of the Manual, to be "more than a mere rehearsal of blessings, it scales the pinnacle of praise and illustrates the demonstration of Christ, 'who healeth all thy diseases' (Psalm 103:3)."

Now Mrs. Eddy never used words loosely. If her readers wish to discover her real meaning they must remember what she herself wrote, on page 320 of Science and Health, concerning the Bible, "The one important interpretation of Scripture is the spiritual." And from that Mrs. Eddy goes on to explain a most important passage to any person taking part in a Wednesday evening meeting, and that is the saying of Job, "In my flesh shall I see God." Here, indeed, is the very accent of praise, if praise is metaphysically understood; for praise is no mere singing of psalms, it is psalm singing translated into action. The sick man does not see God in flesh. Job, sitting on the refuse heaps before the city gate, stricken with boils, was very far from realizing the truth of being. Job, healed and in his right mind, had come to understand the unreality of the flesh to the extent that he could at least say, in contrast of Spirit with the flesh: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Here was his first step toward that understanding of spiritual harmony which, in the mouth of Paul, burst into praise, as he wrote to the Corinthians, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God."

Every man, then, who would understand the Manual must come back to its spiritual meaning. If on a Wednesday evening he would scale "the pinnacle of praise," he must learn that praise is not emotional speaking, that it is no mere eloquence of words, but knowledge which has been translated into action through an understanding of Principle; then the tongue may falter, and the words may halt, but, none the less, as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 354 of Science and Health: "Consistency is seen in example more than in precept. Inconsistency is shown by words without deeds, which are like clouds without rain. If our words fail to express our deeds, God will redeem that weakness, and out of the mouth of babes He will perfect praise. The night of materiality is far spent, and with the dawn Truth will waken men spiritually to hear and to speak the new tongue."

The individual, then, scales the pinnacle of praise not through eloquence or much speaking, but in the proportion of his demonstration. Then a man's real psalm is his life, and that psalm echoes from the pinnacle exactly as the night of materiality is left behind and the dawn of spirituality broadens into eternal day. No man can praise Principle whilst believing in the reality of sin, and the only way in which to express disbelief in sin is the struggle to cease sinning. This struggle, however, if it is to be undertaken with any hope of success, must be undertaken scientifically. To undertake to attempt the destruction of something which is imagined to be real, matter and sin, is simply to start kicking against the pricks. Consequently, a scientific understanding of the unreality of matter and sin must be, in some measure, attained before the destruction of an atom of false belief in them can be achieved. Thus it is that Mrs. Eddy writes, of Science, on page 558 of Science and Health, "When understood, it is Truth's prism and praise." This is easily realized, for what the Greek text of the New Testament calls a scientific knowledge of God, of Truth, is the only means by which the infinite love and power of Truth can be made understandingly manifest to the world.

A Wednesday evening testimony meeting is, then, a sacred charge to every Christian Scientist who is present. Things are thoughts, thoughts of Truth or thoughts of evil, and what the congregation is thinking is its contribution to the struggle of good with evil in the coming week. The speakers are simply the voice of the meeting, and their words, scientific or confused, fearless or undecided, are the echo, ringing true or false, individually, of their own lives and demonstration, or, in the aggregate, of those of the congregation. Here obviously is the responsibility of the individual member, and so of the entire membership of every church for its Wednesday meetings. If the understanding of Truth were powerful enough in them, it would go beyond the telling of healing in the past, and encompass healing in the present. But to accomplish this the congregation must have been fasting from evil thinking during the days and weeks before, and praying—desiring—nothing that is not of God, good. Evil thoughts cannot be brought to the church door, and then left outside, as the Muhammadan leaves his dusty slippers outside the mosque. A man's thoughts are himself, and they are born either of Spirit or of the flesh, but they never mingle. The stream of the one is clear and rapid, that of the other languid and turbid: the one comes down from the pinnacles of praise and rolls out into the ocean of eternal harmony, the other seems to start out of the vacuity of nothingness, and to disappear into nothingness as it flows.

It is just like that with the Wednesday evening testimonies. They are of Principle or they are nothing; they are God's thoughts, the angels of His presence, or they are a human voice—that and nothing more. The ear attuned to Truth may distinguish easily the false from the true, but criticism of the false is of little avail. The responsibility for the meeting is individual, and can no more be avoided than the responsibility for healing the sick. It is easy to point out the deficiencies of your neighbors, but that will not help you to demonstrate the power of Truth yourself. Always the question comes back to your own life, and to nowhere else: "Am I living," as Mrs. Eddy asks, on page 496 of Science and Health, "the life that approaches the supreme good? Am I demonstrating the healing power of Truth and Love?" If the answer is Yes, then the floods may rise and the winds roar but there shall no evil come near thy dwelling on the rock. If it is No, then whether the foundations of the dwelling be dreamy good intentions or downright malice, they are sunk alike in the sands, and will be washed away.

In the parable of Dives and Lazarus, the Greek text explains that after he had passed away, Dives found himself not in hell in torment, but in Hades on the touchstone. He was enjoying, in other words, on another plane of existence, the horror of distinguishing between the gold he had rejected and the dross he had clung to. Any man, who has the courage and the wisdom, can apply his own experience to the touchstone to-day, if he will ask himself, and answer, Mrs. Eddy's two questions.

FREDERICK DIXON.

The True Stir

THE war was, of course, a great test for the practice of Christian Science. In the face of the worst that the so-called mortal mind supposed itself able to do, each student of Christian Science had to know that the idea in Mind is quite apart from any belief in matter. To the extent that each one really knew this, he proved it. If for an instant one were to sink into sadness and despair, then for that instant such a one would not be living in accord with the truth. Only by being conscious that the divine Mind does govern the real man and does produce right action here and now, in spite of any seeming, can one follow Paul's wholesome advice, "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice." This requires one to depend not in the least on any mere human sense of things but to be glad in what God knows. Those who are learning to reason rightly must indeed find calm and lasting joy in the ceaseless doing which the one Mind maintains. The divine Life is ever astir with alert living. That is why it is happy, even though the dream of mortal mind may be of war.

To prove the presence of true peace, each one must rejoice, in the same way, that the divine Mind alone is really active. From seeming strikes, restless shiftings from extreme to extreme, hatred, greed, and terror, there is nothing to fear, for the one who is himself proving the goodness of God. No matter what may arise, sooner or later all efforts can succeed only in turning in the right way, for there is no other way that is real. What fulfills all sincere desire and each righteous attempt is the one perfect Mind, which is the only cause for action. Before the order of this Mind, any lawless state of things has to subside. There remains, then, the whole vigor of good, but no conflict. Instead of being content to be passive, each one must enjoy the true stir that comes from God, and get to work by knowing that the force of the divine Mind is the only force there is. Without a trace of regret that there needs to be a settling down on the basis of Truth, each one must prove for himself that he is not afraid. "For ever, O Lord," the psalmist declares, "thy word is settled in heaven." What each one must know and rejoice in, therefore, is that the heaven of Spirit, not matter, is truly at hand here and now.

On page 331 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy writes: "Midst the falling leaves of old-time faiths, above the frozen crust of creed and dogma, the divine Mind-force, filling all space and having all power, upheaves the earth." For the merely earthly sense of things to be upheaved and replaced with the idea of Spirit is good. It is not the supposed mortal mind that makes the real stir. Since the one divine Mind can be proved to be the only Mind that is, there is truly no mortal mind to produce any action. Caused by Spirit alone, the true vigor and the true calm alike go on, while any seeming turmoils of matter vanish, having no cause. Even the word of the Lord that came by the prophet Haggai, "Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come,"—even this statement concludes, "and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts." As Mrs. Eddy says on page 540 of Science and Health, "In Isaiah we read: 'I make peace, and create evil. I the Lord do all these things;' but the prophet referred to divine law as stirring up the belief in evil to its utmost, when bringing it to the surface and reducing it to its common denominator, nothingness. The muddy river-bed must be stirred in order to purify the stream."

What, then, is a man to do in the midst of the seeming stirs of modern living? In the first place, he must rejoice that there is action going on. He must know that the only true action proceeds from the divine Mind and is good, despite any human sense of it. The truth is that he must deal with God direct and not with mortals. Let him, therefore, turn to God, gladly discern what the divine Mind is doing, and persist in patient waiting on this Mind for every move. Such wise service is sure of success. In fact, it does express and thus prove the one true Spirit in the present of both time and place. If for an instant a man begins to feel sorry for himself and to believe that something is working a hardship on him, to that extent he is not using Christian Science. A very riot of evil is no cause for dismay, for it exists only in the mortal mind, which is nothing supposed to be something. Any belief of rage has to give way before the sureness that good unfolds with joyous vigor. There is just one cause, of which the true action is the effect. To enjoy the vital action of the divine Life is to fear nothing and to be touched by no falsehood.

All this, of course, is true in any case of sickness, lack, or trouble of any sort, just as in a strike or any other phase of unrest. When new symptoms arise, there is no reason for being alarmed. The relief comes through the joy in knowing that the divine Mind's action is all that can really appear. Even though one may seem to be stirred to the depths, one must rejoice that God alone is cause. Nothing can disturb the one who insists on feeling always the calm joy of Spirit. The belief in matter would resist the action of Mind and idea; but no such mere dream of nothing has any real power to resist or hinder the truth. By gladly standing firm in what one knows, one enjoys without fear the health which ever inheres in the one endless Life. Strength, freedom, plenty, order in action, all this is the divine right of the perfect man in God's image and likeness. To abide in Truth and refuse to accept as cause what is not cause is the way to be whole, holy, and healthy. The delight of this right kind of peace lies not in any drowsy sense of matter but in the awake action of Mind. This being ever awake to the demands of God is all there is to the true stir. Because it is the very essence of right living, it can never cease nor be touched in the slightest by any belief as mortal. Thus it is for each one to prove himself happy in the alert Life which truly is. This is the practice of Christian Science.

TUSCANY, ITALY.—Here are some important notices about the philanthropic work done by the Christian Scientists in Tuscany, and especially in Florence. From December, 1916, to the end of December, 1919, the committee of the Christian Science Society, Florence, have received 306,500 lire and 475 pairs of shoes from the directors of the War Relief Fund of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. To this amount must be added a further sum of 100,000 lire sent to the committee by the friends of Christian Science in America and England. These sums were distributed among those who suffered in consequence of the war, and later on in the earthquake district. Besides money and shoes much clothing was also sent from America. The treasurer formed other committees in Rome, Genoa, Siena, Ancona, Brescia, and Sarzana, and to these committees were sent money and shoes. The members of the committees had the children try on the shoes in their presence in order to give them with discrimination.

In the earthquake district, especially in the mountains, these same members went personally and distributed 100 blankets, 100 shirts and drawers for women and children and old men, 50 shawls, 100 sweaters, 100 petticoats, all in wool, and half a quintal of candles, 1 quintal of soap, and several pairs of shoes.

The help given in cities like Florence consisted mostly in paying rents, in procuring food and clothing, and in assisting widows in business, as well as establishing men who returned from military service and many mutilated, in businesses they could handle. The committee is continuing the work of relief this winter, for which we are deeply grateful as the needs are very great.—Tribuna of Rome.

GUERNSEY, CHANNEL ISLANDS, ENGLAND.—Contract has been passed in the Royal Court of Guernsey, Channel Islands, transferring a property known as Providence Place to First Church of Christ, Scientist, Guernsey. This church now has a home of its own. The property was originally a chapel, long since converted into two cottages and a workshop. Owing to its stout walls and substantial build it can easily be restored to a worthy place of worship with suitable reading rooms attached. It is hoped that the building will be ready for the annual lecture in May next.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, will move into their new church at the corner of Twentieth and Louisiana Streets, and hold the first service on March 21.

Christian Science services began in Little Rock in October, 1896, when a family who were greatly benefited by Christian Science invited a neighbor to meet with them at their residence. The interest continued and regular services were held. In December, 1907, larger quarters were needed; these were found at 1009 Cross Street. The healing and reformation became apparent. A minister's talk against Christian Science awakened much favorable interest. The sick applied for healing and found that the truth, as taught by Mrs. Eddy, brought comfort and relief.

The next progressive step was to secure a hall in the Whipple Building, second floor, May 6, 1899. In September this organization was incorporated with nineteen charter members. Later First Church of Christ, Scientist, moved into the Hollenberg Hall. In July, 1907, Second Church of Christ, Scientist, was organized with nineteen members.

A church lot was purchased by First Church at Twentieth and Louisiana Streets in 1908. During 1909 this lot was paid for, and a chapel was erected in 1910, being completed for Thanksgiving services. On January 30, 1911, the two churches mutually met together to dissolve and unite as one body, First Church of Christ, Scientist, holding services at Twentieth and Louisiana Streets until June, 1919, when it became necessary to erect our new church on the same site.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

DALLAS, TEXAS (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Brigman C. Odom, who said in part:—

The religious thinking world has grown tired of a vague, theoretical Christianity. It seeks a practical Christianity; it wants a religion that enables it to handle daily problems in a practical way, a religion that shows one how to resist and overcome the suggestions of sin, useless habits, depraved appetites, sickness,—in a word, all error. The yearning of humanity for a better way is met through the teachings of Christian Science.

SCRANTON, PA. (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Robert B. Keller, who said in part:—

Browning sang, "God's in His heaven: all's right with the world." Many agree that heaven is where God is, but few are ready to admit that all is right with the world—for what with strikes, lockouts, broken agreements, ignorance, class hatred, and unrest socially, politically, and industrially, and everywhere sin, sickness, and death, it would seem that the world is in the throes of Armageddon, which means the beginning of the end of evil,—error of every kind.

In the effort to meet the issue, religious and philosophic systems are consolidating or breaking up, and those religions which are not based upon the rock, Christ, are finding themselves being relegated to the limbo of lost hopes. The only permanent religion is that religion which is demonstrable, and which meets every human need. Christian Science is such a religion.

tion. The human mind is in a state of flux, and real peace cannot come until we steady down. One thing is clear, every one is determined that the world shall not settle down to the old pre-war ideas. We want better and saner conditions. This applies to religion as much as to material things, and practically every theory and doctrine which guided human endeavor in pre-war days is being recast.

Our Master said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." This sacred knowledge, this "secret place of the most High," is to be found in the Scriptures, but the spiritual import of Scripture, the Word of God, cannot be truly discerned and valued by the human mind. It needs spiritual understanding. Mary Baker Eddy spent years in searching the Scriptures, and her consciousness was quickened to discover the great principles of health and salvation taught therein, and she has given the world her book named "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," to enable us also to unlock the door of this great treasure house of Truth.

BRADFORD, PA. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Miss Joan Lincoln, who said in part:—

The Bible story of Daniel in the lions' den is well known, and the Christian Scientist finds it particularly helpful. Daniel's great demonstration was not only in saving himself from the lions but in proving the nothingness and powerlessness of the so-called unalterable law of the Medes and Persians. So successful was he that the king sent out a decree to all peoples and nations to worship the God of Daniel. In a later age we find Paul saying to the Romans, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." This law has been again revealed to mankind through Mary Baker Eddy.

ROCKY FORD, COLO. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by S. A. Taylor, who said in part:—

In the Bible we read about wisdom and understanding. In Proverbs it says, "With all thy getting get understanding." Through the understanding Jesus gave to his disciples, they were able to emulate the works of the Master by casting out evil and healing all manner of sickness. Jesus said of every follower of his, "The works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." Through the understanding of Jesus' teaching as given to us by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" there are thousands of living witnesses that Jesus' teaching is as demonstrable to-day as when on earth he taught and demonstrated the power of good over evil.—The Tribune.

BRISBANE, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. S. E. Fergusson, who said in part:—

Our world to-day is undergoing a great struggle. Industrial strife, famine, war, and pestilence are stalking through the land, causing much sorrow and distress. The foremost men and women of the great nations are busy seeking a remedy for these conditions. The remedy, according to Jesus and Christian Science, lies in individual right thinking, righteous judgment, based on omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent Principle or God. This right thinking of necessity leads to right action. Now Christian Science teaches us that it is our ignorance of God, divine Principle, which brings about all wrong action and discord of whatever name or nature, and that to know Him aright restores health, holiness, and harmony or right action to the individual, the community, and the nation.

Testimonies of Healing

A paragraph in the Sentinel of December 21, 1918, announcing that articles and testimonies from members of The Mother Church were welcomed for consideration by the editors, brought home very forcibly the fact that for a long time I had neglected to take advantage of this blessing.

Every earnest student of Christian Science has so much for which to be grateful that to confine his testimony to the space available in a single periodical seems a huge task, but so much of good has come to me through this avenue, I want to pass along my expression of loving gratitude in the hope it may help some other traveler on his journey from materiality to spiritual understanding.

Christian Science found me a miserable, discontented sufferer, without God or hope, although an active member in a denominational church. On a visit to a friend in Youngstown, Ohio, six years ago I was taken to a Christian Science lecture and there found so many former acquaintances enjoying the blessings of Christian Science, I at once felt here was the something for which I had been looking, and on my return to my home, then New York City, I went to a reading room in my neighborhood and borrowed a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy. I read it through as quickly as possible, only to find that I had seemingly been reading only words. What those words really meant was later revealed to me when I discovered that chronic headache, backache, and constipation had simply vanished.

A dear new-found friend lovingly pointed out to me that the best way to study the truth was through the medium Mrs. Eddy has provided,—namely, the daily lesson, and I at once set to work. Work it surely was, for it seemed that Satan had bound me so, I was unable to make any headway. However I knew "God is no respecter of persons" so I persisted with growing patience, and have been rewarded indeed. The errors of sense frequently clamor for recognition, but the temptation to believe in the reality of matter grows less and less.

I am grateful for membership in The Mother Church and a branch society, for the privilege of having had class instruction, which I recognize as one of the necessary human footsteps. My gratitude for the periodicals and for all of Mrs. Eddy's writings is unbounded. For the realization of Love's protecting power during the absence of my only son in the service of his country, I have surely been blessed, as he has passed through the experience without harm. My daily endeavor is to live the life that will best express my gratitude to our Leader, who has shown me the way to know and to love God and Christ Jesus the Wayshower.—(Mrs.) Ida B. Magill, Spring Valley, N. Y.

I am indeed grateful for the teachings of Christian Science. From early childhood I felt the need of understanding God's laws, and I was taught in the Sunday schools and read the Bible, I thought, understandingly, yet I felt a hungering for something I had not yet found. As I grew to manhood, I searched the Scriptures and investigated some of the different religions, with the hope of finding something that would enable me to know I was journeying in the way of God's appointing, yet the hungering for something I had not found remained with me. Later I was overcome with the claim of several different diseases, including rheumatism and heart disease, which was followed by a complete breakdown with nervous prostration. I tried different physicians, and many kinds of patent medicines, but grew worse all the time. I received no encouragement from the doctors, and I made up my mind I would rather pass on than suffer as I was.

At this time, which was about six years ago, I was told about Christian Science and, being willing to try anything, after having learned how to reach a practitioner, I at once asked for help. To my great surprise as well as that of my friends, in just a few days I began to improve, and soon every discordant condition was healed. The hungering and thirsting for something I had never found was quenched through the reading of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and Mrs. Eddy's other writings. The Bible and the Christian Science textbook are my daily companions. I am indeed grateful to God and to Mrs. Eddy for giving us directions, that show us the way into the kingdom, and to my many friends who so lovingly helped me on my journey out of the wilderness. I am indeed grateful for church work, for membership in The Mother Church and in a branch church, and for class instruction. My greatest desire is to become a true Christian Scientist, one not only through words but through deeds, who demonstrates what the knowledge of Truth gives to mankind.

John Adam Burdell, Little Rock, Ark.

My little daughter nearly eight years of age was suddenly thrown down by a huge auto coal truck. She was picked up in an unconscious state and remained thus for days. The hospital physicians and nurses looked after her carefully, but with no hopes of her recovery. She finally did gradually become conscious; then an examination took place by our family physician which resulted in the verdict of concussion of the brain and fracture of the pelvic bone, producing hip joint complications. An X ray was taken of the hip joint, which showed a much higher elevation. This according to medical science would have necessitated weights and pulleys; but knowing that the child was under Christian Science treatment and that Truth makes men every whit whole, I protested against these measures. While the healing was going on, I noticed while visiting the child that both of her eyes were crossed, and that one ear was deaf entirely. The following day the eyes became natural and normal, and the hearing was completely restored. The little girl begged to return home, and on the ninth day it was decided to remove her, and on the tenth she came home under the verdict of being a helpless, hopeless cripple. Work was continued, and on or about the fourteenth day her leg became straight, and three days later she was perfectly well. In a few more days the owner of the truck came forward and paid all expenses including hospital bill and a new outfit for the little girl, showing God does meet our every human need.

Our gratitude as a family to Christian Science is unbounded. A case of mumps was healed overnight by what understanding I had gained. We have seen other contagious diseases also overcome by the power of Truth. My husband had a healing of an ulcerated tooth. Many other minor conditions were met also.—(Mrs.) Annie Fry, Reading, Pa.

In March, 1918, I suffered from a severe form of rheumatism in the lower joints and back. I was aware that just at that time my thoughts were often clouded, due to the strain of visible, material conditions, but this only spurred me on to greater zeal again to see the light through the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy and through right thought. Even then, however, the pain did not cease. The limbs, and back especially, became stiffer from day to day, thus hindering me from moving freely. While in this distress I called on a Christian Science practitioner in Hamburg for help, as I had done several years previously, with wonderful results.

This occurred on a Friday. On the following Saturday evening, while sitting in the armchair, I suddenly experienced a sensation of freedom, arose from the chair and discovered that the pain had left and that I could move freely. In an instant it became clear to me that through the help of Christian Science the difficulties, which had seemingly separated me from divine Truth and Love, had been overcome. Slight attacks of the pain recurred occasionally, but the unreality of this disease was soon completely realized.

I give this testimony with heartfelt gratitude, desiring to do my share in making the omnipresent help of God known to all who do not yet know of this healing truth.—(Miss) MATHILDE FISCHER, Greifswald, Pommern, Germany.

Before I was healed two years ago I was a physical wreck. I suffered with acute gastritis and kidney trouble. My blood was turning to water, I had rheumatism, and had not been free from headache for five months. I was taking a drug every day to keep in condition to teach. I was told by the most prominent physicians here and in Hot Springs, Arkansas, that I was suffering from one of the most acute forms of disease known to medical science and that unless I was operated upon I would either be dead or insane in less than six weeks' time. It was while I was in this condition that blood poisoning appeared in my left foot. Through the solicitation of a friend of the family, my husband asked for help for me in Christian Science. He had no faith in it whatever, but was willing to try anything. In less than thirty minutes I was quiet and in an hour I was rational and asleep. In three days I was able to be up and teach, almost all the swelling had gone, and in a week you could not tell I had ever had blood poisoning. I have been healed of the other diseases also and of the headaches, so that to say I am grateful does not begin to express my feelings.

We were in terrible financial conditions, but we have been benefited wonderfully through Christian Science. For all these many proofs of God's mercy and care I am grateful, but I am most grateful for the spiritual uplift and the knowledge I have gained of God. I am a better wife, a better mother, a better daughter, a better friend, and a better neighbor than I was before studying Christian Science. The last words my husband used to hear when leaving for work were, "Oh, if I could die before night," and the first words when he came home were, "Oh, if I could die before morning." You see I was helpless, I was past turning in bed, he had to turn me at night and others in the day. Now I sing, Praise God for my life, I want to live to glorify and magnify Him.—(Mrs.) J. M. MAYFIELD, Houston, Texas.

I am very thankful to God for all the blessings received through Christian Science. It is eight years since the wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, was lent me by a friend and it has helped me to understand the Bible and above all to put into practice the teachings of Christ Jesus. Since then every time error has presented itself it has always been overcome with Truth. It would take too long to enumerate all the victories obtained through my own demonstration or with the help of practitioners. Toothache, boils, dropsy, eye trouble, a felon, anæmia, fatigue, lumbago were among the ailments overcome, and most of them were healed instantaneously. Through Christian Science I have found that peace and joy which the world cannot give and which come from God alone. The French translation of Science and Health and of the many pamphlets, also Le Héraut de Christian Science, have been received with great joy. I feel deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the good she has brought to humanity. I am also grateful to the faithful friends who have led me in this way of light. God is indeed Love.

MRS. E. MOREILLON-BURY, Gryon s/Bex, Switzerland.

I wish to express my gratitude for all the help and good I have received through Christian Science.

Since first becoming interested in Christian Science a little over five years ago I have been helped in every way possible. I was healed of chronic stomach trouble, after suffering for over ten years, by simply reading a little pamphlet on Christian Science given me by a stranger whose wife had received healing through Christian Science. The next day after reading this pamphlet I threw all the medicine I had away and began to pick up weight rapidly, gaining forty pounds in less than a month.

This healing took place through Christian Science after having tried every material remedy that seemed possible, dieting to almost starvation, fasting for two weeks, osteopathy, and about every medicine known and prescribed for this particular ailment, without more than temporary relief. I also have overcome to a great extent the Wanderlust and restlessness; for over fourteen years previous to finding Christian Science I was continually on the go but now all I have to do is change my thoughts,—know the truth about place; that it is spiritual and not material and that my place is right where I am in Mind.

I have been helped financially through Christian Science. On one occasion while in San Francisco I got to the point where I had to see a practitioner, having gotten down to my last dime and no one to turn to but God for help. I was helped the next morning by receiving a check through the mail, this check coming from a source that I was absolutely ignorant of having anything due me, being bonus money from work done in Los Angeles months previous. These are only a few of the many blessings I have received through the help of Christian Science and I am very, very grateful for all the literature, the lectures, and the loving practitioners that have helped me to gain a little understanding of what God really is and that He is a very present help in time of trouble. My great desire is to know more of God and man in His image and likeness and to walk in the light of Truth and Love as it is revealed to me.

CHARLES KLEBER, Washington, D.C.

When I was about ten years old a simple explanation of Christian Science appealed so strongly to my child-thought as being the truth that I was enabled to overcome an attack of stomach trouble which the doctor said I would be subject to until it was finally outgrown. Although during these illnesses I usually spent a week or two in bed I was able to get up after a day, much to the surprise of my family. After this experience Christian Science occupied a very small part of my thought, crowded out by seemingly more important things. Then about six years later my mother was to undergo a very serious operation with little hope of recovery, and was sent home from the hospital for a few days before to see us for what might prove to be the last time. During these few days a neighbor proposed Christian Science treatment, which my mother consented to try. After a week there was a marked improvement in her condition. She did not return to the hospital for the operation, and in several weeks was completely healed. Even after this beautiful demonstration of the all-power of God I put off the study of Christian Science until several years ago, when I was cured in five treatments of what a physician diagnosed as a very serious case of diphtheria. We asked for help from a reading room and the practitioner who was sent has guided me through several experiences.

Two years ago this summer my baby girl was born. Only the practitioner and a Christian Science nurse were present and it was a practically painless experience and one of great rejoicing. My baby is happy and healthy. She had no trouble whatever in teething. Only twice has it been necessary to ask for Christian Science treatment for her and each time the healing was instantaneous.

In countless other ways Christian Science has been an ever present help, one of which was the protection and absence of fear during air raids. I can never be sufficiently grateful to Christian Science and to its Founder, Mrs. Eddy, who courageously explored the way for us, and has made practical and demonstrable in this age the teachings of Christ Jesus.

(Mrs.) Josephine R. Foster, London, England.

Some three years ago I came into a degree of understanding of Christian Science through great tribulation. Material methods had failed to heal me of a nervous breakdown, and then I sought God with all my heart and with all my strength. A man who had come a long distance to offer his assistance in helping my family and myself in a problem which had presented itself, on seeing a copy of the Scriptures in the farmhouse where we were stopping,—I went to the mountains to be cured,—invited me to try Christian Science, and he assured me that God was good. This wonderful statement opened a new world, one more bright, more merciful, more loving, and more kind, to a man who had held a different belief of God, and upon my return to the city I asked for help from a Christian Science practitioner. This was lovingly given and I was healed in one treatment.

For this and many other healings, including the overcoming of a desire for tobacco and drink, and for the overcoming of financial difficulties I am very grateful for Christian Science, as revealed to us through the works of Mrs. Eddy. I am indeed a very happy man.

Charles L. Glass, Jersey City, N. J.

So many wonderful things have come to me since I commenced the study of Christian Science that I feel I should express my gratitude for all the enlightenment I have received. I am so overjoyed in having found the truth through Christian Science,—though I began its investigation in a spirit of curiosity,—that I can hardly wait for my friends to know it too. The blessings that have come to me are too numerous to enumerate. It is a comfort to know that "God is a very present help in trouble," and that every problem that arises can be overcome with the knowledge of divine Principle.

My children are turning to divine help for guidance in their problems. Not only in their daily work but in school examinations they have had confidence in the power of divine Mind to help them. It is indeed a great joy to know that we have divine protection all the time and we need only have faith and understanding to keep us free. My young son had a severe fall on the ice while skating and hit his forehead very hard. I arrived a few minutes after and when I reached him there were tears in his eyes and evidently he was suffering considerably. I immediately began declaring the truth as we understood it in Christian Science, and shortly he continued skating. People who saw him fall thought he was stunned or had fractured his forehead and were very solicitous and advised me to bathe his head in hot water to prevent swelling and discoloration. However we trusted entirely to God's power, and much to every one's surprise no black and blue mark developed to show the bruise.

I am so grateful for all my blessings that I do not let a day go by without saying: "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always." We have had some remarkable demonstrations of divine guidance in finding things that were lost. The thought has come to me that nothing is lost in God's kingdom, and the results have been astonishing. My greatest desire is to share with those about me the happiness I am experiencing.

(Mrs.) E. Yerxa, Boston, Mass.

It is with a heart filled with gratitude that I wish to acknowledge publicly what Christian Science has done for me and for our family. My attention was first called to the subject by an aunt who gave me the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I read one chapter, put it in the bookcase, and never looked at it again until two years later when my attention was once more called to the subject through hearing an evangelist preach a sermon against what he thought was Christian Science. At this time, I suffered an attack of sciatic rheumatism, and calling for the book I began to read. The first day's reading impressed me strongly with the spiritual beauty of the teaching; but I had no faith whatever in the physical healing. On the third day, however, while I was reading, a sense of infinite bliss came over me, and all physical troubles vanished into nothingness. I did not, at the time, think it was the reading of Science and Health that had healed me; but I soon discovered that broken arches from which I had suffered for years and for which I had worn heavy steel supports, were completely and perfectly healed—and I might add, they have remained so. Then I knew what had wrought the healing, and God has been my only Physician since that experience.

The first glimpse of this great truth about God and man made such a change in my thought that I felt welcomed into a new world, and every member of the family seemed to receive the benefit as well as I. I remained in this state of thought, or, as one might say, on the mountain top, for about five years, and during that time, many beautiful proofs of Truth blessed our home. My husband took up the study of Christian Science and in three weeks' time was healed of the tobacco habit of many years' standing; and a little later was given a much better position, which came to him without solicitation on his part. During the war our two sons were in military service, one in the United States Navy and the other in the air service, and in that trying period I was constantly happy in the faith and assurance of their safety and well-being under the power and protection of the Most High: and though they were in the air or on the water, I knew that "underneath are the everlasting arms." Perhaps the most beautiful part of the entire experience was the complete overcoming of any sense of separation.

Conditions seemed in every way to manifest the utmost harmony until about eight months ago, when error presented itself to me in the form of resentment, stubbornness, dislike, self-will, and other errors, which, I see now, only had the power I gave them. For many months I struggled under a cloud of darkness, and when the light finally came I felt that, like the prodigal, I had returned from a far country where God was unknown, to a world of happiness, joy, peace, and prosperity. I am grateful for the varied channels which Mrs. Eddy so wisely provided, through which this truth reaches the field. I also wish to express my gratitude for class instruction, and I always desire to remember the purity of thought with which this instruction was given us. I am striving to prove my gratitude by coming nearer to God through right thinking and right living. My greatest desire is that I may so live as to be worthy the name of Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) BERTHA KULLMER, Maquoketa, Iowa.

In appreciation of the wonderful help I have received since coming into Christian Science I send the following testimony in the hope that it may be of benefit to those who read it. While I did not come into Christian Science for any physical healing, since taking up its study I have had many beautiful healings, two of which I would like to tell about. One was the leaving off of glasses worn for what the oculist called astigmatism. I was informed that I would have to wear them continually, but they were discarded after one treatment. This was two years ago and to-day my sight is normal. The other was the healing of a sprain affecting a tendon in the foot; the trouble was overcome in two days without my losing a minute from business, whereas the same difficulty once before kept me away from business two weeks, part of the time in bed.

While I am very grateful for all the physical healings I have experienced, I am more grateful than words can express for the wonderful mental and moral uplift derived from the reading of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, along with the Bible and all other authorized literature. I also want to thank God for the help received from our loving practitioners and for the privilege of membership in The Mother Church and in a branch church.—HERBERT BERLINER, New York, N. Y.

Having been studying Christian Science about five years, it is with a heart full of love that I wish to make the following testimonies of healings. I took up the study of Christian Science after having seen a lady healed of consumption in its worst stages. After having read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy through once, I did not understand a word that I had read; it was just the same to me as if it were so much Greek. I asked the practitioner about this, and she told me to keep studying and it would become clear to me, which it gradually did. My first healings in Christian Science were slow, for which I am very grateful, because it forced me to study hard, which I would not have done had they been instantaneous.

Pneumonia with almost a closed throat was overcome with a few treatments. Constipation of years' standing was overcome in one treatment. At the birth of a baby boy, I might have died had it not been for the Science treatment which I had at the time. A physician was present who said that the child was dead, but the practitioner held to the truth and in a few moments he cried with the vigor of a child several days old. This child is now almost two years old and in splendid health. My older boy had a swelling in his head healed in two treatments from me. For these blessings and others too numerous to mention, I am most grateful, and my prayer is that I may become a better Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) MARY BOLDEN, Denver, Colo.

For over nineteen years the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, have been our only healers. During that time fear in many forms has been overcome and a doctor has never been called. Our two boys did not know the taste of a drug until last winter, when the elder after an attack of influenza seemed to have such a severe cough that his father, who is not a student of Christian Science, said he must have a cough mixture. This was procured and taken, but without benefit. When it was stopped the healing was accomplished through Christian Science in a short time.

What Mrs. Eddy says on page 406 of Science and Health, "The Bible contains the recipe for all healing," has become clearer to me lately, showing that not only sickness but distrust, irritability, sin of all kinds, even the little so-called worries and troubles that try to bother us from day to day can all be destroyed by an application of the truth therein contained. Through a recent article in the Sentinel I saw that in a case of what seemed delayed healing we were not to be busy searching for a cure for something, but we must diligently seek to understand the perfect man. It is a great joy to be able to help others outside my own family, and I have proved over and over again that God is both Physician and Surgeon and a very present help in every time of need.

(Mrs.) MARY WELSH, Kinistino, Sask., Canada.

With deep gratitude for the many blessings received through Christian Science I wish to relate the following experience. For some time I had been troubled with severe pain in the left arm, which became so distressing that I was obliged to give up my profession as piano teacher. I consulted a physician and he gave me a remedy, but in spite of several weeks' treatment this did not have any effect.

In my extremity I requested help from a Christian Science practitioner. I went to her in great pain, the arm being in a sling. It was wonderful, for upon arriving home I was already able to move the arm a little, and the next morning was able to comb my hair. I went to the practitioner a second time, and my arm was then completely healed. My heart is filled with thankfulness to God. I am also grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for guiding me to this wonderful way.

I have received so much help from Christian Science I would like to tell others some of the blessings I have received. I have been healed of many physical ills by Christian Science, of neuralgia, rheumatism, indigestion, headache, a severe case of the grippe, and many other ills, and have been protected from severe injury many times from falls. I am alone, as it were, for I have not spoken to but one Scientist since I have been here (in the last six years), and have not attended a Christian Science service for over ten years, though I have had a longing to all these years. I have the Journal and Sentinel and Quarterly, however, and read a portion of the Lesson-Sermon every day. I am thankful for every blessing received through Christian Science, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us this great truth.

Signs of the Times

[Fullerton (Calif.) News]

There is much food for thought in the announcement that on a recent Sunday two hundred persons, clergymen and laymen, representing practically all the Protestant churches of Los Angeles, held a meeting to discuss the formation of a Christian League of Healing.

Newspaper reports indicate that that meeting came about as the result of a widespread feeling that the time has come for the church to give its close attention to the study of Biblical healing and its application to present day conditions.

To the thoughtful church member and churchgoers it will come as something of a shock that it should be necessary for the church, using the term in the broader sense, to find it necessary to revive belief in a doctrine which would seem to be as plainly set forth in the New Testament as language can make it. A reading of the four gospels certainly shows that not only did Christ practice healing at all times but he also enjoined it on his followers. The history of the early church also indicates that the doctrine of healing was an integral part of the Christian experience until about the time that Constantine embraced Christianity and made it, in effect at least, a state religion.

We do not know how it appeals to the theologian, but it is difficult for a layman to read the New Testament and satisfy himself to lose sight of the passages which relate to the healing of bodily ills without losing faith in the other teachings, since they would seem to be so knit together that loss of faith in one means loss of faith in all.

A revival of a living faith in the Gospels will not only re-establish the practice of Christian healing but will be felt in a thousand other ways not the least of which will be a revival of the joy of Christian living which has long been a stranger to many so-called Christian hearts.

[Gate City, Keokuk, Iowa]

Speaking broadly the picture theaters are filled because they give the people what they want, and the churches are unfilled because they do not give the people what they want. This is elementary knowledge, evident to everybody. But when it comes to the question what the churches can, consistently with their mission, give to the people which the people want, opinions differ, and no one seems sure. The world gives many things which the church cannot; and when people turn to the church, it is for things that are not to be elsewhere gained. The church can give truth. This is really its stock in trade, its legitimate and exclusive line.

[Indianapolis (Ind.) News]

It is notable that money is being expended by the Federal government in an educational campaign, the advisability of which is debatable. Many of the people whose money is being used for the purpose are bitterly opposed to certain aspects of the government's health and educational activities, because they regard them as tending to encourage rather than deter vice. Some months ago a government agency indorsed a motion picture as "educational," when the film was suppressed in some states as unfit to be shown. The incident is illustrative of the complications likely to follow the nation's meddling in matters not undebatably within its province.

[The Sunday Mining Gazette, Houghton, Mich.]

The people need religion. That's the truth. They need it as never before. The world to-day is going through a crisis that is quite as important as the war itself was. The man who takes his religion seriously these days is a better citizen because of that fact, as he always is. In religion is the only solace for the general world-wide unrest. It is the one answer. More money does not allay social unrest. Money simply provides the purchase power for more expensive displays of material prosperity. It never yet brought contentment or real satisfaction to a single individual. Temporarily some people believe that they achieve a state of contentment by the accumulation of cash. But they readily find that there are a great many things that money cannot buy.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

I SHOULD like to take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude for the help that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, also the SENTINEL, JOURNAL, and pamphlets were to me while on active service in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria. The wonderful part being whenever the literature failed to reach me from home through the ship being sunk or destroyed, I was able to find copies in nearly every place visited in the Holy Land—really wonderful considering the vast territory covered by our troops from Soudan right through Egypt, the lonely desert, Palestine, Syria, to near Aleppo. I well remember instances of being bombed, et cetera, of duty in cholera camps and on malaria stunts, of lying on the desert so bad from malaria that I was really unable to help myself, due to fatigue, in which some particular article on the Home Forum Page was the very help that enabled me to overcome all conditions. Truly, "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy, page 494, line 10), and it was like meeting the best friend on earth to walk into a mess room canteen or recreation room to see and read the MONITOR, which was the most frequently met periodical. Thank God that Mrs. Eddy brought Christian Science to the world and furthermore thank God that Mrs. Eddy instituted the Publishing Society to publish the wonderful array of papers, et cetera, giving the truth hourly. The Distribution Committee's work during the war is a record of efficiency.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII MAY 8, 1920 NUMBER 36

"Quod Erat Demonstrandum"

JAMES L. BRUCE

EARLY in their study of geometry students meet with the words "quod erat demonstrandum." It becomes more familiar to them in its abbreviated form Q. E. D., which they soon learn to repeat glibly and with a sense of satisfaction, for it marks the completion of their task, meaning as it does, "which was to be proved." Mathematics has furnished numberless helpful illustrations to the student of Christian Science, and in this branch called geometry, with its necessary steps from the statement of a proposition to be proved to the final Q. E. D., there may be found many valuable lessons.

The author of the mathematical textbook has gathered the propositions from various sources, for some of them are hundreds or even thousands of years old, and has stated them not as suppositions but as facts. To the teacher they are facts, and it is to the student alone that they may seem anything else. To him they may seem so many words until he has proved them, but he only is affected by his conclusions regarding them. The mathematical world does not stand aside eagerly awaiting his decisions. It already knows the truth of the propositions. It also knows that the conclusions the student may reach have no effect on the subject one way or the other. What the student does prove is, however, of tremendous importance to himself: even whether or not he shall have a share in the benefit which comes from a knowledge of the subject.

As Mary Baker Eddy herself has said in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 333): "The advent of Jesus of Nazareth marked the first century of the Christian era, but the Christ is without beginning of years or end of days. Throughout all generations both before and after the Christian era, the Christ, as the spiritual idea,—the reflection of God,—has come with some measure of power and grace to all prepared to receive Christ, Truth." Thus Christian Science is not a mere theory of hers, put forth for discussion. Its Principle is the "Ancient of Days." In the work above mentioned Mrs. Eddy has stated propositions which have been proved by the prophets of old, by Jesus of Nazareth, and by some of his followers, including herself, all down the ages.

So the student of Christian Science is not called upon to demonstrate a theory, but he is required to prove for himself what has already been discovered and established. His opinions will not affect the eternal facts in the slightest degree. If he should even cast aside the textbook of Christian Science, just as a student in geometry may discard his guide, no one but himself would be the loser. On the other hand, every statement of Christian Science which he proves is part of his present and eternal well-being, and, humanly speaking, no truth does so enter until he has proved it. In other words, he must write his own Q. E. D. after each problem, and until he has done this he cannot claim his full share of good.

Students of Christian Science need help at times in solving their problems, just as a student in geometry may need help. When these occasions arise, assistance should be sought and obtained, but it is to be noted that it is "help in solving" that should be sought and not some one to solve the entire problem. A teacher in mathematics may demonstrate a proposition, working it out on paper for a pupil in a most satisfactory manner, but if the pupil, seeing that the problem has been solved, immediately destroys the paper without getting an understanding of the method involved, he is evidently no farther advanced than he was before, for he sought not help to enable him to do his work but some one to complete his task.

The student in Christian Science can do exactly the same thing; he can go to a practitioner when there is a claim of error to meet, and the claim may be met, but unless he has learned something of the way in which it was met he has scarcely added more to his store of knowledge than has the pupil who destroyed his geometrical solution without making the method his own. The practitioner also fails in his duty unless he does his part in imparting an understanding to the student.

Occasionally a pupil in geometry has been known to "learn by heart" the reasoning process by which he can get from the statement of the proposition to the Q. E. D.; but when the problem is slightly changed to test his ability in reasoning, very marked embarrassment follows. He finds that he knows nothing of the actual reasoning involved and it is evident that he has not solved his problem. An understanding must be gained. There is no other way. The student in Christian Science may fall into the same error. He may be able to repeat passage after passage from the Bible or Science and Health and still be no nearer proving his problem than the student in geometry who tried to appropriate what he had not yet made his own. His task is to prove, and nothing short of a thorough understanding which will enable him to do so with success will satisfy.

Again, the student of geometry may correctly state his proposition but follow it up with incorrect reasoning, and finish with Q. E. D. He has simply made one assertion followed by another that he has proved the first. He has done nothing of the sort. His work will not stand examination. The student of Christian Science may also make entirely correct statements, and assert that he has proved them, but unless the understanding is present which effectually brings forth the manifestation of Principle, there is still more work to do.

Thus in the case of either student, he is seeking to prove something for himself, and nothing short of the proof avails anything. He may deceive others. He may be deceived. But in the time of test it is what he has proved, what he has really made his own that counts. When the student of Christian Science is brought face to face with a problem and applies a clear understanding of God, Principle, to it and thereby proves what he knows, he can with honesty write Q. E. D. and with assurance and peace "which passeth all understanding."

"Experiences, testimonies, and remarks"

MARIAN CAMPBELL

A CAREFUL study of the definitions of the words above quoted makes it quite plain what sort of talks are expected of all who take part in that portion of the Wednesday evening meetings set aside, as Mrs. Eddy says, for "experiences, testimonies, and remarks on Christian Science" (Church Manual, p. 122). A dictionary defines experience as "actual living through an event;" a synonym for testimony is "proof," and the word "remark" is explained in these words: "The mention of that which deserves attention or notice." The relating, therefore, of some experience through which one has passed in such a way as to prove that the healing was brought about through the application of the teachings of Christian Science, but eliminating all unnecessary details, would conform to the spirit of this provision.

There are of course many more definitions given for each of these words, but in none of them do we find reason for repeating entire articles from the Church Manual or any of Mrs. Eddy's works, although the quoting of a sentence or two from them or from the Bible, to illustrate a point, may prove very helpful. Of course each article, whether long or short, of our Leader's writings, is teeming with healing power, but it is not usually through hearing it repeated or through the casual reading of it that the full import of any given article is gained; but through earnest, quiet study Truth unfolds to us and blesses us.

While the Wednesday evening meetings are beneficial to all who attend, yet they are primarily for the stranger within our gates, who is perhaps in need of physical or mental healing. While he might agree to the beauty of some lengthy passage from Mrs. Eddy's books, what he wants to hear is testimony of living witnesses who have proved the practicability of applying these statements from the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" to their everyday lives and have been made happier and healthier thereby.

In the Manual of The Mother Church (Art. VIII, Sect. 24), Mrs. Eddy says, "Testimony in regard to the healing of the sick is highly important." Is it not reasonable to suppose that one seeking relief, who has been led to visit a Wednesday evening meeting in a Christian Science church, will be far more encouraged by hearing those present give concise accounts of physical healings, of the overcoming of sorrow and hate, of being made better and happier,—because through the study of Christian Science they have learned that the promises and statements in the Bible are true and apply to people and conditions to-day just as surely as they did centuries ago,—than he would be, should he hear long quotations, even though these quotations are followed by the statement that they are being given with the hope that they will bring healing to the hearers as they did to the one repeating them.

After the inquirer has heard testimonies of healing he may go to a Christian Science reading room and there read and study for himself from the literature such articles as are most enlightening to him; for what is especially helpful to one person in overcoming a discordant condition may not heal this same condition in another, since some entirely different statement of the truth may be the one to bring conviction to him.

Let us in our Wednesday evening meetings give "experiences, testimonies, and remarks on Christian Science" which will show to the visitor that because of our better understanding of the Bible, gained through studying it in the light of Christian Science, there has come into our lives more of joy, health, and harmony. If we do this it is almost sure to follow that the stranger will investigate the source from which our good has come, and he will in turn be telling others how he has been helped. In Proverbs we read, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Ambition

D. ALLYN GARBER

THERE have been many good and enlightening articles written on true ambition, and is it any wonder that it comes to so many individuals to endeavor to throw light on a subject of such universal interest? Ambition has always been regarded in human experience as an admirable and even an essential quality, with such a high premium placed on its development that Christian Scientists learn very early in their study the necessity for differentiating between false human ambition and that which Mrs. Eddy defines so clearly in her Message for 1902, when she says, "It does not follow that power must mature into oppression; indeed, right is the only potency; and the only true ambition is to serve God and to help the race."

How early in human experience does the world recommend developing the ambitious outlining of material endeavors and results! Is it not often, too often, the case that parents are eagerly speculating with and encouraging the children in their homes, with the hope that they may discover some "leaning" or tendency toward things mechanical or things musical, toward literature, art, law, and so on, thinking perhaps that when such a discovery is made, the attainment of these juvenile ambitions may be strengthened and encouraged? How often these early human aspirations would be proved deceptions of the most disappointing sort if human beings were compelled to pursue the vocation throughout their experience that they pictured as ideal and selected as their preference in their very early youth.

Does not this same result follow in other experiences when human ambition is given recognition? How frequently have we all thought at some time in our experience, and perhaps oftener than we realize, that if we could simply attain some certain position in life, a certain definite income, or some other of innumerable gilded goals, that we would be perfectly happy and in a much better position to do good, unhampered by the struggle that we seem to be experiencing to maintain our position in society! If we would but stop and reason, we would discover that the "struggle" is not necessary in maintaining our rightful place in the world, but is a struggle that we are imposing upon ourselves in the very act of trying to materialize some human ambition. The banishment of the struggle for this material gain and the renewal of our trust in God's ability to place correctly, direct, and protect every right idea, would effectually solve our problem and give us the same clear understanding the psalmist must have had of the futility of human ambition when he wrote, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

It is very unlikely that the world will at once admit that nothing but evil results from human ambition; however, it must be clear to all that it is the very thing that is the cause of much of the destructive factioning of parties and classes, so called, and likewise of a large percentage of the present day crime. It is interesting to investigate and note how many of the great thinkers and writers have recognized the evil of human ambition. Shakespeare often condemned human ambition, one of his splendid sentences being:—

> Glory is like a circle on the water,
> Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself
> Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

The world, however, claims to have little use for the one without human ambition and lauds him who claims for himself a definite portion of the world's goods and demonstrates his willingness to stand up and fight for his claims, rushing around to show the world that he is sincere and determined to "get there." The student of Christian Science, however, is alert to the claims of this evil, sees through the subtle veil of material temptations, and substitutes the true sense of ambition for the false human sense. Thus he first assures himself and then the world that he is right in his stand, by demonstration through the practice of the teachings of Christian Science of right success, happiness, health, and holiness. The first myth recorded in the Bible, pictures the dissatisfaction of mortal mind,—Adam, the counterfeit of the real man, seeking something apart from the gifts of God. Judas, too, it is recorded, allowed himself to be misguided by the belief in material possessions, the value of silver. Likewise, the same false ambition tempted Joseph's brothers to dispose of him that his inheritance might be theirs. Did not even the disciples of Jesus forget the impartiality of Love in their own self-seeking and speculating as to who should be the greatest among them? Throughout the ages human ambition has been the tempter which has lured individuals, it seems, off the narrow road into the bypaths of self-seeking and disappointment.

Among the definitions of and notes on ambition we find in a dictionary, "Ambition has personal advancement or preferment as its end; as, ambition for fame, ambition to hold office, to acquire wealth." It is not difficult to see the falsity of this kind of ambition. Neither is it difficult to foresee the wondrous changes which will be wrought in human experience when we learn to put aside self-will and satisfy ourselves with the realization of what our Leader says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 110), "What grander ambition is there than to maintain in yourselves what Jesus loved, and to know that your example, more than words, makes morals for mankind!" When we stop and think of the great percentage of time which mortals spend in anticipating the future, in trying to plan an easy experience for themselves, we discover how little is demonstrated of faith in divine Love's guidance. As a matter of fact, most of the time spent in material preparations is time wasted, since men are not capable of humanly outlining what their future occupations or positions will be; neither does the future depend in any degree on human endeavor or material planning. We need look no farther than to-day. We can rest assured that if we strive for "growth in grace" and for a humble realization and practice of the Commandments, as elucidated in our textbooks, we cannot be crowded out of our rightful place, cannot receive any reward from the world, nor be deprived of anything by the world.

There is complete satisfaction in knowing that every true idea is individually necessary to the completeness of Mind's universe; that as the image of God man's importance is established and we can never be deprived of this eternal identification. Here our occupation is fixed, our business is forever that of reflecting good, and our maintenance is from the one infinite source, God. This does not mean that we must necessarily give up our material business at this step in our experience; rather does it prove that our every right endeavor will be crowned with greater success, in doing whatever seems to be our present lot, and doing it well, with the object of glorifying God in right activity, rather than competing with our fellow man for place and power. At many times in the writer's experience, when business problems seemed to crowd thought and tempt him to think that this matter of worldly affairs was a big and responsible task, has he been comforted and refreshed by the loving guidance expressed by Mrs. Eddy in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 154): "Have no ambition, affection, nor aim apart from holiness. Forget not for a moment, that God is All-in-all—therefore, that in reality there is but one cause and effect." Christian Scientists have a big contract to-day, one that gives ample employment for every moment of their time, the great privilege and duty to lessen evil in the world and to demonstrate, as did Jesus, the perfection of man.

Seeing

PEARL E. KEELER

THROUGHOUT the Scriptures the word "eye" is frequently used to denote spiritual vision, as when Job declared upon gaining a clearer thought of God, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth thee;" and the prophet Isaiah exclaimed, "For mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Again he says, "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off." Certainly they had no more intention of thus affirming the operation of a physical nerve than had Jesus when he said to Philip, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." On page 586 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy gives us the scientific definition of eyes: "Spiritual discernment,—not material but mental."

To the so-called mortal, the function of sight may seem finite, limited, and imperfect, manifesting frequently the impure images of a carnal existence wholly apart from spiritual experience. To this phase of belief, diseases of retina and optic nerve may seem consequences of the day's trials, while approaching blindness may be accepted as a necessity of increasing age. The healing of astigmatism and the various claims of mortal mind with reference to eyes is frequently the first proof to the student of the regenerating power of Truth, as taught in Christian Science. Such was the joyful experience of the writer when, after only a few weeks' reading of our textbook and the New Testament life of Jesus, glasses which for ten years had been believed necessary were laid away as entirely useless. Of course the metaphysical reason for such a transformation was not clearly understood at the time, but even then the vision of the Christ was growing clearer as consciousness manifest, while the scales of material belief were falling so rapidly that even the temporary acceptance of sight apart from good was reversed.

Seeing is a function of Mind, whose process embraces the full measure of Truth's unfoldment and is limited by neither time, space, nor law. As the activity of conscious being, sight reveals the riches of the spiritual universe, continually present in the consciousness of good. The true man, reflecting the harmony of spiritual unity with the beautiful, the pure, and the true, can have no fear of failing eyes or defective nerves. The sense of matter fades before the reality of Spirit; and the unselfish discernment of the omnipresence of good, manifested as Life, Truth, Love, Principle, brings a man into perfect communion with the one Mind, where all is peace, joy, and conscious power.

Our Leader tells us in Science and Health (p. 486): "Sight, hearing, all the spiritual senses of man, are eternal.

Digitized by Google

They cannot be lost. Their reality and immortality are in Spirit and understanding, not in matter,—hence their permanence." As a man learns through Christian Science to see spiritually, he looks beyond fading finite forms to the realization of Immanuel, or "God with us," the expression of the one ever operative divine Principle, manifesting itself through the various activities of Life and being. In this consciousness he finds rest and peace, no matter how loudly the voices of error may seem to call. The epitome of Christian healing is stated by our Leader in Science and Health on page 476: "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

Independence

GUY H. DEMPSTER

IN view of the fact that the world has arrived at a stage when as never before independence is being sought after by the individual, the classes, the nations, the thinkers, it is very essential that the true meaning of that state should be understood in order that the pitfalls laid by human sense whenever its claims are threatened by a right idea, may be seen, avoided, and eventually destroyed. How many times in human history has a good purpose become dim, until the cry, "What crimes are committed in thy name," goes up from those who were looking to human sense for permanent liberty. The disappointment is inevitable, as mortal sense cannot free itself from its self-imposed fetters. Uncontrolled by Principle, endeavors toward attaining independence soon acquire the characteristics of the counterfeit in dependence on will power, which ends in abject slavery or in disregard for law and order, leading to "chaos and old night."

Mankind may take hope, however, for the new light is dawning and, as Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (Preface, p. vii), "The time for thinkers has come." Christian Science, that "way of holiness," in which "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err," guides thought on this as on all other human problems, in the right direction toward the realization of the spiritual fact, in which the only true solution is to be found.

Independence means, of course, freedom from external control. Man has this freedom because, as the Scriptures tell us, he was given dominion, or, as Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 227), "God made man free." This true man, made in God's image and reflecting the independence of Principle, is dependent alone on his creator, Mind. Such dependence on God is logically essential, for to be independent of God, Life, would mean the oblivion of death; to be independent of Mind, the vacuity of unintelligence. Man thinks independently because he is the individual idea of Mind, and because he thus expresses individual intelligence. He cannot therefore be controlled by any influence external to Mind and idea. This does not mean that one's thoughts will be antagonistic to those of his fellow men. On the contrary, the spiritual fact that the true man expresses one Mind insures harmonious cooperation among right thinkers.

Applying this understanding to our human problems, we find that the independence of any nation, community, or class, depends fundamentally on the free exercise of the right of every individual to think for himself, and not on the thinking of a few, although they may profess themselves champions of independence; that the development of this right is a gradual process, a leavening of the mass, which, owing to the lethargy of mortal mind, has the greatest aversion to being stirred to individual thinking, but prefers rather to depend on others; that a system must be evolved by which those individual opinions may find free and full expression in forming for the whole a collectively individual policy. It is at once obvious that in order to obtain harmonious results the thinking of the individual must be educated along right lines, and this can only be attained by acknowledging one Mind, one guiding Principle.

The present longing for independence, awakened by the stir of more active thinking, is intrinsically right and is answered in the message of Christian Science to this age. As Mrs. Eddy writes on page 106 of Science and Health: "Christian Science has its Declaration of Independence. God has endowed man with inalienable rights, among which are self-government, reason, and conscience. Man is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love." While the problem of working out true independence in human affairs may appear formidable, we should remember with encouragement the truth of Paul's words to the Corinthians, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." Each student of Christian Science has thus a wonderful opportunity for helping his fellow man to realize true independence in place of the counterfeit, by proving himself independent of human opinions and material ambitions and by demonstrating as a bright and shining light his sole dependence on the one God, good. Such help will indeed be a genuine service to mankind in its present need, lifting thought from the material to the spiritual, in which alone is found true independence.

Expression Equals Demonstration

CORA ARMSTRONG KELLAM

ON page 336 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, writes: "Immortal man was and is God's image or idea, even the infinite expression of infinite Mind, and immortal man is coexistent and coeternal with that Mind." Thus she has clearly shown the way for every sincere seeker for Truth, and thus she has taught in terms for human comprehension the law of expression and demonstration. From early childhood she listened to ever present divine Love, until finally she expressed her unfolding vision of Life in that great statement of spiritual premises and conclusions, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." When this step was taken, the revelation of divine Science continued to be unfolded to her and to be developed, substantiated, and verified by healing all manner of diseases. She thus saw more of the meaning of the church triumphant as typified in all the varied activities of the Christian Science movement.

In following the trail that Mary Baker Eddy so courageously blazed for us out of the wilderness of superstition into the city that "lieth foursquare," we must read aright the signs she hewed in the tall oak and cut in the rough granite to keep us in the straight line from premise to conclusion. Because of the all-inclusiveness of God, evil with its consequences is unreal and nonexistent. This we must understand on the path which leads from right motive, the starting point of expression, into demonstration, its full realization. It is interesting to note in this connection that the list of marginal headings which Mrs. Eddy used to emphasize the important points in Science and Health, begins with "Right motives" and ends with the apocalyptic vision, "The city of our God."

Christ Jesus implied that man must obey and express Principle when he commanded, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." In the same chapter of Mark he promises, "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." This obligation to express Principle in the gospel of word and deed, confirms our scientific apprehension of the fact that the constant expression of good in thought and action is a present possibility for every logical Christian. This command and promise are fulfilled in every Wednesday evening meeting of the Christian Science churches and societies. At such a meeting, where less than a dozen students were gathered to express their gratitude, the writer saw a man healed instantaneously of a malady diagnosed as of long standing, painful, and hopelessly incurable. This is an example of the pentecostal power expressed in healing.

Since God is omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, He must be omniexpressive. Acknowledging that omniexpression must fulfill its infinite nature, the practitioner destroys wrong conditions ranging from the most trivial to the most malignant types of sin and disease. Relying upon the infallible rule of divine metaphysics that consequent follows its antecedent, the practitioner persists in serene confidence in knowing that wholeness must ever continue to be manifest because its source, the eternal Mind, is inexhaustible.

As students of Christian Science, we can render no greater service to humanity than to give to all with whom we come in contact such appreciation of the good already apparent as will lead them into absolute reliance on Principle and its expression. When this is done, every student will be a successful practitioner, and the lovely prophecy of these lines from the Christian Science Hymnal will be fulfilled:—

Celestial streams shall gently flow;
The wilderness shall joyful be;
Lilies on parched ground shall grow;
And gladness spring on ev'ry tree;

The weak be strong, the fearful bold,
The deaf shall hear, the dumb shall sing,
The lame shall walk, the blind behold,
And joy through all the earth shall ring.

Led by right desire, let us go on by expressing Principle in health, happiness, and true supply, even to the house of fulfillment, to the city of our God. The true expression of Principle is demonstration.

Nearer to Thee

FRANCES BROWN SKINNER

I KNOW there is no dimming of the light
Toward which I turn.
I know there is no varying of the right.
This I discern.
And every day I know I closer walk,
Grateful, my Lord, to Thee.
In purer moments, undefiled, I talk
Alone with Thee,
And angels of Thy presence come to me.

And as I walk I find the closing day
But just begun.
And as I talk gleams forth the radiant ray
From its dear sun.
In this clear light I see revealèd here
God's love for me.
In revelation true I yield all fear
To harmony.
And nearer draw, I pray, worthier to Thee.

Selected Articles

["The Father of the Lie"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., March 11, 1920]

Before the clarifying rays of Christian Science were observed amid the chaos of human thinking, it was a traditional saying that Jesus' use of parables and figurative language made his teaching transcendental and obscure. But as the actual meanings of his words have become better understood through the light shed upon them by a study of Christian Science, it is discovered that his statements are anything but obscure.

Of all his sayings, however, there is one that is not even framed in metaphorical language, but is wholly without embellishment or symbolism, and which is yet one of the most significant utterances of the Master's anywhere recorded. It is the statement in the eighth chapter of the book of John, where, addressing the carnal mind, he says: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." Any one who will look squarely at this statement and take it at its face value, without attempting to read anything into it, will get a complete statement of fundamental Christianity, which is fundamental Christian Science. The word devil, of course, is but the personification of the word evil, which latter word may be substituted for it. Thus evil is declared to be a murderer from the beginning; that is to say, self-destroyed at its very inception, therefore without existence, as is inevitable with anything that abides not in the truth and has no truth in it. When evil speaketh a lie it speaketh of itself, for it is both a liar and its own origin. Could human language frame a more sweeping denunciation of evil as nonexistent?

Now, of course a lie is always a perversion of a truth. There could not be a lie about a lie, for a lie lied about, that is denied, is manifestly a restatement of the original truth. Two negatives make an affirmative in metaphysics as well as in grammar. Of course, lies can be added to lies, which is a totally different thing, but it is obvious that a lie is merely an attempted reversal of truth, and a reversal of the lie restores the truth. On page 442 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Neither animal magnetism nor hypnotism enters into the practice of Christian Science, in which truth cannot be reversed, but the reverse of error is true." And on page 218 of "Miscellaneous Writings" she says, "The visible universe declares the invisible only by reversion, as error declares Truth." The word reversion, of course, means that which reverts or returns to the original.

In the English language there is a certain group of prefixes which express the concept of elimination of the word to which they are affixed. Some of these are dis, non, un, etc. These prefixes, joined to words, purport to declare the destruction of the idea involved. Thus dis added to ease alleges the destruction of ease. Non applied to intelligence declares that there is none. Un proclaims reasonableness to be absent, and so on. But are facts destructible? Only upon the hypothesis of a rival power to the All-mighty, a competitor to God, could such a claim be valid. But such a claim is made; and what makes it? Only nonintelligence. So nonintelligence, or ignorance, may be called the father of the lie which says that affixing a negating syllable to an idea destroys the idea. As well say that the mathematical fact, three, can be wiped out as a fact by placing a minus sign before the figure. Three, as a fact sustained by mathematical rule, remains a forever fact, and the minus sign merely denotes recognition of it by dealing with it in a specific way. And just as the minus, or non, placed before intelligence can no more destroy or eliminate intelligence than a concept of a minus can destroy a mathematical integer, so, of course, there is no actual nonintelligence or ignorance, and if the plea for such a state is not made, there will be no temptation to believe in ignorant concepts in any respect. In short, it is the non prefixed to intelligence which may be said to be the father of the non or dis or un, wherever found. Stating it directly, only ignorance proclaims disease, unrighteousness, nonexistence. On page 293 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy makes this very clear: "Truth perverted, in belief, becomes the creator of the claim of error." Of course Truth cannot be perverted. It is only "in belief" that it is done, for an actual perversion would require a superior force to do it, a power transcending omnipotence. This is precisely what nonintelligence, the father of the lie, declares has happened; but this father of lies speaketh of his own, and his own are nothing but lies and more lies.

Now, to get rid of a lie is very simple indeed. One has merely to recognize that the thing lied about is the truth. Take away the negating prefix and behold the fact. This is what it means to be a Christian and have "no other gods before me"—no acceptance of a claim to a power opposed to God; and wherever such a claim is encountered—and all materiality is this claim, the tissue of lies—it is only necessary to reverse the lie in order to see Truth.

The comforting fact about it all is that Truth, Life, Love, Principle, is unchanged in either case, whether it is proclaimed positively or negatively, whether reversed or unreversed, so to speak, for even the lie acknowledges the truth by lying about it. It is only the belief in the reality of a liar that gives the lie a claim to independent existence. There can be no liar in a universe created by omnipresent good. Knowledge of this brings everything instantly into view in its true light and there follows at once that peace that passeth all understanding.

[V. M. B. Stievenard in The Citizen, Letchworth, England]

In a recent issue of The Citizen you published a short report of a lecture on hypnotism, in which the lecturer alludes to Christian Science, saying that "it advocates the power of suggestion and the strengthening of the will." This shows a misapprehension of the subject.

In the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, there is a chapter entitled "Animal Magnetism Unmasked," which shows how diametrically opposed are mesmerism, hypnotism, or suggestion of any kind to the teachings of Christian Science. Again, on page 484 of the same book, is the question, "Does Christian Science, or metaphysical healing, include medication, material hygiene, mesmerism, hypnotism, theosophy, or spiritualism?" And the answer is clearly given: "Not one of them is included in it. In divine Science, the supposed laws of matter yield to the law of Mind." The truth is that hypnotism or mesmerism working by suggestion are based entirely on the supposed laws, often proved erroneous, of what is called the human mind; whereas Christian Science has for the basis of its activity the understanding of the law of the divine Mind,—the law of God, which includes right reasoning and reveals the facts of being.

The student of a demonstrable science, for example, mathematics, does not need mesmerism or suggestion to work out his problem, but he does need to reason correctly on a given right basis; neither does his work strengthen his will, but it does add strength to his mind and character. And so, the student of Christian Science, working on the right basis of the allness of God, and reasoning correctly, fulfills the beneficial purpose of Truth, and his mind grows strong, not because of suggestion, but because he knows the truth and is understanding the eternal law of God. He thus proves the allness of good and the nothingness of evil.

[Marie Hartmann in De Middaghoogte, The Hague, Holland]

When to a Christian Scientist the question is submitted as to the relation of religion and Science, he experiences with joy that through Christian Science he has found an answer which not only satisfies his intellect but also quickens and enriches his spiritual self, inspires him with unlimited and efficacious love for his fellow men and for all creation, and makes him conscious of the Father's allness, of His kingdom, which is come on earth as well as in heaven. Does not God's ever present love enfold all creation with the blessing of His presence?

Science is knowledge, knowledge not only of the phenomena but, in the first place, of the cause basing and determining them. What is commonly called "science" is not the highest, not absolute, Science. Much of what some centuries ago was considered to be science, is now unscientific, and it is probable that sooner or later the same will be thought of much that to-day is esteemed as science. Far above this changing and mutable conception of science stands the absolute Science, the knowledge of Truth. The highest and most exact science, or, as a wise man said ages ago, The only absolute Science is therefore that which reveals the basic cause of all things. And this great First Cause, this Principle of being, is the fundamental Truth, the divine Mind, which many call God. Science in the absolute sense of the word is therefore knowledge of God's laws, of His manifestation in and through the universe, including man.

Striving for that knowledge is studying divine Science; it is searching to know what is the seeming and what the truth about things; it is an approximation or prescience of God's qualities, which even as Himself are spiritual. The more such science approaches the spiritual background of things, the more it learns to reckon with supersensible causes and activities, the more it leads to the perception of the idea, to the real nature of things, and the more it unfolds the oneness, which is the basis of all that exists. Although darkened by material hypotheses, we trace in what the world calls science, more or less, and in purer or impurer form, something of the law and order existing in God's creation. All science finally goes out to the immaterial truth, to that which cannot be fettered or forced by human opinions, but which, on the contrary, by its very nature is destined to be all-in-all.

Truth, the creative, governing, and controlling Principle, Life itself, Christian Science unfolds as God. It hereby reveals that Science and religion are not opposites, but on the contrary closely touch each other; yea, more still, that they are identical in being. All power is comprised in the divine Principle, for, to be real, power or strength must necessarily derive its existence from Truth, from God. What does not proceed from God, and therefore is not destined for eternity, is not true in the highest sense. Not what the senses observe is the standard of truth or seeming of things; that standard is exclusively determined by the question whether and how God, Truth, has created them and knows them. For as God knows the things, such is their being. . . .

Thus Truth interprets the universe,—reveals it, as it really is. Its light dispels all darkness, and replaces sense testimony with the understanding born of divine Science, of the knowledge of God. . . . Such knowing becomes the Science of Life. It separates seeming from being, error from Truth, unreality from reality. Truth, the divine reality, becomes in such a measure a lamp unto one's feet and a light unto one's path, that one more and more learns to live according to it, and ceases to obey the so-called laws which do not proceed from God, and to honor and support the seeming. This understanding is actual religion; it is the fulfillment of the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" it teaches to worship God "in spirit and in truth." So living becomes a joyful bearing witness unto the truth, unto the perfection and harmony of God's creation, in which man is continuously found ready to take possession of all that God gives and of nothing else. . . .

Based on the Biblical teaching concerning God, and especially on what Jesus the Christ in his works and words revealed about the creator and Father, Christian Science convincingly unfolds the truth about God and man. It teaches that all that is found to be scientifically true is demonstrable, now as well as centuries ago, and shows how humanity, by letting the Christ, Truth, dwell in it, awakens from the Adam dream of materiality,—from the belief in a creation and a life which cannot be the entire expression of God, Spirit, supreme good. Such communing with God, divine Principle—such true prayer—delivers man from evil, from ignorance about God, from the "liar" in whom "there is no truth," namely, from wrong thinking with its fruits of sin, sickness, and death, and makes mankind more and more conscious of the reign of Truth, which is here and now and ever will be.

It is not expected of a science that it shall account for the mistakes which may be made in its application, but that it shall make the fundamentals on which it is based so clear that the chance of making mistakes is reduced to a minimum, and these mistakes are seen for what they are—lies without ground or cause, unreality, nothingness, which can never in the least alter reality. Christian Science, the knowledge of the Life which is God, does not follow another way. This teaching reveals the Principle of being, unfolds the omnipresence and all-power of God, and emphasizes the impossibility of the existence of a power besides or opposed to the omnipotent, and teaches that, as Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 295), "The universe is filled with spiritual ideas, which He evolves, and they are obedient to the Mind that makes them."

[Peter B. Biggins in Red Deer (Alberta) Advocate]

The gentleman, "J. B.," who criticizes Christian Science, makes a correct statement—amid his many incorrect—when he writes, "Nowhere in Christian Science teaching can I find a full, uncompromising acknowledgment that Christ is God." There are, on the contrary, both in Jesus' teachings and in Christian Science, quite a few uncompromising acknowledgments of the fact that Christ is not God, but that he is the on of God.

One instance may be given. The disciples had spoken Christ Jesus about the many different opinions held as to o he was, and the Master, in order to test his disciples' 'erstanding, asked: "But whom say ye that I am? And on Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

From the beginning of Jesus' public ministry until its close, one of the chief points on which he was attacked was his teaching that Christ is the Son of God. In the temptation at the beginning of his public career, this was the first point that the tempter assailed, "If thou be the Son of God . . ." Throughout his entire healing ministry, and at his trial, we find the same assault in various guises. Finally, when he was on the cross, we hear the same old taunt, "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross."

The reason that this point was so fiercely assailed by his opponents is not far to seek, nor difficult to understand. It was his conscious sonship with God, his unity with God, that enabled him to utilize the divine power to heal the sick and cast out evil. It is this same understanding that confers the healing power in Christian Science. The lack of this understanding and of its practical application has for centuries deprived the churches of Christian healing. Christian Science has restored this understanding and the healing power that goes with it. Thus we are learning what the apostle John meant when he wrote, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God."

Christian Scientists do not defy sanitary laws, as the gentleman intimates. Christian Scientists have, it is true, been freed from some of the fears that beset many who do not understand Christian Science. But, so far as sanitation is concerned, Christian Scientists would like to see a far higher standard than is now observed. Christian Scientists are conscientious in obeying the laws relating to contagious cases. Medical health officers quite frequently testify to this fact. Throughout her writings, Mrs. Eddy enjoins obedience to the laws of the land. This is in accordance with the spirit and the letter of Christ Jesus' teaching, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's."

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Paignton (England) Observer]

A correspondent, who writes in a recent issue, is not a Christian Scientist, and evidently does not know the difference between Christian Science and all methods in which the human or carnal mind is the only factor at work.

The carnal mind, Paul tells us, is enmity against God. That is, the thoughts of the carnal mind are contrary to the thoughts of the divine Mind, that Mind which was also in Christ Jesus. This is clearly stated by Isaiah as follows, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." Christian Science teaches one how to give up the carnal mind and its material methods, and gain the divine Mind and its spiritual means of healing and reforming. The transformation from sickness to health, sorrow to joy, sin to purity, through Christian Science, is certainly not brought about by any suggestions of the carnal mind, but through the renewing of the human mind by the divine Mind.

Christian Science cannot be used for evil in any way, and it cannot get into unscrupulous hands, for God, divine Mind, cannot be understood except by those who are born again, and are bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit. Hypnotic suggestion, on the other hand, can be used for evil just as well as for attempting to produce a beneficial effect. The mental method of Jesus in healing the sick, reforming the sinner, comforting the sorrowful, and raising the dead is the only safe method, and this is Christian Science.

"A murderer from the beginning"

ANY cause which is buttressed with lies is like a house built in the sands. In the summer of the senses such a house may seem as strong as one built on the rocks. But the moment the winds of Truth begin to blow, the walls of the house begin to rock, and in a little while nothing is left but the wind swept sands. The metaphysical reason for this is extremely simple. A lie—no matter how much the statement may stagger the human mind, which is the father of the whole family—simply does not exist. There is no halfway about it: a lie is what the King James translators termed a vanity, meaning thereby an empty falsehood. But the King James translator, with all his appreciation of the Bible, was not a true metaphysician. In spite of his study of the gospels, the father of lies remained to him a person; matter, the creation of Spirit; and the image and likeness of Principle, "that unfeather'd two-legged thing," a man. Clearly between the metaphysics of Galilee, in the first century, and those of England, in the seventeenth, there was a great gulf fixed.

A great satirist of the latter century wrote of the world as he saw it, and as the metaphysicians of the day taught that it was:—

> "The world is naturally averse
> To all the truth it sees or hears,
> But swallows nonsense and a lie
> With greediness and gluttony."

The moralist has not appreciably altered his estimate today, but where the moralist, misled by the metaphysician, has gone wrong has been in taking this world for the creation of the divine Mind, instead of the counterfeit of that creation, and so substituting a lie for the truth. Here is the profound, the vital mistake of all metaphysics which are not founded on the teaching and demonstrations of Jesus of Nazareth: they mistake the lie for the truth. "The Principle of divine metaphysics," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 111 of Science and Health, "is God; the practice of divine metaphysics is the utilization of the power of Truth over error; its rules demonstrate its Science. Divine metaphysics reverses perverted and physical hypotheses as to Deity, even as the explanation of optics rejects the incidental or inverted image and shows what this inverted image is meant to represent."

The man, then, who imagines that there is anything to be gained by a direct lie, or that advantage can be taken indirectly of one, is either completely ignorant of divine metaphysics, or else is playing with hell fire; for because hell is not a place, but a condition of the human mind, and because its fires are not in the nature of sulphuric flames, but of mental ones, the suffering to any one accepting the lie for the truth will seem, while the illusion lasts, to be as real as the truth. That surely is why Christ Jesus personified evil, after the manner of the time, as the devil, and explained that this devil was the father of the evildoer and of all lies; and then, being the Master-metaphysician and not a philosopher from Mars Hill or the Jerusalem Chamber, proceeded to sweep the whole bundle of lies into its native nothingness, in the words, he "abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him." Now if evil abides not in the truth it is obviously a lie, and a lie is an unreality. The man, therefore, who relies upon a lie to help him, relies upon a broken reed, which, for a very manifest metaphysical reason, must eventually pierce his own hand.

The reason of this is as simple as everything in Christian Science always is. In a supposititious realm of mental effects, the only effect of a lie is that which it creates in the human consciousness. A man, consequently, who lies, or takes advantage of a lie, buttresses the belief of evil and of materiality in his own consciousness. He sets out to fight, that is to say, against his own opportunity for realizing the truth, which is to make him free from the beliefs of evil and matter. In other words, while he should be fighting against the lusts of the flesh, he is encouraging them, and while he should be putting off the carnal mind, he is declaring it to be the reality. Now this can only end in an acceptance of all the lies generated by a belief in evil, an acceptance of sin, disease, and death, of evil and its accompanying inharmony in its myriad manifestations. The acceptance of these constitutes, however, all there is of hell, a purely mental condition symbolized, in Revelation, as "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." What, therefore, has the man who tells or takes advantage of a lie accomplished? He has entered hell, he has waded into the lake in which, the book of Revelation declares, are congregated all liars, and he will not escape until he has paid the uttermost farthing.

That is the teaching of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. The serpent of Genesis is the great red dragon of Revelation, and is Beelzebub and Satan, Behemoth and Leviathan, and plain devil in between. It is exactly the same in Science and Health. It is only necessary to read the definitions of devil, dragon, or serpent, in the Glossary, to discover how closely Mrs. Eddy follows the Bible. Of devil she writes, on page 584, as follows: "Evil; a lie; error; neither corporeality nor mind; the opposite of Truth; a belief in sin, sickness, and death; animal magnetism or hypnotism; the lust of the flesh, which saith: 'I am life and intelligence in matter.'" The human mind, with much greater truth than it knows, has pictured the dragon, in its literature, whether sacred or profane, even in its fairy tales, as lying in wait to destroy the good. What are the thoughts of evil, the cataract of lies, folly, and sensuality—all lies if it comes to that—plunging through the human mind, but the dragon of Wantley, the dragon which St. George slew, the dragon which Perseus vanquished, and an incalculable family of dragons, all owing their descent from the dragon Tiamat who fell before Merodach, the god of light, in the dim legendary mythology of the eastern world?

Into the New Jerusalem nothing was to be allowed to enter which "maketh a lie." The deduction is perfectly plain. Every lie accepted or taken advantage of by the individual strengthens instead of undermining the carnal mind. It will avail no more for the individual to plead that he poisoned his mind without knowing it than that he poisoned his body without knowing it. The remedy in each case is the same, to know the truth so clearly that the poison, even if given to him secretly, cannot work in the blood or in the mind. That is the salvation of the honest man, and without this protection there cannot be honesty.

Protected Health

WHAT is known as "public health work" has, so far, by no means satisfied even the doctors themselves. Though many have been more or less eager to extend this work, the task has seemed, from their standpoint, enormous and the means available merely a constantly varying mass of theories and practices. County health officers, state health officers, and local health officers find their methods oftentimes in sharp conflict. The serum depended on yesterday is discarded to-day. The effectiveness of fumigation and even of quarantine is seriously questioned. Advice given to parents in one locality is the exact opposite of that in another community. In fact, the whole question of how to combat disease from a physical point of view seems an endless flux of sheer experiment. To say this is in no way to disparage the efforts of the medical men and women who are honestly seeking to do their best. Instead, it is simply to state a fact recorded in the innumerable medical journals and in the books on the subject.

To the student of Christian Science, all this difference of opinion is not surprising. The whole campaign for "public health" that is being pushed throughout the world by every sort of suggestion is based on the untenable supposition that health is a condition of a material body. It is usually an attempt to combat disease by explaining disease. Thus it is mainly an analysis of what is supposed to be diseased matter, with some speculations as to what might be improvements. Now any sincere investigation of Christian Science shows plainly that true health is the orderly activity of Mind, quite apart from belief in matter. This fact the average worker on a medical basis has ignored. Sooner or later, however, every earnest seeker is bound to discern the truth. Then zealous effort will no longer be futile, for it will be really turned in the right direction and will find its fulfillment in Principle expressed without limit.

Only as health is understood to be idea manifesting divine intelligence, is it truly conserved. Conscious reasoning in accord with intelligence is conscious spiritual vigor. It perfectly resists any suggestion of disease. The essence of Life, or Spirit itself, could never be touched by any suppositions of matter. Because Life cannot be comprehended through the physical senses, no doctor has ever determined by material analysis what constitutes resistance. With its whole activity, the one divine consciousness is indestructible. In other words, to any suggestion of destruction it presents complete resistance. Thus each one must learn for himself what the consciousness of right activity is and must prove in his own experience that this consciousness is his all-sufficient defense. Really this consciousness is not something to be gained, since it actually is right now the cause for all the true living there is. Each one, then, needs calmly to consider what his entire being consists in even now. As he does so, he goes forward with quiet assurance forever. Health, rightly understood, is purely spiritual, and cannot be assailed by any illusion of danger.

The only reason why this truth has not been universally ıccepted is that some people have been frightened at the ıorough practice which it requires. Certainly no one, how-er, should be afraid to be alert. The real knowing that ılth must be continuous is, after all, simple and joyous. ere is nothing actually difficult about it. Before it, any se of human intensity disappears. To be spiritually sure ısy for the one who calmly knows what his Life is. As Eddy says, on page 160 of "The First Church of Christ, tist, and Miscellany": "Most of us willingly accept dead truisms which can be buried at will; but a live truth, even though it be a sapling within rich soil and with blossoms on its branches, frightens people. The trenchant truth that cuts its way through iron and sod, most men avoid until compelled to glance at it. Then they open their hearts to it for actual being, health, holiness, and immortality." For each one, the first requisite is to know that divine intelligence governs the action of the true man in the divine likeness. With this veritable knowing, fear vanishes and health is demonstrably protected.

One curious belief is that disease is in some way right and unavoidable. Christian Science shows clearly, however, that no matter what may have seemed to be, the reliance on Principle in the now means health and happiness in the now. Of course, one cannot try to depend on Principle for healing in one chosen instance and deliberately reject Principle in another. If one wants Christian Science at all, one really wants the whole of it, and must get to work to prove its effectiveness in every connection. Still, the least desire to live in accord with divine intelligence is blessed and broadened through persistence. In the article already quoted, Mrs. Eddy continues: "Lest human reason becloud spiritual understanding, say not in thy heart: Sickness is possible because one's thought and conduct do not afford a sufficient defence against it. Trust in God, and 'He shall direct thy paths.' When evil was avenging itself on its destroyer, his preeminent goodness, the Godlike man said, 'My burden is light.'"

By trusting God, divine Principle, each one can prove that health is ever preserved by right action in the present. Even mistakes or shortcomings of the past are rectified by the understanding of good now. Understanding takes the place of all previous ignorance. Understanding is undeniable right practice. The simple knowing that man lives as the effect of the infinite divine Life or Mind is in itself the consciousness of right practice. It endures and succeeds through any seeming whatever. Only this intelligent realization of what true health is and of how it is preserved can permanently satisfy the general public, including the physicians themselves. So, wherever any people desire to aid in the conservation of public health, each one must first set to work to understand and prove spiritual health for himself. This righteous effort accomplishes more than all manner of autocratically organized campaigns for the use of material means.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—To form a Second Church of Christ, Scientist, members of First Church made known their willingness to resign, and have leased the second and third stories of the A. Friederich & Sons Company Building at Lake and Glenwood Avenues. The plans for remodeling the interior called for an auditorium on the second floor to seat three hundred persons, and for a reading room on the same floor that would make it possible to accommodate three hundred and fifty people by opening doors into the main room. The third story makes a good sized Sunday school room.

Although it is less than three years since the Christian Scientists opened their house of worship at East Avenue and Prince Street, the attendance increased so rapidly that several months ago the auditorium, with a seating capacity of about twelve hundred, became inadequate. Part of the congregation was required to attend only one service on Sunday, to make room for the remainder, and it was necessary to hold two Sunday school sessions.

For a long time the committee of Second Church searched to find a convenient meeting place in a residential section, as they wanted to establish the new church at a considerable distance from East Avenue in order to accommodate persons living a long way from First Church. These and others who have not attended regularly will attend the church on Lake Avenue, it is expected.

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Carbondale, Ill.—The members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, have purchased the Lauder-Nichols brick building on West Main Street and North Normal Avenue. This is conceded to be one of the best located and most valuable pieces of real estate in Carbondale. The property of the church on South Normal Avenue and West Elm Street will be occupied as formerly until sold, when remodeling of the new property will be undertaken.—The Free Press.

Huntington Beach, Calif.—The mortgage that was placed upon the church edifice of the Christian Science Society, at Eighth Street and Olive Avenue, when the building was remodeled about three years ago, has been paid, and the society is now entirely free from debt.

The Lectures

Norfolk, Neb. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Miss Annie Bowers, who said in part:—

Christian Science was given to the world to bring freedom to mankind. Paul said; "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty;" and on page 227 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Love and Truth make free, but evil and error lead into captivity." Christian Science brings to the consciousness the illuminating revelation of the allness of God, which heals the sick and sinning in both mind and body, and brings joy, peace, and happiness.

Parkersburg, W. Va. (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Miss Mary L. Bruce, who said in part:—

The message which comes to us this evening is one which introduces us to the kingdom of heaven. Christian Science is not rhetoric but realization, and thousands of men and women all over the world to-day are proving beyond a shadow of doubt that when the truth which Christian Science teaches about God and man's relationship to God, is realized in individual consciousness, the kingdom of heaven is attained.

Chester, Pa. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by George O. Melick, who said in part:—

Christian Scientists have no wish to thrust their religion upon any one, but have only the desire to bring within reach of every sufferer, whatever the malady may be,—moral, physical, financial,—a remedy that has been put to the test and has not been found wanting.

Many thousands have proved the efficacy of this remedy and it is with overflowing hearts that they testify to Christian Science. Most of them have turned to Christian Science because every other means of satisfying their dire need had been exhausted. They have become regenerated, filled with a new hope. They have found rules of life and living that they carry with them and put to use in their business, social, and home affairs. "They have found the Great Companion back of the universe working with them, loving them, and aiding every righteous effort." So the great desire of Christian Scientists is to give to a world buffeted on all sides by specters of misfortune, a cup of cold water in the name of Christ Jesus, who said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Weston-super-Mare, England (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by F. J. Woods, who said in part:—

Christian Science has come to elucidate the deep spiritual truths of the Bible. We know how necessary this is; for Paul warns us that the spiritual truths of God are foolishness to the natural man so that he cannot receive them. Then he explains the reason, and it is because they must be "spiritually discerned." Now Christian Science is supplying this spiritual discernment, which results in the destruction of sin and disease in hundreds of thousands of cases.

Sydney, New South Wales, Australia (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Warwick Lloyd, who said in part:—

Most of us can testify to the healing power of the truth, as gained by the study of Christian Science, not only for physical or bodily troubles but also for mental distress and business problems. The business man of to-day is faced with many difficulties, but with a careful and earnest study of the Principle that governs the universe and mankind, as understood in Christian Science, those difficulties will disappear.

Newton, Mass. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Harry I. Hunt, who said in part:—

It is inconceivable that a law of God should be operative at one time and not at another if God is omnipotent as the Scriptures declare Him to be; or that the creator cannot maintain His creation in perfect harmony. Yet if we were to accept as true all that we see in the material world to-day, we should be obliged to admit that God must have relinquished His omnipotence, and that His law had been superseded by the law of evil.

Happily for us and for the world, a spiritually minded New England woman, Mary Baker Eddy, has discovered the Principle of God's universe and has formulated rules for its demonstration in overcoming all evil. Mrs. Eddy named her discovery Christian Science, and gave it to the world in her book, Science and Health, first published in 1875. Students of this Science all down the intervening years and up to this present moment, have been demonstrating this Principle in healing mankind of sickness and woe, sorrow and sin, poverty and pain, thus proving that the divine law governing the healing ministry of Jesus, and the so-called miracles of prophets and apostles, is operative to-day, and that the creation which God saw and pronounced "very good," in the first chapter of Genesis, is still very good.

BURLINGTON, KAN. (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. O. G. Mechem, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a religion of right thinking. If, at this moment, every individual in the world were thinking rightly, there would be no more sin, nor sickness, nor sorrow; all would be happiness and joy; in other words, all would be dwelling in the kingdom of heaven.

Christian Science is a practical and demonstrable religion that is fast meeting the demands of an unsettled world; and Christian Scientists everywhere, in this and foreign lands, are proving that God rightly understood is a "very present help in trouble."—The Burlington Republican.

WATERTOWN, MASS. (auspices The Mother Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Miss Julia A. Dyer, who said in part:—

Christian Science teaches that salvation is to be attained individually, not vicariously. Therefore an understanding of that which constitutes salvation is necessary to its attainment. And this is just what Christian Science is giving to the world to-day,—a demonstrable knowledge of God and His Christ which results in salvation. Students of Christian Science can truly say with the psalmist, "He that is our God is the God of salvation."

REDONDO BEACH, CALIF. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Zella A. Thomas, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new religion. It is the same truth Jesus taught and demonstrated on the shores of Galilee. The world is still asking, "What is truth?" and the answer is found in Christian Science.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Attorney Lee Guest, who said in part:—

Christian Science as taught by its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, is assisting its hundreds of thousands of students now in practically every town and hamlet in the world to know God aright, to know that the God who created all and saw that all He created was good, as recorded in the Bible in the first chapter of Genesis, also provided a law by which His creation is sustained and not forsaken.

The Sunday Times-Union.

PORTLAND, ORE. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Miss Blanche Luckey, who said in part:—

Through the coming of Jesus the Christ, the world was given a deeper look into the truth that God is Love. For about three hundred years this higher conception flourished, but was finally engulfed in materialism and superstition, even as a cloud temporarily hides the sun. In the ensuing centuries, like rifts of light through the dark clouds, there appeared here and there brave men who glimpsed the truth; but they could not give the reason for the hope that stirred within them, and thus the light of Truth remained dim. As human life became more complex, a deeper yearning went out from the heart of mankind for a God who could be understood and to whom they could turn not only in their sins but in sickness, sorrow, and business problems, and find comfort and help. This prayer was answered by the discovery of Christian Science by Mary Baker Eddy, a woman of rare purity of thought and consecration of life. Mrs. Eddy experienced a healing through divine Love, and clung to the vision thus attained until she discovered the rule of Principle back of it. Because of her deep love for mankind, she labored for several years to put her discovery in such form that the world would be benefited by it, and finally her book entitled "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was published.

Testimonies of Healing

In gratitude to God for His goodness and mercy, to our revered Leader for her untiring efforts for the uplift of humanity, and to those loving friends who guided my footsteps to the portals of the truth that makes man free, I send this testimony, with the hope that it may help some weary pilgrim in his struggle, as I have been helped. When Christian Science first came to me I was in darkest despair, facing a possible operation for a so-called incurable disease. It was at this time that "man's extremity" proved to be "God's opportunity," for having seen the inefficacy of four previous operations, I realized the futility of further aid from a material basis. Hearkening to the still, small voice of Truth, just the thought of giving Christian Science a trial and thereby placing myself in God's care, brought a sweet assurance of peace and lifted a heavy burden from my heart. With the loving help of a practitioner, an instantaneous healing followed, and I awakened from the dream of mortality, with its many attendant woes, to the realization that man is immortal, since he is God's reflection, and only that which is harmonious and good can be a part of his life.

Since that time, a little over a year ago, I have enjoyed almost perfect health, and sunshine and happiness abide where suffering and despair formerly reigned. Among the many fetters of bondage from which I have been freed are extreme nervousness, severe headaches, indigestion, intense abdominal pains, and an unconquerable fear of storms. Glasses, which were worn for many years, were discarded when I came to the realization that sight is not produced by the retina of the eye, but is "spiritual discernment," as Mrs. Eddy shows in the Glossary of Science and Health (p. 586), where she defines eyes as "Spiritual discernment,—not material but mental." To prove the efficacy of Christian Science and the absolute power of God, I wish to state that recently I was examined for life insurance, by the physician who was in attendance prior to my coming into Science, with the result that I was pronounced absolutely free from any organic or other trouble, and was therefore accepted by the insurance company.

For the many physical benefits I have received I am grateful beyond words of expression, but these fade into insignificance when compared to the spiritual understanding which has come to me through the word of Truth. I am deeply grateful for the privilege of membership in The Mother Church, as well as of that in our branch church. And so I say in the words of Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 45), "Glory be to God, and peace to the struggling hearts! Christ hath rolled away the stone from the door of human hope and faith, and through the revelation and demonstration of life in God, hath elevated them to possible at-one-ment with the spiritual idea of man and his divine Principle, Love."

(Mrs.) Alice M. Baum, Gainesville, Texas.

In looking over the testimonies in one of my Sentinels I found where we are reminded, "Freely ye have received, freely give." As I have received so many blessings since taking up the study of Christian Science I feel that I must add my testimony to those already given.

Christian Science has helped me in a great many ways. It has helped me to overcome poor eyesight. Two specialists said I had compound astigmatism with complications, and that my sight would never be any better, but by wearing properly fitted glasses all of the time I might be able to keep it from becoming worse. I overcame this claim when first beginning to study Christian Science, without any work along this line at all. I simply read Science and Health and Christian Science literature eagerly and found that I would forget to put my glasses on, and then awoke to the fact that my eyes were healed. It has healed rupture for my little boy, also croup and all the ills which children are subject to when we are not alert enough to use Christian Science as a preventive.

I think so many people feel that it needs a great deal of understanding to be able to overcome discords and ills for ourselves, and feel that they should call a practitioner at once. I have always found if I search faithfully for an answer to my problem my help is ever present. One time, before I had begun really to study Christian Science I was having a very bad time with an ulcerated tooth. In fact for three days and nights I had suffered terribly. My jaw was so swollen it was impossible to move it and I was using every material remedy I had ever heard of, until finally I took up my copy of Science and Health, and as I opened it up I thought, "Oh! if there is one word of truth in this book, let me find it now." And I did so, for on the very page at which I opened the book I read something which I knew was the truth. I just read that one sentence over and over as it seemed to be printed twice as large as the rest of the page. I don't know how long I sat there, but finally my little boy spoke to me and I answered him and as I did so I found I could move my jaw perfectly and that all sense of pain was gone. I wish to say that I was subject to periodical spells of neuralgia, but I never had any symptoms of it from that day on, which is four years ago. I have had a great many healings in the same way. I only find it necessary to search faithfully and not give up, and the way is always opened up and I am shown the answer.

I am truly grateful for the literature and the help it is giving us all in this great struggle at present. I am more grateful than words can express to Mrs. Eddy for this wonderful truth and I am grateful to God that it was sent for our guidance at this time of great disturbance.

(Mrs.) Lillie B. Harding, Charlotte, Mich.

Christian Science has meant everything to me. It has given me life, not only in a spiritual sense, but in a literal sense as well. About ten years ago, while I was suffering great pain and taking doses of morphine at regular intervals, a dear neighbor of ours who had been healed in Christian Science, sent a practitioner over to our house to give me a treatment. As soon as she seated herself by the bed and started with the treatment, I felt a great sense of peace and fell into a natural sleep; but when I awoke I shut the door on Truth by demanding more morphine, in spite of the fact that I was then free from pain.

If I had heeded this proof, how much suffering I would have been spared! Instead, I went blindly on in the dream of material living, and for years dragged out a weary existence of continuous suffering. I again tried Christian Science treatment for the trouble and in a short time all the symptoms disappeared, so I stopped treatment; but two years later I again failed to do as Mrs. Eddy says on page 392 of Science and Health, "Stand porter at the door of thought." Resentment, grief, and fear entered my mental abode, with the result that the trouble returned in much worse form.

My mother, having been a practicing physician, decided that she would not trust such a serious (so named by medical law) disease to Christian Science treatment, so two competent physicians were called, who treated me for two days.

The doctors said I was dying and that the end was near. Then my family saw the powerlessness of material systems, and when to mortal sense it was almost too late, they decided to "trust in Truth, and have no other trusts" (Miscellany, p. 171). When we put our trust in God, I began to get well.

To faulty human sense the treatment given me years ago would have been called wasted, but in that one treatment the seed of Truth was sown, and years later in my great extremity I turned to Christian Science, which restored me to my family. This is very plain proof to me that no Christian Science treatment is ever wasted.

While my healing has seemed slow, it has made me study and think more. I am grateful for the physical healing, but this is the very least part of the great transformation. The pure light that has been revealed to me is the real blessing. We are grateful for the persistent courage of the faithful practitioner, and to God for revealing the truth to this age through the pure consciousness of Mary Baker Eddy. I shall never cease to be grateful to her for her wonderful work for mankind. I can only prove my deep gratitude by striving to walk in her footsteps. I greatly appreciate all of the authorized Christian Science literature, including The Christian Science Monitor. It brings the world to me.

(Miss) MARIE BUCHANAN, Sawtelle, Calif.

I wish to add a few words to my daughter's testimony. Being a graduate of a recognized medical college, I can verify all she says in regard to the verdict of the doctors. I am very grateful for her healing, also for instantaneous relief from lumbago. Help has been received in many ways, and we thank God for Christian Science.

(Mrs.) JENNIE N. BUCHANAN.

It is with gratitude to God, and to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, that I send this testimony, hoping it will lead some one to the light. About four years ago our youngest daughter had both feet severely burned by a bucket of scalding water. I called for Christian Science treatment and through the help given the burns were healed in a very short time. We have had many other healings in our family, from colds, boils, measles, and sprained ankles, and other troubles. Christian Science has not only healed me of diseases, it has helped to make me a better woman, and for all these blessings I am more than grateful.

(Mrs.) LEONIE ERNEST, Coffeyville, Kan.

It has been my desire for some time to send a testimony to the Sentinel as an expression of gratitude for the many blessings that I have received during a period of three years of the study of Christian Science. One of many, and also the first, blessings for which I am most grateful which brought me proof of the Science of being and the reality of Life, Truth, and Love, was the healing about three years ago of the disease known by the medical faculty as appendicitis. My condition reached such a stage that I was unable to attend to my daily work. A physician was called, and after examination he said that the only way to restore my health was through an operation. My financial circumstances did not agree with the physician's orders. A friend who worked with me advised me to take Christian Science treatment, which I did and received instant relief. Next day I returned to work; two hours later I began to feel the same pain coming back. I called on the practitioner over the telephone for help and received the answer, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." I believed those words and began to think: "What have I been believing? A lie. What is a lie? Nothing claiming to be something. What is truth? Health, Life, and Love in which you dwell," and instantly the pain disappeared, until one morning I awoke with the same pain. I reached after "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," finding the same words, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," and in a few moments I was free. For this beautiful healing I am indeed grateful. Christian Science has proved to be an ever present help. I can only exclaim with the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," and may God bless Mrs. Eddy. My daily prayer is that I may attest my sincerity in daily deeds.

I first heard of Christian Science in 1896, but as it seemed not to agree with the Bible as I understood it at that time I gave it little attention. Our baby boy had never been able to digest his food properly and had suffered greatly in consequence. The doctor assured me each month that the next he would be better, but the improvement never came. I wrote a specialist on children's diseases, who sent a prescription and said if that did not help the baby nothing would, as he was in the last stages of cholera infantum. I gave this remedy without results.

I again went to the friend who had told me of Christian Science, this time anxious to find help for my child. The words of love she spoke gave me courage, and I consulted the other members of the family about having this kind of help. No one would give me advice but said to do as I thought best, and after a few days of thought and prayer I decided to see a practitioner. I spent an hour or so with her very profitably. As I was leaving I asked what I was to do and she said, "Know for yourself and the child that you are the ideas of infinite Love." I have been trying ever since to realize this great fact.

The next morning the child seemed perfectly well. I could not believe the work was done, so continued the treatment for a week. This was the last of 1897 and from that time until the present the child and I have not taken any medicine. At two different times the doctor was called because there was at that time no practitioner in the city and the other members of the family insisted something must be done. One was a case of hemorrhage, the other convulsions; the doctor's verdict in each case was that the conditions were very serious. The child absolutely refused to take the remedies left for him. For hours I could only repeat the words of our Leader's hymn, "Christ My Refuge" (Poems, p. 12), and it destroyed my fear and the child was healed.

This wonderful truth has met our needs in every way. I am grateful for a better understanding of church, for class instruction, for all our periodicals, and especially for our Lesson-Sermons. During these last two years they have been just the help I needed each week. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for Science and Health, that has helped me to a better understanding of God and the Bible.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me and in the hope of encouraging some one who has struggled long to be freed from physical discord that I send this testimony.

Several years ago I was pronounced by a physician to be suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis; I was sent to a well-known sanatorium for the treatment of this disease.

Digitized by Google

After remaining two years at this institution, I found myself so much worse that it was decided I should try the climate of Colorado as a last resort. At a sanatorium all patients are classified, and when I left I came under the classification of "a long-standing case with unfavorable symptoms."

In Colorado I was in as bad condition as ever. It was while in this hopeless state that I received a letter from a friend urging me to turn to Christian Science for help. I chose a practitioner from the list printed in the Journal and started treatment at once. My progress seemed very slow to me and I often gave way to discouragement, but when one considers that I was suffering from almost every symptom of the disease besides being a complete nervous wreck, it is not be wondered at that I was not completely restored in a few weeks. Gradually improvement began to be apparent, and after two years of studying and working in Science with help from practitioners when it seemed to be needed, I was like a new creature. No one was more ready than my former physician to give the credit of my recovery to Christian Science. After a thorough examination he pronounced my case one of the most remarkable cures that had come under his observation. I have since lived in the eastern part of the United States for nearly two years with no ill effects from the rigorous eastern climate.

I can truly say with the psalmist, "I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. . . . And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God."—(Mrs.) Helen S. Hungerford, Colorado Springs, Colo.

My wife and I have been in Christian Science for more than six years and we find no words to give the slightest idea of the tremendous happiness we enjoy; we therefore feel the need of expressing our gratitude for all that Christian Science has given us since we have been happy enough to have some understanding of it. My wife wore bandages for varicose veins for more than twenty-five years, but has removed them, knowing that henceforth they are useless. Also pills which for a long time had been thought essential to produce certain functional results, have gone to join the bandages, and all is well. As to food, we no longer consider what we should or should not eat; we eat anything we care to eat, and feel all right. As for me, I am particularly grateful for having been healed of very painful hemorrhoids, as well as of the tobacco habit. I have never had the slightest desire to smoke since. For ten years I had to wear eyeglasses, but am writing this testimony without them.

Pages would not suffice to name all the blessings that we owe to Christian Science. Especially are we grateful for moral uplift. We owe to Christian Science all the joy and happiness of being able to help our fellow man. We should like to do much more, so great is our enthusiasm, but wisdom points the way and the right time to do good; it is a realm where the harvest is great and the laborers are few, and our wish in closing this testimony is that God may always raise up more laborers for His harvest, and that He may grant to us both the needful qualities so that we shall be good and useful laborers working with all our hearts in His service.

Marc Michot Clément, Lausanne, Switzerland.

With a thankful heart toward God and with gratitude toward Mrs. Eddy, who again brought us the healing message, I wish to testify of the many blessings which I have received through Christian Science. In the summer of 1919 my nine-year-old child became so seriously ill with scarlet fever that severe hemorrhages of the nose and mouth were manifested and the physician, who came in accordance with the law, ordered him removed to a hospital immediately, as he would not take the responsibility. Instead of complying with the physician's order, however, I requested the help of a Christian Science practitioner, which was lovingly given. After one week's treatment the child was almost completely healed. During his next visit the physician still considered it advisable to send him to a hospital, as scarlet fever, in his opinion, leaves all sorts of evil aftereffects; also he said that the sickness might have become internal, and in this case the child would certainly be lost.

After having treatments for three more days, the child was able to be up and to eat and drink anything he desired, regardless of the physician's instructions. After another visit the doctor caused him to be taken to a hospital. The examining physician there stated that the sickness was completely healed, that the child's skin was scaling and for a short time he would have to be kept away from other children. Since that time the child has been enjoying the best of health. We thank God for these manifestations of good and for all the blessings received.—(Mrs.) Johanna Rau, Charlottenburg, Berlin, Germany.

After reading the different testimonies in the Sentinel and Journal I wish to add my testimony to the healings I have experienced in Science. I was a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism since infancy and was under a physician's care almost continually but never received any permanent results. This condition was healed in three treatments in Science when I was about sixteen years of age. I failed to show my gratitude to God and Christian Science by striving to live as Mrs. Eddy teaches; instead I lived to enjoy the so-called pleasures of the world. About a year ago I awoke in the morning to go to work as usual but found my entire left side was paralyzed. I had medical treatment for about two weeks to quiet the fears of home folks until I could get in touch with a practitioner, as my first healing showed that medical treatment was unreliable. In about a month after commencing treatments I was entirely healed, having the same use of my body as always, and glasses have been laid aside.

I am most grateful for the spiritual uplift and peace of mind which accompanies the daily study of the Lesson-Sermons and am trying to live as we are taught to in Christian Science.—James H. Pickering, Eastwood, Ohio.

I now feel it a blessed opportunity to tell of the many blessings I have received through Christian Science. It is almost five years since I first heard of this healing truth. At that time I was a physical wreck, suffering with stomach trouble in its worst form, as I could hardly eat any kind of food, but was only drinking milk with raw eggs in it, and was very weak and nervous. I was healed of this in one week, and have had many other proofs since then. All material means were thrown away; all trust was put in God, and I have been wonderfully helped. I have been healed of sciatic rheumatism, nervous chills, colds which I had often, sore throat, burns, and wasp stings which before I knew of Christian Science gave me suffering. I have proved with my understanding of Christian Science that they are harmless, and they did not produce the slightest pain or swelling. I had one operation without receiving any help for an internal trouble for which I had doctored for years. When I told the physicians of the recurrence of this condition, they advised me to have another operation, but I did not. Since I am gaining an understanding of Christian Science this has almost vanished. In December, 1918, another form of stomach trouble appeared, and a very severe case of kidney trouble. I felt I was very near passing on, but thanks be to God, through the loving help of a practitioner I was healed.

One more healing I want to tell, which was wonderful to me,—blood poisoning of the finger. This healing took place a few years ago. I am very grateful for Christian Science, and say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction." I am grateful for the help received through practitioners, and to Mrs. Eddy that she was pure enough to reveal this blessed healing truth to the world in this age.

(Mrs.) MABEL L. HELDER, Wrightsville, Pa.

I can verify the testimony of my wife, Mabel L. Helder, because I was with her when these seeming trials manifested themselves, but through the divine law of God she was healed. I am so grateful that Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy was so good that she could pass this healing truth to mankind in such a loving way that we all can prove and demonstrate it for ourselves. Through this truth taught by Science and Health and the Bible I was healed of quinsy, headaches, influenza, and burns, and these proofs bring me joy each day.

GEORGE F. HELDER.

With a heart filled with gratitude for what Christian Science has been to me I want to give this testimony. My first experience of what God is to man was in connection with the healing of rheumatism; to mortal sense I was suffering so much that I walked the floor, holding my arm and crying with pain. When Christian Science was suggested I was willing to try anything for relief. Having a friend who was a practitioner I called her up over the telephone and she at once came to me, and that was the first I had ever heard of the teachings of Christian Science. As she explained this beautiful truth to me it certainly did appeal to me, for it did sound like such good common sense.

In less than a week I was healed of rheumatism and was also healed of stoppage of the bowels. I cannot tell how thankful I was for these healings, and many times my heart overflows with gratitude for what God has taught and is teaching me each day, step by step, of the promises the Bible contains. I certainly am grateful to God for the many blessings already received, and am more grateful than words can express that there was found one so pure in thought, patient, and filled with right desire in wanting the whole world to be benefited, as the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy.—(Mrs.) ALVINA BRODERSEN, Maquoketa, Iowa.

Right now, just as I finish reading an article in a recent Sentinel which particularly meets my needs, I want to send my thanks and appreciation of all the help I have got from the Christian Science literature. I am also very grateful for all the good that has come to me since I have been studying Christian Science. It has been such a help both spiritually and practically in raising three children. In fact, the failure to answer my little girl's questions relative to God and Jesus satisfactorily, either to her or to myself, was what led me to take up this study. And it has been such a joy to find the reasonable answers as given to us in the Bible and explained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

I find that my understanding of the truth concerning seeming accidents has enabled me to meet the falls and bumps, cuts and other errors incident to human experience in our everyday existence. Not long ago my little boy, two and a half years old, ran into his high chair, cutting and bruising his lip. It was seemingly quite a bad cut. I took him up and without even telling him to stop crying began to declare the truth silently. In a very short time, not more than a minute or two, he looked up at me, smiled through his tears and said, "Now it's fixed all right, mamma," and he was ready to play again; and in a short time all discoloration and swelling disappeared.

Since the understanding has come to me that we reflect intelligence from the one Mind, I am able to do my own work for our family of five, the youngest a baby eight months old. And this is accomplished with much less fatigue and irritation than I know would be possible without the help from my knowledge of Christian Science. I am truly grateful for all that Christian Science has done for me and also for Mrs. Eddy's unselfish devotion to the study of the Bible, and for the revelation of this great truth.

(Mrs.) MABELLE M. SENTER, Riverside, Calif.

I wish to add another expression of gratitude to the many already given. It was in August, 1918, when I saw my first copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and read the chapter on Prayer. After the passing on of a loved one four years ago, I became dissatisfied with my religion and, thank God, I was very anxious to try Christian Science. Life to me then was not worth living, but Love's healing cleanses and purifies.

I have never asked the aid of a practitioner, but have tried to remember at all times that, "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." I have been healed of rheumatism, throat trouble, fainting attacks; I have also had weak eyes a greater part of my life and can now see to do the finest work and read as long as I desire, a pleasure I had been deprived of for several years. I have had many other demonstrations, most all of which have been instantaneous. I am far from any Christian Scientists, but know if I keep ever in thought the right idea of God I shall progress.

(Miss) LILLIAN I. BURRUS, Middletown, N.C.

Had it not been for Christian Science I would not be here to-day to express my deep gratitude for what it has been to me. When I first learned of it I was suffering with a complication of diseases and was taking medicine every hour of the day. This continued for about one year, when the doctors told me they could do no more for me. At this time a friend of our family, seeing our great need of Christian Science, brought us the good tidings and I was the first one to go and see a practitioner, who gave me just one treatment and I was perfectly healed and went home rejoicing. On getting home the first thing I did was to empty my medicine case and I have never tasted or had any desire to taste medicine of any kind since that day and that is now over twenty years ago. Although I have met with many seeming troubles, divine Love, when properly relied upon, has met my every need.

The physical healings are not to be compared with the spiritual understanding of the Bible gained through the study of Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy, in connection with the Bible. Words fail to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me and mine.

Signs of the Times

[Florence Davis in Detroit (Mich.) Journal]

We still suffer from the old Puritan tradition that happiness is one of those unnecessary luxuries on which we ought to pay a kind of constant war tax of worry or guilt or fear. Happiness is supposed to be a sort of by-product of life that one should be ashamed to try to salvage. If it may be found, all well and good. If not, it is as bad manners to reach for it as if it were the biggest piece of cake on the plate. One should wait until it is passed, and then not appear overly anxious.

But perhaps this unconscious denial of happiness as a worthy object of pursuit is in some way connected with our hazy understanding of what happiness really implies. It takes us a long time to get over our childish habit of associating happiness with the possession of things. What would make you happy? Ask a little girl and she will say, "Candy and a new doll and a new frock." Ask an older girl and she may say, "A string of pearls, a limousine, and a trip to Europe." Getting things isn't the secret, but getting a state of mind or an attitude toward life holds the answer.

John Galsworthy tells us that we Americans never tell our young people how to be happy. We only talk to them about doing big things and making money and getting power. Whereas we are indebted to another Englishman, Viscount Grey, for a truly illuminating definition of happiness. Happiness, he says, has four essentials: "Some moral standard to guide all action; good relations with one's family and friends; some kind of work that makes for good citizenship; and a degree of leisure occupied by interesting pursuits." It is a strange thing that these four essentials of happiness named by Viscount Grey, correspond almost identically with the four things that Dr. Henry Cabot says are the essentials of wholesome living. Religion, love, work, and play, Doctor Cabot says, are the things that men live by. None of those four essentials implies the possession of mere things. Each one of them infers a certain acquired outlook on life which could be taught to the young, if we thought it of enough importance.

[Berkeley (Calif.) Gazette]

It is right to dwell carefully upon the constitutional aspect of the League of Nations. But we shall never get very far unless we recognize that the thing has its spiritual as well as its legal side, and that of the two, the spiritual is not the less important.

There is striking recognition of this fact in a proclamation issued by the premiers of Great Britain, Canada, South Africa, Australia, Newfoundland and New Zealand, to all the citizens of the British Empire. Declaring that neither material force nor science nor diplomacy nor prosperity is the real foundation for the ordered development of the world's life, the proclamation says:

"These things are in themselves simply the tools of the spirit that handles them. Even the hope that lies before the world of a life of peace, protected and developed by the League of Nations, is itself dependent upon something deeper and more fundamental still. The cooperation which the League of Nations explicitly exists to foster, will become operative in so far as the consenting peoples have the spirit of good will, and the spirit of good will among men rests on the spiritual fact of the 'Fatherhood of God.'"

This message would be impressive if it came from religious leaders. It is all the more so, coming as it does from the political heads of the empire. . . . There ought to be a similar appeal to "men of good will" in every country, and particularly, just now, in the United States. Without that, treaties and laws are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. Good will is the force that moves civilization—when it does move.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

HAVING been now a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR for nearly half a year, I should like to follow the desire of an overflowing heart, and express my deepest gratitude for all that the MONITOR has done and is doing for me. We here in Germany have lived for a period of over six years, if not more, in absolute darkness with regard to world politics. A wall has been erected around us, which has shut us off completely from the outer world. And now the MONITOR lifts one high above the earth and shows one all the parts of the world. It has been to me like the awakening out of a dream. The face of the earth has suddenly changed. I see everything with quite different eyes. The motives underlying the actions of the different nations appear in their true light, one gets a glimpse of the tremendous work to be done, and of what has been accomplished already.

As for the articles about Germany's attitude and conduct during the war, concerning this point my gratitude has no end! The splendid editorials have opened my eyes and have shown me the true character of our nation. Only by uncovering error we can promote the good. And in this respect the MONITOR has done splendid work! In these times of political controversy, it is a great comfort to know that one can apply Christian Science to political problems, that Christian Science frees one of timeworn boundaries and limitations, and here the MONITOR is doing just grand work. I only wish it would be more widespread here. And, the way is opening, for—owing to the outcome of the war—more and more people of this country are learning the English language and are thus preparing themselves for Christian Science and THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. May I point out to you, before I close, just one of the many items that I appreciate in the MONITOR? It is so beautiful that all the headings are of the same type and size, so that the eye of the reader isn't directed to one special article or news item, which would end in mental suggestion. Every one, of every nationality and party, can find just what he desires and will find just that which he needs. Please accept once more the expression of my deepest gratitude and of my high estimation of what THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is accomplishing.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII MAY 15, 1920 NUMBER 37

Political Preferment

PERCY PHILLIP VYLE

DURING the turmoil, in the United States, of quadrennial political activity, it is essential that those who exercise the franchise preserve that equanimity of thought which enables them to differentiate between the precept and the practice of those who seek elective honors. Preferment involves more responsibility than a mark on the ballot. The X on the ballot is the power of attorney by which the individual rights are delegated to another who acts for you by proxy. The world has need of clear, keen, analytical thinkers who perceive motives instantly, whether expressed through the spoken or the printed word. It is here that Christian Science is proving itself of great value to mankind; for in elucidating divine Principle, by which the true man is governed, this Science also outlines the rules for uncovering the magnetism of personality and prejudice which envelop so many discussions and problems of the current time.

When mortal mind's reasoning is metaphysically analyzed, it is seen that its tenacity is illogically based on wrong premise; namely, that of the human personality and its likes and dislikes. Mortal mind is deliberately stubborn, though often unconsciously so. It abhors changes which threaten to divert its activities into unaccustomed channels or to deprive it of something it supposedly now enjoys. This refusal of the carnal mind to yield itself to the truth regarding everything contrary to its inclinations, this self-blindness to the eventual benefits of new modes of procedure, is especially noticeable in the realm of government, where personality seeks to establish false premises in the communal mind by vehement oratory and fallacious writing. This, in turn, warps the judgment of those who do not possess the knowledge whereby to classify deductions and conclusions that have been magnified under the lens of individual bias. Thus the non-thinker is brought into agreement with unsound and illogical reasoning.

It is granted that many honest differences arise on important subjects, but the phases to which Christian Scientists should be alert are the wily methods of mortal planning to defeat meritorious and constructive measures and innovations, whether they emanate in legislative or corporate circles or arise in the affairs of some Church of Christ, Scientist. As there can be no bias in fact or truth, you may say that a truth needs neither an accuser nor a defender, for it is in itself impartial; it is true in both the abstract and the concrete, but its practical application is too often relegated to the background by the national consciousness. A modicum of truth is an error of statement. Truth is indivisible. There can be no separation of that which is false into parts, calling one part true and the other part untrue. It is an attempt to do this and to consider actual truth merely a matter of opinion which has led men into the morass of conflicting opinions and originated the many unstable plans for establishing a modus operandi. The only foundation for constructive action must be in constructive, truthful thinking. It must be divine Principle before human precedent. Principle, being absolute, fixed, it cannot be swayed by the diverging of many opinions.

As we proceed with the study of Christian Science and get clearer glimpses of the intelligence that is ours by the understanding of Principle, Truth, we begin to see that it is only mortal sense which is at the beck and call of all the various phases of political magnetism. Our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," confirms this, for on page 273 Mrs. Eddy says: "Science shows that material, conflicting mortal opinions and beliefs emit the effects of error at all times, but this atmosphere of mortal mind cannot be destructive to morals and health when it is opposed promptly and persistently by Christian Science. Truth and Love antidote this mental miasma, and thus invigorate and sustain existence."

Students of Christian Science need to "be instant in season, out of season" to judge opinions, and value or weigh them scientifically. The diversity and aggressiveness and frequently unrecognized influence of mere human opinion, are valid reasons for daily striving to break this mesmerism. We must understand that spiritual law is the real law, no other than perfect or scientific government. This valuation from the standpoint of divine Principle will result in the disestablishing of bias and passion in our thought and will serve as a guide for correct reasoning on the electoral problem of any year. This constructive influence will be uplifting and will help to neutralize the pervicacious persistency of efforts to annihilate self-judgment and absorb individualism. It will tend also to nullify the danger from any supposition of government that is not the turning of all to Principle together.

It is your duty and my duty, daily to learn how to recognize readily mortal or personal opinion for what it really is. In "No and Yes" (p. 1), Mrs. Eddy shows us just what procedure is necessary for clarifying judgment and making correct appraisal. She writes: "Small streams are noisy and rush precipitately; and babbling brooks fill the rivers till they rise in floods, demolishing bridges and overwhelming cities. So men when thrilled by a new idea are sometimes impatient, and when public sentiment is aroused are liable to be borne on by the current of feeling. They should then turn temporarily from the tumult, for the silent cultivation of the true idea and the quiet practice of its virtues. When the noise and stir of contending sentiments cease, and the flames die away on the mount of revelation, we can read more clearly the tablets of Truth."

So each one needs to learn to turn for himself to divine Principle and its idea, and away from mere human opinion. Doing this, students of Christian Science will all help to hasten the day of the one true government, of what the Revelator heard "as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

Instantaneous Healing

CLARA S. HARSH

WE read in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy (p. 14): "Become conscious for a single moment that Life and intelligence are purely spiritual, —neither in nor of matter,—and the body will then utter no complaints. If suffering from a belief in sickness, you will find yourself suddenly well." It is the desire of every earnest student of Christian Science to heal instantaneously. Mankind is crying out its need of deliverance from all that flesh is heir to, and is looking more and more to the truth as gleaned from the study of Christian Science. It often matters little to the average man just how the healing is accomplished. He might admit that he supposes it is done through the operation of some good; but he always demands that it be done quickly and permanently. So of course the student who is ready to know God well enough to help his fellow man, inevitably faces the important question, "Can I be healed immediately?" with the ready answer, "Consciousness is good." With the single momentary actual consciousness of that fact, the inquiring one must realize that he is already healed. Why should it take hours to be conscious? Is not man made in God's likeness, conscious eternally of his God? There is nothing that man can be conscious of save good.

It is necessary for us to be instant in the denial of error, and constant in the affirmation of the truth. The perfect, harmonious operation of Truth never can lapse for a single instant. When we talk with one who seems to desire to relate what error seems to say, our work is to turn immediately to Truth, not waiting for the one to cease talking before taking our stand, but instantly obeying Mrs. Eddy's admonition (Science and Health, p. 419), "Meet every adverse circumstance as its master." We learn from the Scriptures that the pure in heart see God, and in Science and Health (p. 241) we read: "One's aim, a point beyond faith, should be to find the footsteps of Truth, the way to health and holiness. We should strive to reach the Horeb height where God is revealed; and the corner-stone of all spiritual building is purity." The thoughts of the student must be undefiled. Where the clouds of selfishness, envy, jealousy, hatred, have dispersed, there is seen the perfect God and perfect man clearly, instantly.

The writer well remembers how in working for the children in the home, she has often been tempted to say, at the seeming approach of error, "That is nothing," perhaps giving the child a look for a moment and then seemingly pushing the thought away; but she has learned that merely that sort of denial did little good. Mortal mind would like nothing better than that the truth be forced upon it no more strongly than that; for then it might still seem to have as much power as before. But the treatment at such a call is not to ignore error or to allow error by the above method to recede into the dark recesses of mortal thought, again to pop up when we thought it destroyed, but rather both to deny error and to affirm God's allness, with such faith and understanding in His infinite power and ever presence that the error must of necessity be instantly destroyed because of the all-pervading presence of the actual consciousness which is Truth.

Instantaneous denial of error and its so-called evidence, and instantaneous declaration of the truth and a firm holding to the fact of its eternal witness, are the means by which the Christian Scientist is helped to raise in thought the standard which our revered Leader recommends in the Church Manual (Art. XXX, Sect. 7) where she says, "I recommend that each member of this Church shall strive to demonstrate by his or her practice, that Christian Science heals the sick quickly and wholly, thus proving this Science to be all that we claim for it."

A Word in Season

KATHERINE D. HOPE

THE whole world needs Christian Science to-day as never before. Our church and all branch churches need Christian Science as never before. Our periodicals need Christian Science as never before. For many years these periodicals have brought cheer and comfort and healing into our homes. Can it be right to consider keeping these messengers of Truth and Love from the field, from the homes, from the institutions, from the reading tables, from our libraries, factories, and stores, even for a day or a week? If any one thinks that the periodicals are not up to the standard of the teachings of Christian Science, let him ask himself, Am I, as an individual, living in accord with the standard of Christian Science? If so, then let us out of the fullness of our hearts send to these periodicals the messages of healing and of Truth and Love for publication. They are our periodicals, and we are privileged to "do our bit" to make them the channels of Truth and Love for which they stand and were intended—not by withdrawing our moral support, our subscriptions, our cards, but by overflowing The Christian Science Publishing Society with articles, and testimonies of healing, from Christian Scientists and practitioners from all over the world. If such messages are sent with the heart full of love for our cause and for all mankind, there will be no question or criticism of the standard of the articles, and healing will follow.

To resort to force and mob violence seems to be the paramount claim abroad to-day, and all forms of government are meeting it as best they know how. Do Christian Scientists have to resort to such methods to make the demonstrations of Truth? No! Let us stand by the only true Principle of all healing, more firmly than ever before, and know that Truth in its own quiet, sure way, will do the work, until all error is destroyed.

Christian Science the Equalizer

MARION CAROLYN JONES

FROM the earliest history of mankind, according to Genesis, men have doubted their equality with their fellow men. When Cain saw that his brother's sacrifice found greater favor with God than his own offering, through jealousy, the fruit of a false belief in inequality, he slew Abel. Then when questioned by Deity concerning his brother's whereabouts, he replied with the momentous question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" When Jesus, the great Metaphysician, came to teach men the truth about relationship, he emphasized this commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;" that is, thou shalt see thy neighbor as well as thyself reflecting God, Principle. Judas, the treasurer of the little company of disciples, betrayed his Master through failure to understand this truth.

Throughout the ages, the evil concept of inequality has flourished like a foul weed in the thoughts of men, producing a harvest of conflicting human opinions, believed to emanate from millions of minds, filling the world with discordant conditions to the undoing of humanity. The false concept that men are not equal, begets fear, envy, jealousy, greed, idleness, personal ambition, and that worst of evils, dire discouragement; and the fruitage of these errors is crime of every sort, including self-destruction. Human testimony would try to convince us that there never has been equal opportunity for all—never an equity of good. This is the evil propaganda that error employs to mislead men on their way to the promised land prepared for them from the beginning. Superficial thinking has led men to believe that intellectuality is superior to spirituality, but this is because spirituality is not generally understood. Material philosophies and hypotheses have no real foundation on which to construct an abiding place. Building castles in the air will never bring to view heavenly mansions, nor can magic be invoked whereby men may achieve heaven simply by assertion. The assertion that the kingdom of heaven is at hand must be understood and demonstrated. Idle dreaming begets apathy, and the dreamer one day wakes to find that, like Esau, he has sold his birthright for a mess of pottage.

What, then, is the remedy for mankind's belief in inequality with its long train of human ills? Christian Science, the truth about God and man, is the one deliverer from the would-be destroyer, mortal mind. The only vindication of the rights of men is the understanding of what those rights are, and the only rights are those that fall in line with God, Principle, since God and His idea is all there is. Hence man's right is the state of being right with Principle. The world is looking forward to a halcyon time when the brotherhood of man will be established in the earth, but the Christian Scientist knows that the true brotherhood of man is already established. He knows that it is a state of consciousness, the consciousness of good, and that right thinking is divinely natural. The understanding that the real man is one with Principle, spontaneously frees from bondage to false beliefs, and one instantly perceives that liberty is the power of doing what Principle unfolds. Lust of power and place vanishes like a mist before the searchlight of Christian Science and the true man is seen to be in his right place now, interfered with by nothing.

It is of the greatest importance that men learn to distinguish between the letter and the spirit—between talking and acting. And what is true acting but the activity of Principle, and what is activity but some form of service? In one of Robert Browning's poems we find Pippa, a little girl from the silk mills, asserting her right to have a holiday, humble though her occupation, and declaring joyously, "All service ranks the same with God." She had a glimpse of the truth about equality and, exalted by that revelation, went on her way singing, so inspired that she was the means of saving many from wrongdoing, through her little service of song. The great need of the world to-day is purification in service, and true service unfolds more and more as the opportunity for it appears.

Men are longing for a world without evil. The Christian Scientist knows that we can destroy evil by replacing it with good. It is always a joy to replace a false concept with the true one. What would happen to an individual who went about persistently declaring that two times two equals five and trying to make himself believe it? Doubtless ultimate confusion in his general thinking processes. Only false conclusions come from false premises. The statement two times two equals four instantly gives a restful sense of adjustment. Thus the assertion that inequality exists, when replaced by the true declaration that equality is the eternal fact, at once frees men from an evil belief and bestows a sense of peace and unity with all that is. The human sense of monopoly results in general disaster. Replace such monopoly with cooperation and we have service. Evil in its multifarious forms is without Principle, therefore without power, and is self-destroyed. To Cain's question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Christian Science replies, Verily every man is his brother's keeper to the extent that he keeps before him his brother not as an erring mortal but as spiritual man, expressing divine Mind.

In 1776 America gave to the world the inspiring declaration, "All men are created equal." This statement, founded on Principle, challenged forever the doctrine of the divine right of kings and revealed to the nations a clearer vision of government. More than a century later, through Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, America again gave to the world a vision—a wonderful vision of perfect government, in the following statement: "The Magna Charta of Christian Science means much, multum in parvo,—all-in-one and one-in-all. It stands for the inalienable, universal rights of men. Essentially democratic, its government is administered by the common consent of the governed, wherein and whereby man governed by his creator is self-governed" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, p. 254). Down through the ages to the present time, men have attempted to govern each other instead of reflecting the democratic government of God. Democracy, lifted up into the kingdom of heaven, is seen to be the democracy of Love, expressing right service according to Principle. When a man, through the study of Christian Science, gains a clearer concept of equality, he sees that man's progress is in exact ratio to his understanding of true fellowship, the relation of all creation to God.

The Christian Science Practitioner

CHARLES G. BALDWIN

I HAVE proved for myself the statement found on page 201 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where Mrs. Eddy says, "The way to extract error from mortal mind is to pour in truth through flood-tides of Love." The patient and tender ministrations of loyal Christian Science practitioners have been the means by which I and many thousands have learned to appreciate the healing power of Christian Science. Weary and heavy-laden I found in the practitioners those who could aid me to lay aside my burdens. In the divine Love thus demonstrated in accordance with the teachings of Mrs. Eddy, disease disappeared and I found protection from the ever vacillating whims of false beliefs and fashions.

Many brave travelers have given time and effort searching for the fountain of life. I traveled many years over the land of medicine, electricity, hygiene, and other cures, only hoping to prolong my mortal existence; but at length, discouraged and miserable, I turned to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and discovered the secret of immortality. With the aid of practitioners and teacher I gained the solution of my individual problems, thereby changing discouragement into courage and misery into joy. I discovered that "the vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love" (Science and Health, p. 113). This divine Love won my praise, and when all else had failed my need was met.

For years before this, whatever was the nature of my woes I had only one prayer, "O God, make me more Christlike;" and it was, I feel, in answer to this prayer that I have caught just a glimpse of the Christlike love demonstrated by Christian Scientists. This love, as taught by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, has explained and illumined the Bible for me so that its power now surpasses anything that I could ask or think, causing me to rejoice and praise God and have a truly good time in Spirit, not matter, because I know that I have found Truth and it is indeed good.

The loyal and faithful practitioners through whose untiring efforts I have often found surcease from pain and disease have made me understand that in thus acknowledging my restoration to health and the blessings received I am not praising them but I am praising God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, who is the one true Practitioner, to whom all must be turning together, thereby truly worshiping God "in spirit and in truth." Thus I learned to worship God before realizing how near is the kingdom of heaven. When I did begin to perceive, however, that the kingdom of God was at hand and that Mrs. Eddy had indeed restored the apostolic healing to the world, I discovered a new sense, a spiritual sense, of Life everlasting. I entered into the riches of this spiritual kingdom and found Life, Truth, and Love without measure. In this spiritual kingdom I perceived that, as Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 140), "not materially but spiritually we know Him as divine Mind, as Life, Truth, and Love. We shall obey and adore in proportion as we apprehend the divine nature and love Him understandingly, warring no more over the corporeality, but rejoicing in the affluence of our God." This divine affluence was manifest to me in a deeper understanding of the divine Life and Love reflected by Christ Jesus in his teaching and demonstration of man's right relation to God.

Expressing Good

JOHN ANDERSON

THE very desire to be purer and better is the opening of the door to Life and its true reflected radiance. The expression of good is the reflection of God. All the good we express in our day's work is the manifestation of the Father enabling us, "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Like the ray of light from the sun, the activity of good goes on banishing the darkness. Just one beam of light will dissipate darkness, and no matter how black the night may seem it can never extinguish the faintest ray of light.

Over fifty years ago Mary Baker Eddy began to arouse the world from its deep sleep in material theories. The world's darkness can never extinguish the light which she saw and has revealed for all as forever manifest. She demonstrated man's ability to reflect the divine power by healing the sick. For Mrs. Eddy's pure and exalted thought, every student of Christian Science is deeply grateful. Through the understanding and application of the Principle which she sets forth in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" all are made cheerful givers in the eternal now. Each student can reflect and give expression to good, thus giving forth to a world stricken with seeming social unrest and lack the true sense of God-given dominion.

When any good is done, then we know that just that much of seeming human self has been overcome, for of our own selves we can do nothing. Divine Love is forever doing good. Its expression is never wasted. As a smoked windowpane is no channel for light, so a mortal brain is no channel for infinite intelligence. The true idea, in place of the mortal seeming, is the manifestation of the divine Mind. One who knows this is rejoicing as a cheerful giver, is expressing infinite intelligence, and is guided to speak a word in season and extend a helping hand in time of need.

On page 204 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says: "The baptism of the Holy Ghost is the spirit of Truth cleansing from all sin; giving mortals new motives, new purposes, new affections, all pointing upward. This mental condition settles into strength, freedom, deep-toned faith in God; and a marked loss of faith in evil, in human wisdom, human policy, ways, and means." In the following paragraph she continues, "By purifying human thought, this state of mind permeates with increased harmony all the minutiæ of human affairs. It brings with it wonderful foresight, wisdom, and power; it unselfs the mortal purpose, gives steadiness to resolve, and success to endeavor."

The argument of self may be that good is not always appreciated; but is not man the manifestation of God, just as the ray is the expression of the sun? Would man exist without God, or God without man? As we read on page 306 of Science and Health, "If God, who is Life, were parted for a moment from His reflection, man, during that moment there would be no divinity reflected." Then let us know that man's identity is established. Going forward we will find that only good is expressed and any seeming obstacle will vanish into its native nothingness, and any seeming trials or tribulations will be found to have been angels entertained unawares. Let us awake and know that man is reflecting in pure radiance all of good. The morning light of the Christ is daily and hourly.

Evil Causeless

ANITA G. LITTLE

ONE of the most insistent demands of humanity is to know the cause or origin of discord or evil. From the standpoint of absolute Principle as taught in Christian Science we find that God, divine Mind, is the only cause and creator of all that is. Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 207): "There is but one primal cause. Therefore there can be no effect from any other cause, and there can be no reality in aught which does not proceed from this great and only cause." Since God is infinite good, there can be, in reality, no place or being for a cause or origin for good's opposite, evil. Thus in the light of divine Science, evil, having no cause or origin, has no reality, no real existence, and to strive to discover the cause of evil is to attempt to establish a self-evident impossibility, the reality of unreality.

In the same sense that light destroys darkness, does Truth uncover error and reveal all seeming evils to be but illusions of mortal belief, a false and mistaken sense or claim of reality. A complete understanding and realization of the allness of God instantly destroys the illusion of evil, and its manifestations vanish from human experience. On page 390 of Science and Health we find, "It is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony." Here we see clearly that it is ignorance of Truth that makes unreality appear real. We all readily agree that ignorance is not of itself an entity but is merely absence of knowledge of the truth, and is as powerless to resist the truth as darkness is to withstand the presence of light. If lack of right understanding of God produces the illusion of evil, to human belief, then its most simple remedy is spiritual awakening to the unchanging truth of being.

This is an important lesson for us to learn who have set out upon the heavenward journey out of materiality, to overcome in consciousness all claims of evil and discord. Having accepted the teachings of Christian Science as our guide, the mystery as to the origin or cause of evil no longer hampers thought, thus delaying the day of victory. We are wise indeed to know, when apparent discord or an evil condition would attempt to deceive us, that there is no real cause whatever for it, but that the illusion only points to our ignorance of the right understanding of God. So let us calmly and fearlessly turn away from seeming discord to consecrate our thoughts and hearts anew to God, the divine Principle of our being, to receive a greater and fuller realization of the infinite allness of good, that the right understanding of Him may restore harmony.

True Debt

HELEN T. BELFORD

"FORGIVE us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." This portion of the Lord's Prayer, with its spiritual interpretation given by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 17), "And Love is reflected in love," has proved a source of great inspiration to me. A close study of the phrasing brings out much that is necessarily unrevealed by any mere repetition of the words. The Encyclopedia Britannica defines debt as "a thing owed" and further states that it is the duty of a debtor to pay a debt without waiting for a demand.

Many of the troubles that seem to be part of mortal existence are brought about by a false sense of debt, as of merely something due to some person. Among these troubles are the beliefs about the body, that have been accompanied by so-called mortal rules and regulations aimed to prevent disease and discord. Mortals are beset on all sides by what they are supposed to owe to their bodies to preserve health and harmony. Here Christian Science replaces the false sense of debt with the true. The only debt one owes to his body is to realize that Mind and its idea is all there is, in place of any material sense of body. As the divine Mind is perfect and harmonious, so Mind's idea, the reflection of God, is perfect and harmonious.

Much of the unrest so commented on in the press of today is due in a large measure to the false sense of debt entertained by mankind. From the individual relations of living, on through the relations of employer and employee, labor and capital, up to the relations of the nations, the false sense of owing something stirs up discord and dismay. Every one seems to be demanding his due, or what mortal mind has outlined as his due. This false sense of things seems to take many varied forms. Sometimes it is a belief that deference and servile obedience are due to supposed mortal place and power. It may be a sense that allegiance is owed merely because of fancied benefits bestowed by some person. Again, the suppositional mortal mind would like to demand as its due a complete surrender to its opinions. In such a case there is generally resentment unless the spurious debt is promptly paid.

Mrs. Eddy, however, in the statement already quoted, has given the answer that will solve every problem, it matters not what form it may seem to take. "And Love is reflected in love." On page 465 of Science and Health, we read, "God is incorporeal, divine, supreme, infinite Mind, Spirit, Soul, Principle, Life, Truth, Love;" and again on page 567, "To infinite, ever-present Love, all is Love, and there is no error, no sin, sickness, nor death." So if in place of the mortal sense of debt, we know that the real man is owing it to God to express Love, or Principle, and is ceaselessly paying this debt, the result is the unlimited expression of the Love which is Principle. All that is necessary, therefore, for the individual, the nations, the whole world, to know is that true Love is necessarily reflected in love. The actual demonstration of this means the paying of all debt in the right way through thorough obedience to the demand of Principle alone.

Selected Articles

["'As a little child'"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., March 2, 1920]

In the tenth chapter of Mark there is recorded the tender story of Jesus blessing the little children, during which he uttered the luminous words, "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." Here the Master has again used one of those many metaphors which have been interpreted in many ways from many angles of vision. The meaning of this particular one, however, has never been regarded as unduly obscure, for the average person feels that he understands what Jesus meant by it. It is quite clear to every one that a little child typifies innocence, purity, trust—all of them spiritual qualities. But to the student of Christian Science there is a still deeper significance in this figure of speech, and one which is discerned only through a comprehension of metaphysics.

Precisely what is the outstanding characteristic of a little child as distinguished from an adult? Obviously it is the absence in the former of what we know as human experience. A child has, as it were, no background of experience against which he attempts to test the truth of every statement made to him. He accepts or rejects an idea purely at its face value; for as we all know, a little child is the most disconcertingly logical of all thinking creatures. The adult is prone either to laugh at or to find irksome the persistent "whys" of a child, and yet he is usually forced to admit the pertinence of the question. This is especially true with reference to childish queries about God, and many an adult has fled incontinently before some diminutive inquisitor. Nevertheless the child's questions demand answers, and right answers, for in reality they are the questions to which the adult as well as the child needs to have answers, but which the adult has gradually given up hope of solving and so attempts to conceal this hopelessness under a mask of assumed superiority and amused condescension.

Now since Jesus declared that unless one became as a little child it was impossible to enter the kingdom of God, it is certainly of first importance to understand what he really meant and how that much to be desired result may be accomplished. How can a man of threescore years, let us say, become as a little child? It is all very well to admonish that it be done, and every adult would certainly do it if he believed that he could; but just how can it be achieved? As has already been said, it is the absence of any background of human experience which is the real difference between a child and a grown-up. Is it not therefore self-evident that what Jesus was really commanding was that the truth of his statements be tested by some standard other than sense testimony, which is what we call human experience?

But only the study of Christian Science gives to us any other basis for judgment, and that basis is logic. On page 93 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Divine logic and revelation coincide." Obviously divine logic is nothing more nor less than accurate, infallible logic, which is the very thing lacking in every human system since the world began; but wherever divine logic does enter into consciousness, there instantaneously is revelation. It was because Christ Jesus never abandoned true logic, regardless of what the physical senses might attempt to proclaim, that he was given the revelation that sin, sickness, and death do not exist. Before the tomb of Lazarus he remained steadfastly logical, while those about him abandoned themselves to unreasoning grief. Jesus could see plainly that death, being nothing but a supposed absence of life, could not be a fact so long as life itself is a fact; and that life is a fact he knew beyond question or doubt. Divine logic convinced him that opposite things cannot both be true, for if any given condition is true, then the opposite to it must be the opposite to the true, exactly as in the algebraic equation, in which a changed sign on one side of the equation requires a like change on the other side, else the equation ceases to be a mathematical fact. It would seem as if Jesus had reasoned something like this: Being alive myself I know that life is; therefore a supposed absence of life, called death, is not. On this occasion his reasoning was put to the most rigid test, for not only was it necessary to turn from sense testimony, which proclaimed that Lazarus had been dead entirely too long to make any effort at resuscitation reasonable, but there was the added temptation to be swayed by the deep grief of his well loved friends, the sisters of Lazarus. It is interesting to note in this narrative how Jesus first denied specifically the reality of death, but when he saw that the metaphysical import of this was wholly lost on his hearers, who were accusing him of faulty human diagnosis, he then spoke plainly in terms of their comprehension and said that, as they judged death, Lazarus was dead, nevertheless he would prove to them that he was not dead; and so he spoke, not to dead Lazarus, but to a living Lazarus, and bade him come forth—all with the simplicity and direct logic of a little child who is unmindful of any so-called human probabilities whatsoever.

Christ Jesus was divinely childlike also in his complete dependence upon his Father, and yet it was dependence growing from his accurate reasoning regarding the relationship between cause and effect. When he said, "I and my Father are one," and, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." he expressed this relationship exactly—this at-one-ment or atonement.

When the adult speaks of becoming as a little child, what does he really mean? Is he wishing just for the untrammeled joys of youth, or is he asking to have a clear vision of reality which comes only as the revelation flowering from the vine of divine logic? On pages 323 and 324 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy recognizes the importance of all this, where she says, "Willingness to become as a little child and to leave the old for the new, renders thought receptive of the advanced idea."

[W. Stuart Booth in North Fork Times, Ramah, Colo.]

Inasmuch as some misguided persons have distributed in your midst a pamphlet intended to discredit Christian Science, the courtesy of space is requested that the truth may be given to your readers.

Christ Jesus came declaring that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," and he supported his declaration by healing sickness and sin and destroying death. These irrefutable arguments, supporting his spiritual teaching, aroused the intense opposition of scholastic theologians and gross materialists, and resulted in the crucifixion. Now Christian Science is the revival of primitive Christianity in both its word and its works. It reiterates the Master's statement about the kingdom of heaven, the government of divine harmony, as being available here and now. And Christian Science, in obedience to the indivisible commands to "preach the gospel," and "heal the sick," verifies its preaching by its practice; for by it the sick are healed, the sin-bound freed, and the true sense of life is being gained in accord with Paul's statement that "to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Quite naturally such preaching and practice is startling to scholasticism, which teaches a post-mortem, problematical heaven and offers such poor comfort to the sick as the untrue words, "It is the Lord's will."

When the priests of the first century were persecuting the apostles because of their healing works, Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, said, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it: lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." Such advice is most appropriate to the present instance.

Just one reference to the pamphlet will suffice to reveal its unreliability. Practically every reference from Science and Health quoted therein is either incorrect or incomplete; and thus when torn from the context, as they are in every instance, the meaning is obviously perverted. For example, in a purported quotation from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 5), Mrs. Eddy is made to say, "If prayer nourishes the fact that man is made better by it then prayer is an evil." The correct quotation, the meaning of which is clear and unmistakable and quite different, is as follows: "Prayer is not to be used as a confessional to cancel sin. Such an error would impede true religion. Sin is forgiven only as it is destroyed by Christ,—Truth and Life. If prayer nourishes the belief that sin is cancelled, and that man is made better merely by praying, prayer is an evil. He grows worse who continues in sin because he fancies himself forgiven."

Those who desire to learn the truth about Christian Science teaching, would do well to study its textbook, above quoted, instead of accepting any misquotations and misrepresentations from those who are blinded by prejudice or whose vision is narrowed and perverted by man-made creeds.

[A. J. Chapman in New Orleans (La.) States]

In a recent issue there appeared a report of a sermon delivered by a Roman Catholic priest on the subject of "Christian Science and Christian Sense," wherein he discusses the "nothingness of matter," and claims to speak with knowledge as to what Christian Science teaches on this subject. He says that of all the people on the face of the earth we, "the sensible, boastful, educated, prosperous, and successful Americans are the easiest to fool in religious matters," and then he proceeds to tell us that "of all the new forms of religion to take a firm hold on the American mind, Christian Science is the queerest of all." This is equivalent to saying that Christian Science has a firm hold on these same "sensible, boastful, educated, prosperous, and successful Americans." In this, I think, we shall have to agree with him, for Christian Science appeals to just such people.

Now, what Christian Science teaches as to the "nothingness of matter" could hardly be explained in a short letter. To the human mind, matter seems very real, yet it is a fact that the most eminent physicists of the present day are agreed that it is impossible to prove that such a thing as matter exists. The Bible informs us that "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

I might say that in Christian Science matter is an expression of mortal thought. The material universe is an externalization of mortal thought, or human thought objectified. Paul tells us that "the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." From this we are bound to conclude that what the human or carnal mind beholds and claims as real is material, consequently unreal from the standpoint of God, for the Scriptures affirm that God's creation is spiritual and indestructible—not material or temporal.

Our critic's so-called example of a collision between an idea and a fire truck, although quite amusing, does not in any way illustrate the teachings of Christian Science. In the first place, ideas are not material. Webster defines an idea as "a mental image" or "an object of the mind existing . . . in thought." In Christian Science, idea has but one meaning, and that spiritual, standing forever for that which reflects and expresses God. The real man created by God is a divine idea, and the power and wisdom of the creator is expressed through His ideas.

[Percy H. Brooks in Nottingham (England) Journal and Express]

The Reverend Canon Field did right in going to the Christian Science textbook for his information. The reason why he has failed to grasp its spiritual meaning is because he has studied it through the lens of scholastic theology.

His statement that "the Church can give all and more than Christian Science could give" is a bold one indeed, and one he will find it difficult to prove, for the theology taught by the churches does not and cannot heal the sick.

He states that the "Christian Scientists declare that the sick have no need of a physician." Nowhere in the Christian Science literature will he find this statement, and no Scientists would make it. They can, however, say that they do not need medical assistance, because God is their only Physician.

Had the worthy canon's thought caught the spiritual inspiration of Christian Science, his sermons would heal the sick both bodily and mentally.

[C. W. Hale in The Star, Indianapolis, Ind.]

It seems that history still repeats itself, and that intolerance still holds human thought and causes it harshly to condemn anything that seems to differ from preconceived ideas, and see in it only that which is evil, regardless of evidence and positive proof to the contrary. When Christ Jesus was doing his wonderful redemptive work, and had just accomplished the remarkable healing of a blind man, the accepted and orthodox theologians of that day bitterly attacked him, and declared his work to be of the devil.

This account is given in Matthew: "But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils. And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand: and if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand? And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges. But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you."

So to-day we have a similar condition presenting itself in the sermon reported in a recent issue of The Star, wherein it is asserted that Christian Science is a "false doctrine" and its work is a part of "the devil's revival." The reply of Christ Jesus to the Pharisees will answer this criticism of to-day. The work of Christian Science in healing the sick, regenerating the sinner, and in purifying thought has in it no element of evil, but is in demonstration of the power and presence of God. Christian Science is based wholly and absolutely upon the Scriptures, and is the proof of the teachings of Christ Jesus. It is a consistent and accurate Science, which enables its followers to prove its teachings with those "signs" which "follow them that believe." It asks no man to accept any arbitrary assertion, but is willing to submit its teachings and its work to the test Jesus recommended under similar conditions, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, says in "No and Yes," on page 41: "History repeats itself. The Pharisees of old warned the people to beware of Jesus, and contemptuously called him 'this fellow.' Jesus said, 'For which of these works do ye stone me?' as much as to ask, Is it the work most derided and envied that is most acceptable to God? Not that he would cease to do the will of his Father on account of persecution, but he would repeat his work to the best advantage for mankind and the glory of his Father. . . . Through long ages people have slumbered over Christ's commands, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel;' 'Heal the sick, cast out devils;' and now the Church seems almost chagrined that by new discoveries of Truth sin is losing prestige and power."

[T. E. Davidson in Newcastle-on-Tyne (England) Journal]

A critic complains of an abbreviated quotation. This was purely for want of space. The context made his case more untenable. He concludes his argument for a personal devil by hoping that all candid minds will be convinced. One wonders whether even his brother ministers of the churches in the next street agree with him. The space allotted to this letter being also limited, it is only possible to reply to the new points raised. Your correspondent, not content with the assertion that the Christian Science church is neither Christian nor scientific, now adds that it is also a rehash of pagan philosophy. Does he really believe that such teaching as he imagines Christian Science to be would attract, as Bishop Welldon says it is attracting, ever increasing numbers of educated, intelligent men and women?

Christian Science is much more than a philosophy; it is a religion based upon the spiritual interpretation of Christian revelation, and is therefore Christian. The dictionaries define a Christian as some one accepting the teaching of Jesus the Christ, and the Master himself gave the test for all time. His test was not the mere verbal assent to a dogma, but the proof shown by the ability to do the works. Your correspondent does not accept this test, and is content to criticize others who do. True science is the knowledge of God and of His ways and laws; this knowledge and the inseparable application of it unlock the action and power of divine Love. This is, very briefly, the Christianly scientific way of health and salvation; it is not, therefore, personal supplication, suggestion, or faith healing. Mrs. Eddy puts it clearly in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 390), "It is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony."

Christian Scientists are grateful to Mrs. Eddy for having emphasized the fact that Jesus overcame death, instead of yielding to it. He was engaged all his life in putting off the Jesus and putting on the Christ; his work was to prove life to be eternal. He said, "I lay down my life, that I might take it again." There was so little of the Jesus left after his crucifixion that the materially minded soldiers failed to see him; in fact, only those who had a vision of the Christ saw him after his resurrection. His glorious career culminated with the proof that there is no death when he declared on the cross, "It is finished." His complete overcoming of the flesh was not until his ascension, proving again what your correspondent fails to understand; namely, the unreality of matter, including sin, disease, and death.

Divine Economy

The economic systems of the world, like everything else which is a product of the human mind, are founded in inharmony. When the significance of this is fully grasped, the attempt to accomplish the impossible will be given up. Men will turn from effect to cause. They will begin to analyze that saying, so deep because so apparently simple, of Jesus of Nazareth: "For every tree is known by his own fruit. For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes;" or, to reduce it to the terminology of the twentieth century, an economic system conceived in accordance with Principle cannot produce economic effects antagonistic to Principle. Therefore, any inharmonious economic effect must be produced by a cause antagonistic to Principle, since Principle, in its own nature, is harmonious. Speaking of men and women, on page 51 of "Unity of Good," Mrs. Eddy declares, with that marvelous insight which pierces straight to the spiritual fact, "They have none of them lost their harmonious state, in the economy of God's wisdom and government."

The word economy, of course, is not a mere synonym for frugality. It has come to mean frugality, amongst other things, it is true; but it is derived from two Greek words meaning house and steward, and in its true sense means "the administration of the concerns and resources of a community." Now, as every material phenomenon is the counterfeit of some spiritual reality, there is a divine economy of which all material economy is the counterfeit. It is this divine economy to which Mrs. Eddy refers in the passage just quoted; and it is in the exact proportion in which the individual masters this great metaphysical fact, that he realizes that precisely as he subjugates and destroys the material in his own consciousness he will succeed in demonstrating the at-one-ment of the spiritual reality with its Principle, God, and so begin to comprehend the meaning of that sentence on page 327 of Science and Health, "To the physical senses, the strict demands of Christian Science seem peremptory; but mortals are hastening to learn that Life is God, good, and that evil has in reality neither place nor power in the human or the divine economy."

Evil, being nothing but a negation of Truth, has, of course, a mere suppositional existence. Consequently, the appearance of any inharmonious effect in human economics points directly to the acceptation of an erroneous concept of law, and so to the necessity for correcting the mental impression conveyed by this supposititious law. It was precisely at such false impressions of law that Christ Jesus' whole system of demonstration was aimed. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He could scarcely have said more clearly: If you accept my teaching,—that is, if you make it your own and demonstrate it,—you will be freed from all the impressions of false law by which you have limited yourselves, and will be able to prove the spiritual fact in feeding multitudes, walking on the waves, and raising the so-called dead. In other words, you will be "hastening to learn that Life is God, good, and that evil has in reality neither place nor power in the human or the divine economy."

The divine economy, then, is spiritual law, which administers, if the phrase may be used, "the concerns and resources" of the spiritual world. Where the human economist goes hopelessly and fundamentally wrong is in the acceptance of a counterfeit material law. Law, it must be remembered, is no mere legislation of politicians, to be enacted, amended, or rescinded under political pressure. It is the operation of Principle, in which no variation is possible. Thus when politicians undertake to legislate for humanity, they accomplish good or evil just as their labors approximate to, or diverge from, Principle. This divergence or approximation is no matter of opinion; it is a matter of fact. Opinion will, of course, vary as to the fact, but this will not, in the very least, affect the fact. The result alone will show, to the human mind, who were correct in their conclusions, but even this result will not convince the dissenter of the right or wrong of the case. That conviction can only be brought about by an understanding of Principle clear enough to separate the legislative sheep from the goats. Then the political observer will read accurately not only the materially economic but the divinely economic signs of the times.

Until this is done men will grope blindly after material remedies to material conditions, and the ebb and flow of success and failure, encouragement and disappointment, will accompany their endeavors. The eventual failure lies in not perceiving that it is impossible to gather figs from a thorn tree. In other words, the human mind being itself discordant, discord is inherent in all its remedies. The only way out of these material conditions is for the individual to learn the scientific truth which frees the student from the mesmerism of wrong impressions. This is precisely what is happening to-day, and it accounts for all the disturbance observable in the economic world. The needle of the economic compass is being perpetually diverted by the influence of absolute Truth. As Mrs. Eddy writes on page 423 of Science and Health, "Both Science and consciousness are now at work in the divine economy of being according to the law of Mind, which ultimately asserts its absolute supremacy." While this process is going on, a man must, of course, be guided by his vision of the Christ, now dim perhaps and now strong. To-day, as Paul says, he may only see in a glass darkly, but if he is faithful he will eventually see face to face. In the early days of his pursuit of Truth, he will doubtless resort to many expedients which he will reject later on. But this will not prove that these expedients were not the best for him at that period of his understanding.

Now the test of the completeness of his understanding lies in the terms of his acceptance of the unreality of matter, and, above all, in his power to demonstrate this unreality. The master Metaphysician walked on the water, fed the multitudes, and raised the dead. His followers to-day seem to rest content with lesser demonstrations, but for all that, they know exactly the extent to which matter appeals to them. In the strength or weakness of this appeal will be discovered the individual's approach to a solution of all economic problems. The more he clings to matter, the stronger to him will be the appeal of the so-called law of supply and demand, the lockout, and the strike; but the clearer his vision of the Christ, the more naturally will he seek the solution of his problems in the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, and the miracle of the feeding of the multitude.

Time and Space

IN any case of so-called physical disease, the belief is that the trouble is in a particular place at a specific time. The discord is supposed to begin at some instant, run a course either gradual or swift, and lead to some end. It is also assumed to have a material location in accord with the testimony of the human senses. For healing, therefore, such falsities must be replaced with the understanding of the eternity and infinity of right action, ever going on in the divine Mind. The one Mind, which is God, is truly the one place in which is all spiritual and real manifestation. In this Mind, the genuine man lives and moves and has his whole being. This fact the student of Christian Science must be constantly proving.

Divine metaphysics, as presented by Mrs. Eddy, has long since explained that the mortal concepts of time and space are mere surmises. What one has of time, after all, is simply one's concept of time, and what one has of place is one's concept of place. It is interesting to see that research and reasoning even on a physical basis are approaching the same conclusion. Analysis of matter finds sooner or later the nothingness of matter as an illusion of the supposed mortal mind, because there is nothing else to find out about matter. Such reasoning along the line of the physical sciences does not, however, establish the actual allness of Spirit and its spiritual manifestation. Christian Science alone can demonstrate the entirety of spiritual consciousness infinitely expressed.

How many people have stopped to think that when they have gone a mile in a railway train, they are also supposed to have gone many miles because of the rotation and revolution of the earth? This latter experience they have been accustomed to measure in terms of time. Yet that very sense of time is, after all, but an attempt to conceive of space. In other words, any physicist would grant at once that what are known as time and space are simply different ways of considering what is essentially incapable of being so differentiated. Indeed, the whole illusion must be replaced with the true sense of infinite action in Mind, quite apart from matter. Christian Science shows clearly that attempts at mortal measurements are utterly inexact and unreliable. On page 595 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy gives the following definition: "TIME. Mortal measurements; limits, in which are summed up all human acts, thoughts, beliefs, opinions, knowledge; matter; error; that which begins before, and continues after, what is termed death, until the mortal disappears and spiritual perfection appears." On page 584 she also says: "The objects of time and sense disappear in the illumination of spiritual understanding, and Mind measures time according to the good that is unfolded."

Replace the mortal sense of time and space with the immortal truth of eternity and infinity here and now, and really nothing is left to matter. It never has been anything more than the believed effect of an altogether supposititious mortal mind. Replace this imposturous mortal mind with the provable divine Mind, which is conscious only of its spiritually substantial idea, and the whole counterfeit gives way to the genuine. The one logical fact of existence is that the divine Mind and its idea is even where any counterfeit supposes itself to be. That is to say, the true place is infinite Mind here and now, and the true time is the same present infinity. Regardless of any delusion that may claim to present itself, the reality is tangibly to be experienced and enjoyed.

Mrs. Eddy has discussed this subject carefully in her article called "One Cause and Effect" on pages 21 to 30 of "Miscellaneous Writings." In one paragraph, beginning on page 25, she says for instance: "No human hypotheses, whether in philosophy, medicine, or religion, can survive the wreck of time; but whatever is of God, hath life abiding in it, and ultimately will be known as self-evident truth, as demonstrable as mathematics. Each successive period of progress is a period more humane and spiritual. The only logical conclusion is that all is Mind and its manifestation, from the rolling of worlds, in the most subtle ether, to a potato-patch." Each one, then, instead of resting content with any mortal sense of things, must be alert to discern and understand the true idea in Mind which the seeming would claim to reverse. What survives the "wreck of time" is the understanding of eternity, and this comes straight from the creator, and is contingent on no mortal hypotheses.

Any questioning of hitherto accepted beliefs about matter is a good sign. With such questioning, supposed laws of matter are found to be not laws at all but merely generalizations, based on more or less faulty observations through the material senses. When mistakes are reduced to their native nothingness, honest seekers are the more ready to consider carefully what really is absolute and demonstrable law. In all experience, each one finds limitations ceasing in proportion as he knows the presence of infinity. To be conscious that the unfoldment of Principle is the only truly possible course for man in the divine likeness is to consent to no supposed course of disease as necessary. The real activity has its beginning or cause in Mind forever now. Its whole purpose is effective expression of Principle and in this it perfectly succeeds. Its place is in Mind, not in matter or any supposed portion of matter. Here in Mind, the true activity necessarily has infinite room. Every mortal sense of time and space has given way to the boundless idea. Turning to Mind and idea as the reality, each one must prove for himself the nothingness of supposedly material limitations. Really, every demonstration of Christian Science is thus, in one way or another, a proof of the divine dominion over time and space, and of the allness of spiritual activity.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

ONTARIO.—The press has manifested a very fair spirit during the eleven months to October 1, 1919. Very few erroneous statements about Christian Science have been published in the newspapers of this province, apart from reports of sermons which contained misrepresentations. The newspapers in which the matter appeared, almost uniformly published the corrections submitted by the committee. The number of attacks in denominational papers showed a satisfactory decrease. Twenty-five letters in all were written as replies, of which only four were entirely unpublished.

On December 2, 1918, four members of the Ontario Cabinet heard representatives of the various schools of medical practice regarding a proposed definition of medicine. As Christian Scientists were also invited to state their views on the subject, I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., as our counsel, ably presented our position: that we are not practicing medicine but healing by purely spiritual means, that we are law-abiding citizens, careful to observe the regulations regarding the reporting of contagious diseases, and worthy to exercise our religious freedom and our practice of healing by prayer.

Committee on Publication.

MONTEVIDEO, MINN.—With the intention of eventually erecting a place of worship, the Christian Science Society has purchased a site at Sixth and Sherman Streets, known as the Webb property. They paid $1575 for the lot.

Montevideo News.

OWOSSO, MICH.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, will build a new church edifice this coming summer. They have a splendid lot for the site in one of the very best locations in the city, all paid for. The church is in a very flourishing condition and a rapid growth is expected.

WEBB CITY, MO.—The literature distribution committee, from February 1 to December 30, 1919, distributed in boxes and through the mail 138 Journals, 583 Sentinels, 352 Monitors, and 50 Quarterlies, a total of 1123 pieces.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

NEW YORK, N. Y. (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Guy Parkhurst Estes, who said in part:—

We are in an age when all the world is seeking a new law of adjustment. Men are struggling with men, and minds against minds. The human endeavors and agencies are failing, and mankind is being forced to look beyond the material into the ideal and spiritual. Christian Science comes at this time, not alone as a physical remedy, but as a guide to the true brotherhood of man, which can be established only by our learning that God is Love, as the Bible teaches.

LA FAYETTE, IND. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Arthur Hussey, who said in part:—

A message bearing an offer of release from bondage, to all men, in all ages, in all time, was given to a darkened world many centuries ago by the gentle Nazarene when he said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." For more than seventeen hundred years the rich significance of these comforting words has been lost, and men have vainly sought surcease from sin and sorrow, from discord and discontent, in ways material. About fifty years ago another message was given to mankind, by a noble woman, Mary Baker Eddy, whose purity of thought enabled her to discover and to interpret for a weary, sin-sick world the truth about the religion as taught and practiced in the far-away hills of Judea by our Savior when he was here upon earth among men. From Genesis to Revelation the Bible is filled with promises, and Mrs. Eddy's interpretation of the Scriptures teaches us how we may realize the fulfillment of these promises here and now and also how we may attain a demonstrable understanding of the religion of Jesus,—a religion of love, of truth, of real brotherhood, a religion of "on earth peace, good will toward men."

CALDWELL, NEW JERSEY (Essex County Penitentiary, auspices of Montclair).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Eugénie Paul Jefferson, who said in part:—

We invite you to join with us this evening in a little right thinking. The power of thinking right is so great that the influence of this hour will be felt in our whole future life.

Some one has said that Christian Science is sanctified common sense, but its Discoverer went away beyond that and called it divine wisdom. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 364), Mrs. Eddy says of Christian Science, "It is not a search after wisdom, it is wisdom: it is God's right hand grasping the universe,—all time, space, immortality, thought, extension, cause, and effect; constituting and governing all identity, individuality, law, and power."

BROMLEY, KENT, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by H. Herbert Pain, who said in part:—

We live in times of great unrest, and the whole world, whether regarded from a political, financial, commercial, or religious point of view, seems to be in a state of upheaval and general discontent. Politicians are busy establishing a League of Nations, and religionists of various creeds a League of Religions, with a well meant intention of minimizing the chances of war in the future and of promoting peace and good will among all peoples and nations by the aid of their respective organizations. Whilst these efforts are undoubtedly a movement in the right direction, at best they can only meet with qualified success, swayed as they are in the belief in the existence of two powers, good and evil. Only through Christian Science can world-wide peace and good will among men be definitely attained, because Christian Science alone recognizes the existence of only one power; namely, God, infinite good, the divine Principle of all that really exists.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (joint lecture).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Archibald W. Edes, who said in part:—

The earliest saying of Jesus that is recorded, is in the gospel of Luke, when Mary and Joseph, having discovered his absence, returned to Jerusalem and found him, a lad of twelve, talking with the learned theologians of the period. His greeting amazed them. "How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" he asked.

The earnest student of Christian Science is likewise endeavoring to make his first concern in life to be about his Father's business. The Father's business is the expression of the truth, the activity of right ideas; therefore every man engaged in his Father's business is engaged in learning something more about the truth, and demonstrating that it is practical in daily affairs.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Miss Adelaide Burkitt, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new religion; it is the revival of primitive Christianity, the pure and simple religion of Christ Jesus, with its gospel of love and healing, preaching "deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised." It is the mission of Christian Science to loose the prisoners from the bondage of sin and disease, to bind up the broken-hearted, and to set the captive free.

It is our ignorance and lack of spiritual understanding that makes it seem almost incredible that the religion of Christ should free from disease as well as from sin, since Jesus' commands to his followers are: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," "Heal the sick." Mrs. Eddy throughout all her writings points her students to Jesus' works and character.

CHICAGO, ILL. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Charles B. Jamieson, who said in part:—

Great and rapid changes are taking place in universal thought. Religion is discarding much that is mere superstition and speculation; medicine is passing out of matter into Mind; and science is recognizing more the law of spiritual cause and effect. Christian Science has been an important factor in inducing these progressive changes. From the ever changing religious and medical beliefs of the human mind and from its unrest and unsatisfying conditions, it is a great satisfaction to turn to divine Principle and the fixed and unchanging laws of God as they are found and taught in Christian Science. The willingness and the ability of God and His Christ to destroy sin and heal the sick is reasonable and desirable Christian knowledge. Certainly such knowledge can but enhance the religious and medical views of all Christians.

STERLING, KAN. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Edward E. Yaggy, who said in part:—

We are admonished in over eight hundred verses in the Bible to rejoice, to rejoice greatly, to rejoice with thanksgiving, to rejoice for evermore. In truth, the admonition to rejoice runs through many of the Biblical books, just as a motif runs through the musical text of a modern opera. Christian Scientists are striving to make rejoicing a leading motive in their daily lives, because Christian Science in its glorious application of the Christ-principle has taught us how and why to rejoice.—The Sterling Bulletin.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. (joint lecture).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Rose C. Flenner, who said in part:—

Ever since time began, humanity has been seeking health, happiness, and peace, a peace the world cannot give, the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding." Centuries ago in the midst of tumult and dissension, Jesus came to live among men, and his coming was announced by the angels in their glorious message, "On earth peace, good will toward men." Nevertheless the world would not accept his teachings, but laughed him to scorn, and turned from him in derision. When Jesus sent forth his disciples "to preach the gospel" and "to heal the sick," he said to them, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," and Paul tells us, in his epistle to the Romans, "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

To-day the message of Christian Science, the message of righteousness, peace, and love, is resounding to the earth's remotest bounds. Many have listened and are being blessed, but some have laughed and turned away. Those of us who have been restored to health and lifted from the very depths of despair or sin, through the gentle healing power of this wonderful truth, joyfully acknowledge that all we know of health, happiness, and success we owe to Christian Science, because it is teaching us to trust the loving and protecting care of God, and is bringing to us an understanding of that righteousness, peace, and joy which is the "kingdom of heaven."

Testimonies of Healing

Four years ago I read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy for the first time with an open mind, and before I had read far I was convinced of the truth it contained. Although I had taken up the book out of mere curiosity and with no desire to gain help from it, I saw as I read that it expressed the truth of Christianity, the undivided garment, and I was very shortly thereafter healed of a sense of jealousy that had always been a burden to me and of stomach and intestinal trouble that I had suffered from since I was a small child. Since then there have been two almost instantaneous healings of grippe, as well as many healings of minor things such as colds and headaches.

In the winter of 1918 a demonstration was made in the overcoming of pneumonia and pleurisy. The healing of the lungs took place just as soon as I gave up a sense of self-will and yielded obedience to those who were helping me. This came at the end of eight days and nights of complete prostration and delirium. After that there was a sense of weakness to be overcome, which culminated one day in a rapid sinking spell. When what seemed to be the end approached, my Christian Science nurse and I decided not to call the practitioner for help lest we alarm the other members of my family. Then for about three hours we worked without ceasing. During most of this time I was unconscious, but in my conscious moments I was enabled to see the truth of being more clearly than ever before, and every suggestion of what seemed so imminent to mortal sense was met by the clear understanding that God was my Life and that I had no life in matter to relinquish. At the end of the three hours my strength suddenly returned. Every accompanying symptom which had appeared was overcome, such as an irritating and disfiguring rash which covered my body, and such weakness of the eyes that I could at times hardly focus them, and in three weeks from the day I first went to bed I went out riding in an automobile.

The gratitude which I felt following this healing was not greater for the healing itself than for the fact that I had been enabled to understand the Principle which had healed me; and the feeling of all of us who had worked together was not merely that the body had been cured, but that a great spiritual victory had been won. For this and for all the blessings which have come to me through Christian Science, I render to God most grateful thanks.—(Mrs.) HELEN GROW ROTTSCHAEFER, Cranford, New Jersey.

Words cannot express the great joy that has come into my life since studying Christian Science and gaining a larger understanding of God. After suffering daily for more than twenty-five years and being placed upon the invalid list by all who knew me, and traveling hither and yon in search of the proper climate, I found myself in the home of a Christian Scientist in southern California. At first I had great fear and doubt, then a great curiosity to know about Christian Science. Seeing the great love and harmony toward all in this home, I ventured to attend the Wednesday evening meetings. I heard testimonies from all parts of the world—that made me think. I also found I did not understand the reading from the platform. It seemed like a new language—one I was not familiar with. I had never studied the Bible, and the reading from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy confirmed my opinion that it was a new language.

Being impressed by the testimonies, I decided in some way to investigate Christian Science. The statements made at the testimony meetings seemed all so vague and strange to me—so I thought it best to take one statement at a time and study it out at the reading room. I first took the statement used so many times at the Wednesday evening meetings, "I declared the truth," and I studied and read much about "truth," then on to other statements such as "realizing God was All-in-all"—and so on until at the end of three months I was completely healed, just by studying the statements that at first seemed to have no meaning. I came home to my husband a perfectly well woman, and the joy that came into our home is beyond words. This was ten years ago and I have been better, stronger, and happier than ever before.

The healing to me is very insignificant compared with the spiritual uplift and the finding out there is a God—a God who is our all, who cares for us at all times, and if we only trust Him we need have no fear. I have had many, many proofs of His loving care and guidance and when the road seemed dark and dreary and I turned to God for help He never failed me.

I am deeply grateful to God and our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for having shown us the way to know God aright, and my daily prayer is for more wisdom and love.—(Mrs.) KATHARINE MURRAY, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Availing myself of the opportunity offered in the periodicals for the giving of testimonies, I am giving below a few experiences of the many which make the life of a seeker after Truth so rich. Through the study and application of Christian Science I have been healed of a skin disease, which I had for over twenty years. The cause of the disease was believed both by my parents and the physicians to have been a cold October wind; consequently in cold and stormy weather the disease would manifest itself in its worst form. I was treated with several different remedies by the physicians, but no healing occurred and no improvement was manifested, so we soon dismissed them. Many years later, still having the old disease, I found Christian Science, and through the study of it I began to understand the unreality of sickness and disease and to realize the nature of God's purity, health, and holiness, and before I knew it there was not a trace of the old complaint; it had gone to where it came from—nothingness, and being understood as nothing it has never since appeared. Christian Science teaches me how to avail myself of God's wisdom and goodness and thus am I proving for myself that God is "a very present help in trouble." One morning on my way to work a sense of discouragement seemed to have the upper hand. I was troubled over a problem in the office which I had worked earnestly on the previous day without finding a solution, and it seemed as though all channels of information were closed. Having boarded a subway train, I opened my daily paper, The Christian Science Monitor, and read an article on the Home Forum page entitled, "The Poor Wise Man." This article was just what I needed, for it pointed out to me that "to infinite wisdom there are no problems" and "no unsolved difficulties" and further "if there ever is to be found a solution of a problem, that solution must always have existed, and there is no inherent reason why it should not be seen first rather than last."

The truth contained in the article healed me instantly, and I knew that God would give me understanding to work out my seeming problem. That day in the office all the information needed came directly into my observation and I completed my work to the satisfaction of all concerned.

This experience proved to me the truth of our beloved Leader's statement found on page 307 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "God gives you His spiritual ideas, and in turn, they give you daily supplies." I am deeply grateful to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, because she lived a life so pure and unselfed and in obedience to God, thereby being enabled to perceive the Christ, Truth, and explain him to the world.—THORBJORN JOHNSON, Brooklyn, N. Y.

With a deep sense of gratitude I give the following testimony. My son, when seven years old, became seriously ill with inflammatory rheumatism. I immediately telephoned to a distant Christian Science practitioner for help, but also called a physician, in order that the case might be diagnosed, as I feared he might have some other serious sickness. The physician stated that it was the above-mentioned sickness, and prescribed some medicine, which the child did not take. Improvement was already noticeable the next day. I thanked the physician for his trouble and told him the reason for not giving the boy the medicine. Thereupon he earnestly urged me to give it to the child, as the sickness would surely affect other parts of the body if this were not done. The medicine was, of course, put aside. The boy improved rapidly and was bright and happy the next day. He has been attending school right along.

This proof of the omnipresence of divine Love was such a wonderful experience to me that I desire only to give praise and thanks. It has greatly helped me on the straight and narrow path to understanding. I also wish to express heartfelt gratitude to Mrs. Eddy and all those who, through their knowledge and love, are always so willing to help, no matter when one may ask for assistance. I cannot imagine how I could live without Christian Science now; it is indeed a treasure which neither moth nor rust can corrupt, and I am grateful for it every day and every hour.

(Mrs.) ELSE WÄCHTER, Stettin, Pommern, Germany.

That I have much cause for gratitude for Christian Science the following account of my introduction thereto will show. On account of having what the family doctor called a delicate constitution I was always more or less ill. I tried everything in the way of medicine and foods and tonics but all to no purpose. Then I tried other means of relief and was helped for a time, but after about a year, to my great disappointment, all the old troubles returned, including sleepless nights and days of pain due to rheumatism. Then such serious symptoms set in that I was told an operation must be performed as soon as possible, but this verdict threw me into such a state of fear and weakness that the doctors were afraid to operate. Another kind of treatment was therefore tried, but at the end of two months there was no change for the better and all arrangements were made for the operation.

Just then a letter came from a Christian Scientist to whom I had written, giving me a list of practitioners. I immediately wrote back saying that it was too late because I was in the hands of doctors and was to undergo an operation within a few days, but added that if she could help to free me from the dreadful fear I had and the strong conviction that I would never come through the ordeal alive, I would be grateful. On the following Monday I received a letter saying she would help me and that though the operation seemed a very real and near thing to me, there might be no need for it by Wednesday, the day set for the operation. There was no time for further correspondence, for the doctor came twice the next day. I rested, however, in the thought that some one was helping me, although beyond that I knew nothing about Christian Science. The next morning after examining me the doctors said there was a wonderful change and they had decided not to operate. I was almost jumping out of bed with joy and excitement and immediately asked for a pad and pencil to write the good news to the practitioner, who afterwards, when the doctors were dismissed, treated me until I was stronger and able to be about.

I then, at the doctor's request, allowed him to examine me again, and his words were, "Well, it is marvelous! That manifestation has disappeared and you never need worry over it again." Years later in complying with the law I had to be examined by another doctor. A relative present told him of this former trouble and he seemed surprised and said, "Well, there is no trace whatever of it now." After such a result of Christian Science treatment I at once got the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and began the study of Christian Science. Although the understanding of it has come very slowly, I have always been helped and strengthened in every trial. As for the literature, I love every word of it and am deeply grateful for everything in connection with Christian Science.—(Miss) KATE LUFFSMANN, Bendigo, Victoria, Australia.

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I try to tell of some of the things Christian Science has done for me. For a number of years I tried different doctors and their remedies, besides every patent medicine I would see advertised. I also wore an electric belt. All of this brought only temporary relief. At this time, which was more than twenty years ago, I heard of Christian Science. I took treatment from a practitioner and was healed. My healing was rather slow but it was permanent. I was healed of a very bad case of stomach trouble, constipation, bunions and corns on my feet which were so painful I could hardly wear my shoes, and also of very great sorrow.

I rejoice greatly to know that I have been brought into a fuller understanding of the allness of God. I am certainly very grateful to all the dear Scientists who have helped me to know the truth about God and man. I have learned to love more and am still learning. I thank God that I can read and understand that He is my Life and health and strength. I am most grateful to Mrs. Eddy for showing us how to help ourselves and others, in spite of the opposition she had to contend with. I love all the literature and could not get along without it.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I send my testimony of a complete healing of inflammatory rheumatism in its worst form, through Christian Science. In the spring of 1914, my joints became swollen, causing much pain and distress. As Christian Science has been the only physician in our home for years, we asked for help from a Christian Science practitioner. I was suffering also with weakness, chills, fever, and inaction of the heart, bowels, and kidneys, and was becoming very much alarmed. The practitioner came to see me on the eighth day of June and found me helpless. After a few minutes' treatment I experienced a beautiful, painless rest, such as I had not known for days, and I knew God was my strength and my salvation, in whom I put my trust.

The pain and inflammation disappeared before the bowels and kidneys became active and as concern was expressed about those organs, the practitioner assured me that this claim would be met, as God was neither limited nor bound, but filled all space. The truth being realized, I was also freed from this discord in a few hours and in one week after the practitioner started treatments I got up and walked. I received treatments for nine days, when the healing was realized. I went to the door on the tenth day to meet a neighbor who was not a Christian Scientist and had said, "If they do not get a physician she will not last long;" also my neighbors had warned me against eating rich food, as they said it would surely cause a relapse. I ate anything I wanted without fear, as I knew that, as Mrs. Eddy says, "neither disease itself, sin, nor fear has the power to cause disease or a relapse" (Science and Health, p. 419). I was out in cold rains that autumn and have proved again that "cause does not exist in matter, in mortal mind, or in physical forms" (Science and Health, p. 262). I have had no return or any effect of the rheumatism, and walked three blocks and upstairs to the morning service, the first Sunday that July. As Mrs. Eddy says, "Every trial of our faith in God makes us stronger" (Science and Health, p. 410).

We have had other demonstrations too numerous to mention, among which are the healing of colds, fever, whooping cough, measles, and scarlet fever. Mumps were entirely overcome in about an hour, and a growth on my face of about two years' standing disappeared in a few days under Christian Science treatment. For all these blessings and many others, I am very thankful to God and to Mrs. Eddy for showing us the way to the healing truth.

(Mrs.) Elizabeth S. Stroder, Fort Morgan, Colo.

I am deeply grateful for the blessings Christian Science has brought into my experience. When I first heard of it I was held down by a sense of lack and limitation and was constantly thinking about cheaper rent and cheaper ways of living, but Christian Science has opened up to me a new life which includes all good. During this year I, like many other people, have had to keep home and children provided for through strikes and many other difficulties which would argue for the power of poverty and to human sense result in poverty, because for the last eight weeks all our usual channels of supply have been cut off. But after working the problem out in Christian Science and relying upon God for my daily needs, each mealtime has seen the table filled and each bill has been duly paid as it came along. I have also been healed of many illnesses, including bowel trouble and abnormal conditions at childbirth. Three years ago my boy, who had had a skin trouble for five years, was soon healed by Christian Science treatment, and he has had no return of the trouble.

I thank God for Christ Jesus, who brought this truth to mankind, also for Mrs. Eddy, who revealed it to this age, and I pray that I may grow in the understanding of infinite good and so glorify God in my daily life.

(Mrs.) Hilda M. Harrison, Conisbro, England.

In the year of 1900 or 1901, while my parents lived at Fort Dodge, Iowa, they became somewhat acquainted with Christian Science. Just before we became interested, while I was going barefooted in the yard, I stepped on a piece of coal, which went into my foot. My mother tried to get it out but could not. Mother's friend told us that her neighbor was a Christian Scientist, who could help in such a case. Mother did not know whether to believe her or not for none of us had heard about Christian Science. Mother asked for a treatment for my foot. The Christian Scientist gave me one treatment; out came the piece of coal, and my foot was healed. Three years ago I had kidney and bowel troubles. I tried every medicine I could get but with no relief. I again went to the Christian Science practitioner and asked her for one treatment. She gave it to me and also some Christian Science literature which I had never read before. I not only had relief from my troubles but became more acquainted with and interested in Christian Science. A little over a year ago I went to the reading rooms and got all the Christian Science literature. I also attended the lectures which were given. My parents received a number of treatments and found relief. My parents and I are very thankful for Mrs. Eddy's discovery of Christian Science and for what it has done for us.—Henry H. Gottschalk, Stanwood, Iowa.

A sincere desire to help some one else prompts me to give my testimony. Christian Science healed me over twenty years ago of a stomach disorder that all material remedies failed to relieve. I had periodical attacks of great suffering and was greatly reduced in weight. It was in this condition that I was led to try Christian Science and I was healed in a short time through the loving help of a faithful practitioner. The healing has been permanent. The physical relief from pain was all I sought then, and it was several years before I took up the earnest study of Christian Science. I have also been healed of catarrh, sore throat, severe headache.

While I am deeply grateful for the physical healings, the daily overcoming of self, impatience, anger, resentment, means much more to me, and I am trying to prove my gratitude by striving to put into practice the teachings of this truth and so reflect it by right thinking and acting that others will be led to this truth that makes free. I wish to express my gratitude for Mrs. Eddy's life, for the spiritual understanding I am gaining through the daily study of the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," for membership in The Mother Church, also of a branch church in this city.—(Mrs.) Grace Hopkins, Chicago, Ill.

It was about fifteen years ago that I had my first treatment in Christian Science. Since seven years of age I had been a continual sufferer from spinal trouble, as a result of a fall. One day after having exhausted everything else for this and other ailments, both mental and physical, I sought aid through a Christian Science practitioner. Within an hour I was relieved of the intense pain in my back and from then on I continued to seek and to be benefited.

One year after that I took up the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy and I have found it never failing when properly applied. I have been healed of gallstones, stomach trouble, and severe headaches. Several years ago I was wonderfully healed of a condition concerning which physicians said only an operation would give relief,—that of abscesses on the liver. This was my first experience of mental surgery. I am learning more and more that "to those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii), and that I cannot take a halfway position, I cannot serve God and mammon. In Science and Health we read (p. 183), "Divine Mind rightly demands man's entire obedience, affection, and strength."

The Commandments and Beatitudes were given to meet our need, showing us what to know and how to live, and in proportion to their application are we rewarded. "God is no respecter of persons,"—His great and unbounded love is for all, now. He draws very near to us in times of distress and sorrow and is a never failing Comforter. My gratitude to God is greater than I can find words to express. To Mrs. Eddy, the church, and all of the dear friends who have so faithfully and lovingly assisted me in knowing and applying this truth I am grateful. It is my prayer that I may give good as lovingly and as freely as it has been given me.

To-day while reading a certain testimony in the Sentinel, I was so filled with gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me that I was impelled to stop reading long enough to write my first testimony.

Like many others, I did not come into Christian Science for physical healing alone, but with the desire to gain a fuller and higher understanding of God and man's relation to Him. From early childhood I was a member of a denominational church, but I was not satisfied with this and withdrew with the conviction that there was something about Christianity that I did not fully understand. I read the Bible at home, but its chapters seemed so conflicting that little understanding was gained. The promise that gave me the most courage was, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."

Later when I was suffering from proud flesh in both big toes, Christian Science was presented to me by a very dear friend and I eagerly listened to the beautiful words of Truth. That very night I threw away my medicine and retired pondering the wonderful things I had heard, with the result that while dressing the next morning I found my toes perfectly healed. I have been healed of skin disease, scarlet fever, scalds, and other minor ailments. Our children have never tasted medicine and have never had any so-called diseases. Through the help of a loving and faithful practitioner one of our sons has been healed of double compound rupture. It has been proved that Christian Science is a preventive as well as a curative. When I myself had scarlet fever I cared for the twins and neither one of them got it. They also without any ill effect played with a child who had just started with whooping cough.

Words are inadequate to express my sincere gratitude for our beloved Leader who was pure and good enough to impart the truth to this world of suffering humanity. I am also grateful for our periodicals, and the loving practitioners and friends who have helped me to understand this religion of love. My desire is so to live the life of a true Christian Scientist that I may grow "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—(Mrs.) ELIZABETH E. (LONG) EVARTS, Hunlock Creek, Pa.

It is more than six years since my family took up the study of Christian Science and I would like to express my gratitude for the many healings I have had and for the wonderful protection that has been afforded. The latter means as much to me as the healings.

Through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, I was healed of stomach trouble with which I had suffered for thirty years, and of a disease which several physicians told me only an operation would cure,—a spinal trouble for which I had had homeopathic remedies and osteopathic treatments three times a week for months. Also, swollen joints, caused by chalky deposit, became normal. While the stomach trouble left me soon after beginning the study of our textbook, the others were a little slower, but all vanished without other help. With the help of a practitioner I was quickly healed of inflammatory rheumatism and influenza.

I feel that it would be ungrateful not to tell of a recent demonstration of protection. In taking from a high gas oven a shallow tin of smoking hot fat, the tin bent and deluged my thumb completely with the boiling grease, but I experienced no more unpleasant sensation than had it been cold water. This is but one of many experiences I have had of Love's protecting power, which to human sense seems supernatural, but Mrs. Eddy tells us in Science and Health (Pref. p. xi), "Now, as then, these mighty works are not supernatural, but supremely natural."

For these and the constant daily demonstration of Emmanuel (God with us) I am truly thankful, and deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, our beloved Leader, for her comprehensive exposition of the Bible; also for the authorized literature.

(Mrs.) AGNES R. ROCKWOOD, Washington, D. C.

I can testify to the above statements of my wife as being true and I might add that in three treatments I was healed of an eye trouble for which I had previously had several very painful operations. I, too, am very grateful that we were led to take up the study of Christian Science.

C. S. ROCKWOOD.

I took up the study of Christian Science for release from a very critical condition of the eyes, which the best oculists in the city had failed to relieve. I had many other ailments, but at first thought only of this alarming trouble. In a few months' study, I experienced great relief from this condition. I then began to try to free myself from other ills, which were chronic stomach trouble of many years' standing, and the ills and weaknesses supposed to be the result of motherhood; but they held their places like stone walls, or rather like rubber walls, for though they seemed to yield a little sometimes, they returned to their old stands. Little progress was made until I began to see that I needed to get rid of infidelity, criticism, envy, and the other fruits of the flesh named in Galatians V; that it was not so much the physical ills I had endured that had taken my strength and were burdening me, as the self-pity and resentment I was harboring.

This discovery of what the trouble was and how to get rid of it came to me slowly. Sometimes a little light would come from a Wednesday evening testimony; again a sentence or an article in the periodicals, describing some one's struggles, would help a little; always the public lectures gave me more light. I studied the Christian Science textbook consistently, and honestly tried to take its medicine, bitter as it sometimes seemed, and all of it with much falling down and getting up to try again. I am boundlessly grateful that I held on, for to-day my mental attitude is normal and I therefore enjoy normal health. How much I suffered and how long I worked before the fetters of human will began to yield a little! I am still on guard against human will, for this must go on till, in the words of the psalmist, we "awake, with thy likeness."

I have also been healed of an unreasoning prejudice against Mrs. Eddy. I now have for her and her work a deeper regard than I know how to begin to express, and the mention of her name arouses gratitude and joy and peace. I wish I could express the measure of my release from bondage mentally, hence physically, and the confidence and courage that are mine, so that others might have their courage renewed to continue to seek the understanding of God and His creation, which understanding is indeed the key to the kingdom.—(Mrs.) NANCY E. WHITE, Omaha, Neb.

Signs of the Times

[Chicago American]

The Christianity of to-day is a failure only so far as we fail or refuse to accept and apply its principles to daily life and our relations one with the other. What the world needs is a convincing argument that it would be better off if right were the determining factor in all human relations. The minute a man concludes that justice and decency are profitable, so soon will he be just and decent. The thing to do then is to make justice and decency profitable. That cannot be done with war. It cannot be done by bowing down to and worshiping the individual who has grown rich on the want or suffering of others. It cannot be done by applauding and elevating greed, which never loves its neighbor as itself. Christianity is a state of mind. It is an attitude of soul. That one chooses not to adopt and apply it—if the whole world chooses to ignore it and its teachings—does not and cannot affect either its reality or its potency. Jesus did not think Christianity was a failure, and the unresponsiveness of the people did not discourage him. No more should it discourage those who are seeking to foster and promote it now.

[The York (Neb.) Republican]

We have never been able to understand why the church accepted half of the Master's commission and flung the other half away. His command to preach the gospel is no more imperative than his command to heal the sick. He himself preached and healed. His early disciples, following his example, taught and healed for two centuries with uninterrupted success both in making the hearts of men better and their bodies healthier. Now in these days other Christians, attempting to follow in the footsteps of the great Teacher, have recognized his robe of authority as an indivisible garment, and they think when he commanded to heal the sick, he was speaking to his time and all others with as authoritative a voice as when he said "preach the gospel." If the Christian church will accept the commands of their founder in their entirety and strive at this belated hour not only to save the souls of men but also to quiet their fears, reduce their ills, and bring health to their bodies, the long hoped for day of the church universal will, in our humble judgment, have dawned.

[Los Angeles (Calif.) Times]

The decision of a California court that pupils in the schools cannot be forced to submit to medical examinations against the wishes of their parents, is important as indicating a desire to free the educational institutions from any suspected control by any group of physicians. There was a suspicion that if the regulars had their way the schools would be doctored to a fare-ye-well. A great many errors have been committed under the banner of "Safety first."

[Arthur T. Morey in The Commonwealther, St. Louis, Mo.]

He is not richest who has the most money, nor is he poorest who has the least of material things. He is wealthiest who thinks nearest to the truth, serves best, and has the most love for his fellow man. When men stand face to face and understand each other, the idle and ignorant prattle about the difference between men who labor with their minds or labor with their hands will cease. Brotherhood will make them see both are kin, for each has the same aspirations: to each the love and laughter of little children is the same; they each seek a home, loved ones, education, enough to eat and wear, a few friends, and reasonable pleasure. It is no more a table because made of mahogany instead of pine and is no less a home because made of wood instead of stone. Equal may be the pity for the man of overwealth as for the man of underwealth. The heaviest heart may ride in the biggest automobile, and the lightest heart may be inside of overalls. The only true measure of any man is in his measure of service, and the extent to which he loves truth and justice.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

A FRIEND of mine has recently sent me a few copies of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, and I cannot resist the temptation of writing to you and saying that your paper is unquestionably without a peer in the field of American journalism. In my work as an instructor in Oriental Politics, and also in Eastern European Politics here at the State University, I have found your journal to be a valuable guide and a trustworthy friend. Every copy of the MONITOR, so far as I have seen, should be preserved for future reference as an encyclopedia of world politics.

I WANT to thank you most warmly and sincerely for all the fine inspiration which has come to me through reading THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. Its pages are full of valuable information. Above all, the splendid courage, truth, and straightforwardness with which all questions of the day are set forth, are indeed most wholesome and make it an ideal newspaper in the real sense of the word. We cannot estimate the value to humanity at the present time its pages unfold.

I WOULD like to express my grateful thanks for such a newspaper. It has been my privilege to have it since the first issue. I would not be without it. It is a daily feast of good things—good, truthful, reliable news, as an education in itself along all lines of thought. How could it be otherwise when our Leader has said in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 353), "The object of the MONITOR is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." And so the MONITOR gives out its message of blessing to all the world.

VOLUME XXII MAY 22, 1920 NUMBER 38

The Danger of Deviation

CAMPBELL MAC CULLOCH

NOT long since, the writer observed a passage in our text-book that seemed strangely unfamiliar, and some time was spent in contemplation of it. At first the argument appeared that the passage in question had merely been mentally set aside; that it was known perfectly well, but that the need for its use of late had not been apparent. A little honest analysis showed very quickly that this argument would not hold water, for the passage was of the utmost importance. The plain fact was that it had quietly dropped out of sight, submerging almost imperceptibly in the waters of material thinking, and so had become no longer a part of the daily work. Now quite obviously this was no mere accident, but on the contrary pointed most definitely and directly to a deliberate effort at obscuration. It was quite plainly the operation of "another law," or false belief of law of which Paul speaks in the seventh chapter of Romans, when he refers to his discovery of the contrary force that is operating in him against the law of his mind. It was also plain that something of this very sort must have been in Jesus' mind when he cautioned his followers that they should watch that they entered not into temptation.

Jesus' recognition of the human tendency to stray from the straight and narrow mental path was evidently due to his clear understanding that error stands for nullification at all times; that it is the contrary statement to the spiritual declaration of self-existence; that the operation of mortal mind is always destructive and never constructive; that it aims always at divergence and never convergence; in fact, that it is, in a single phrase, essentially an effort at the prevention of true accomplishment. A study of Jesus' teachings makes it clear that their burden was that described by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 186: "Evil is a negation, because it is the absence of truth. It is nothing, because it is the absence of something."

It became plain, then, that the attempt of mortal thinking was to blur the spiritual lines, and hence gradually to eliminate accuracy in every direction; and then came to mind an occurrence of some years previous, when a famous engineer engaged in constructing tunnels beneath the Hudson River at New York invited the writer to witness the operation known as "holing through" the first of these tunnels. It perhaps is necessary to explain that the work was being carried forward from opposite shores of the river at the same time, the object being to have the two borings meet accurately in the center, some hundred feet or so below the surface of the stream. A five-foot partition of the rock had been left separating the two borings as they had approached each other, and this was to be blown out by a charge of dynamite, giving continuous passage from one side to the other for the first time. The two borings must meet accurately, the engineer explained. The deviation of even a fraction of an inch at the beginning of the work would, if allowed to persist, throw the whole construction out of true, and, gradually increasing the angle of error, make it possible for the two borings to pass each other by instead of meeting, thus rendering the whole work futile.

The engineer went on to explain that in order to prevent such an unfortunate occurrence the engineers each day took their instruments and made a practice of "running their lines" anew, thus not only checking up their own calculations, but also correcting any errors of direction the drillers might have made in the preceding twenty-four hours. In this way the work was kept true and strictly in accordance with the original plans. It was shown that a deviation of one quarter of an inch in the first foot of boring would produce an error of over twenty feet at the end of the first three hundred yards of tunneling,—quite sufficient indeed to ruin the entire work and make abortive the object aimed at.

When the smoke of the final blast of dynamite that split the remaining partition away had blown aside, and the jagged edges of the hole were chipped off, the tunnel halves were found to meet within five-eighths of an inch, a sincere testimony to the accuracy with which the work had been carried on deep down in the living rock, with each force of men hidden from the other. Three other tunnels were completed within the next four months or so, and all arrived at an equally satisfactory conclusion, with the result that today millions of persons are annually carried safely and comfortably beneath the great river.

When this recollection came to mind, there came with it some perception of our Leader's great wisdom in providing regular checks against the errors that might conceivably creep into the work of both church and individual. The Manual of The Mother Church, together with all of Mrs. Eddy's other works, provides a sure remedy and provision against error of every kind, both in organization and individual, if it be diligently studied and understood. As but one example, it is conceivable that a distant, and perhaps solitary, church community might, through belief in Paul's other or false sense of law, stray slightly from the strict letter and spirit of Christian Science, and that this divergence might be as gradual and imperceptible as the growth of the error in the tunnel, and if left uncorrected, just as fatal. Fortunately, however, there lies in the provisions of the Manual ample opportunity—and necessity—for making the correction, for running anew the spiritual lines. For instance, the Manual requires that each church shall call on the Board of Lectureship for at least one lecture annually; it makes it clear that the duty and privilege of every member of The Mother Church is to support and read the Christian Science periodicals; that there is a daily prayer to be observed; that in the reading in churches there shall exist no doubt as to the authenticity of the writings used there, and that in all these ways, and many others which the diligent student of the Manual may discover for himself, both individual and church are kept in constant communication with divine Principle, which governs the activities of The Mother Church. Obedience to these rules is indispensable, and by thus running our lines will we guard against those deviations likely to set us astray.

It should be borne in mind, however, that the existence of the provisions themselves will be insufficient unless there is that activity that makes use of them. We should not admit that there is a law of obscuration present as a contingency, always ready to rob us of the result of our labor, but should negative such claims. There is law and safeguard in plenty, there is provision against error, and provision of the most perfect kind, but unless there is also that vital virtue of obedience to vivify our work; unless there is wholehearted compliance with provisions of the Manual or teachings of the textbook and Mrs. Eddy's other writings, that illustrate the spiritual law, there will be absent that final result that testifies to demonstrable understanding. In the Manual of The Mother Church Mrs. Eddy says under the note "Alertness to Duty" (Art. VIII, Sect. 6), "It shall be the duty of every member of this Church to defend himself daily against aggressive mental suggestion, and not be made to forget nor to neglect his duty to God, to his Leader, and to mankind. By his works he shall be judged,—and justified or condemned."

Overcoming Error

THE beginner in the study of Christian Science, who is desirous of helping himself rather than depending wholly on the ministrations of a practitioner, will be found to devote himself earnestly to the textbook for relief when confronted by any physical problem. Ofttimes such a one will say, however, if asked how he works out his problem: "I do not know how to work. I just read." Very often the practitioner of Christian Science is asked the question: "How does one go about it to give one's self a treatment in Christian Science? I do not know how to work for myself."

Jesus answered this question most simply when he said, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Any discordant condition is bondage, and mankind naturally wishes to be free. Christian Science teaches that discord is not true, and because of its being untrue Jesus said that knowing the truth would bring freedom from discord. It is the right of God's child to see as God sees, and the Scriptures tell us that God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil." It follows, then, that when mortals see (or feel) pain or discord they are not seeing as God sees and therefore not seeing truly. So it becomes necessary for them to turn from the discord and see as God sees,—see truly, or know the truth, to be free. Now, the truth about any discordant condition or situation is that right where the physical senses say there is inharmony, there is the presence and activity of good, of God, since He is all-inclusive. To relieve the situation, then, this truth must be known or realized.

Knowing the truth earnestly enough about any untoward condition, removes the seeming reality of the discord, —just as waking from a dream in sleep establishes for one the waking experience instead of the dream. After one wakens from a sleeping dream he does not allow himself to go back to it to the extent of believing that it is true. The writer heard one say recently on awaking from an unpleasant dream, "My, but I'm glad I don't owe that thousand dollars I dreamed I owed." Likewise, we should not, after knowing the truth about a condition of inharmony, allow ourselves to contemplate the seeming error again, if we would stay awake and solve our problem. Rather should we so fill our thought with reality—as did the one who wakened to find that he was not in debt—that there would be no place in it for reviewing the error we wish to correct. This steadfast rejoicing in the truth is what the Scriptures refer to when they say, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." Having done all, of course, includes knowing the truth so thoroughly as to cast out all fear. Naturally, knowing thoroughly the truth about the all-power and the all-presence of a God who is Love, will remove fear and establish rejoicing. Then, one must not for an instant look back to the dream. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 14), "Become conscious for a single moment that Life and intelligence are purely spiritual,—neither in nor of matter,—and the body will then utter no complaints."

The beginner in the study of Christian Science need not feel that "treating" is complicated. He has but to know that consciousness is full of the truth about God and man, and to know this truth and to stand firmly in knowing it whenever a sense of discord presents itself. Of course the more he reads and studies, the more of truth he will have at his command with which to meet and master difficulties. He need not fear that his knowledge is insufficient, for Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 449), "A grain of Christian Science does wonders for mortals, so omnipotent is Truth." In thus solving his first problems with the "grain" of truth, he prepares himself to meet the next situation in his progress, for Mrs. Eddy concludes the sentence above referred to by saying, "but more of Christian Science must be gained in order to continue in well doing."

"The root of all evil"

VIVIAN W. WHITMAN

MOST students of what is termed human nature soon arrive at the conclusion of Paul, who states, in I Timothy, that "the love of money is the root of all evil." Paul did not err, as might a more superficial reasoner, and charge that money, in itself only a convenient symbol for service, is the source of evil; he goes straight to the point and makes plain that the evil lies in the love of money. This root of all evil is among the plants which our heavenly Father has not planted, and which must be uprooted wherever found. Where its purpose is suited, this vice can assume the cloak of virtue, and pose with much sanctimony as thrift. It seeks to defraud under the innocent title of business acumen, and often deludes its victim into living for years in the midst of poverty and discomfort, with the idea of "laying up for a rainy day," whereas a rainy day, if inevitable, might be preferable to years of murky fog.

Workers in Christian Science find this root of evil seeking to obstruct the line of every activity. It is interesting, for example, to note the various excuses accepted by prosperous Christian Scientists as good and sufficient to exempt one from subscribing to all the Christian Science periodicals. The observer marvels to trace this tiny root through its peculiar and often amusing evolutions. No one else, perhaps, has quite the same view of the root in all its bald ugliness as has the practitioner. On coming to Christian Science for healing, the first question a person sometimes asks is, "Why should a practitioner be paid?" The beginner is, as he supposes, quite properly shocked that one should accept money for a prayer. For generations, people have, often reluctantly, paid the family doctor, and, still more hesitatingly, produced the price of material existence for the minister. The Christian Science practitioner, occupying in part the place of both, may thus seem in the position to receive the force of a double reluctance to exchange carnal gifts for spiritual, as Paul phrases it.

Why should any one be paid for work? Jeremiah tells us, "Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work." Most people will admit that work should be paid for, but some are inclined to differ with the worker as to what constitutes work. The farmer will admit that plowing is work and should be well rewarded, but to him an editor is an idler who accepts his hard earned dollars merely for sitting in a swivel chair and writing a little at convenient times. On the other hand, the editor knows the full value of mental work, but may be rather inclined to think plowing a pleasant form of outdoor exercise, and not worth much of any one's money. Both editor and farmer, if they decide to "try" Christian Science, are very likely to agree that it is "unchristian" for the practitioner to accept pay. Is not he or she doing God's work? Assuredly. All good work is God's work, and as such is rewarded. Since God is just, and does reward all good work, the honest worker has nothing to lose; but the beneficiary of the work has much to lose in failing to manifest practical gratitude for the work done. Honesty which goes deeper than policy is never content to accept the time and effort of another without making an equitable return.

It sometimes happens that those who say, with an engaging air of open-mindedness, that they are willing to "try" Christian Science, actually mean that they are willing to accept a healing through a practitioner, if they may receive it without giving up a single opinion, custom, or superstition, a single sin, or a single dollar. Willingness to "try anything once" is not so commendable as it sounds, since one restricted by a conscience will not try "anything." When such a case fails to receive all in return for nothing, the debt may be forgiven, but this does not mean that it is not paid. Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 10 of Science and Health: "Seeking is not sufficient. It is striving that enables us to enter." All must eventually learn this; and the striving of another for us, while we hold fast to our idols, may not be effective.

Ego looms large in such cases, and the self-appointed judge who is "trying" Christian Science usually regards himself as only one, whereas to the busy worker he is one of many. In reality neither patient nor practitioner is "trying" Christian Science, but both are being tried before the one Judge of all the earth. And the worker recalls the fact that with much fruitful soil to be tilled it is folly to scatter seed in stony ground.

Often experience is necessary to curb the zeal for good works which would rush in where angels fear to tread. The spiritual insight which prevented Jesus the Christ from casting pearls in Nazareth, where he soon saw he could not do many mighty works "because of their unbelief," and which enabled Paul, "stedfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed," to heal the man lame from birth, may be acquired finally by all.

Practitioners who are tempted to discouragement in meeting the effects of this age-old suggestion of the serpent, that one may deceive Principle and obtain something for nothing—reap where one has not sown—have but to read the ninth chapter of I Corinthians, to see that Paul had the same arguments of greed to meet. And doubtless those were present to condemn our Master when, as we are told in Luke, "certain women, which had been healed . . . ministered unto him of their substance." All who deal daily with this root of all evil need to stand fast in Truth that they themselves be not overcome. Practitioners should read often the rule in the Manual of The Mother Church which states: "A member of The Mother Church shall not, under pardonable circumstances, sue his patient for recovery of payment for said member's practice, on penalty of discipline and liability to have his name removed from membership. Also he shall reasonably reduce his price in chronic cases of recovery, and in cases where he has not effected a cure. A Christian Scientist is a humanitarian; he is benevolent, forgiving, long-suffering, and seeks to overcome evil with good."

Neither one who seeks healing through spiritual channels nor one who aspires to be such a channel can afford to be less than honest. With what measure we mete, it shall be meted unto us. God's law is just, and the error which seeks to keep back the purchase price of desired good cannot enter into His presence. For perfect fruits in spiritual healing, both patient and practitioner should realize the truth of Mrs. Eddy's clear statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 453): "Honesty is spiritual power. Dishonesty is human weakness, which forfeits divine help."

"Come forth"

ANNE H. THOMAS

THE command, "Come forth," is as imperative to-day as when given by Jesus, the master Metaphysician, to Lazarus; for is not the so-called Christian world of to-day mentally bound by the graveclothes of materiality—the belief of life, substance, and intelligence apart from God, and in matter—as surely as was Lazarus physically bound by the graveclothes of his day? The greatest bondage from which Lazarus needed to "come forth" was not apparent to those around him, for it was their belief in the reality of death by which he was bound, and to which Jesus referred when he said, "Loose him, and let him go."

In "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 2) Mrs. Eddy says: "Healing physical sickness is the smallest part of Christian Science. It is only the bugle-call to thought and action, in the higher range of infinite goodness." The bugle call of Christian Science to the world to-day is, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead," "come forth" from the belief of a power apart from God, from the subtle arguments and suggestions of the carnal mind, and awaken to your true being as the son of God. As a result of the teachings of Christian Science, mortals are awakening to the bondage which obedience to the carnal mind, to false appetites and passions, to "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," imposes. Is not prohibition an illustration of an awakening, or coming forth, from false appetite, from the lust of the flesh, from one of the beliefs of pleasure in matter, and is it not far more significant, much farther reaching than the mere refraining from the use of intoxicants would indicate? In its larger sense prohibition is the result of purification, the spiritualization of thought due to the activity of good in the world to-day, in the individual or so-called human consciousness. In the words of Paul, it is putting off the old man and his deeds and letting that Mind be in us which was also in Christ Jesus.

Jesus' mission was not finished when he raised the dead. He had yet to "come forth" from the world's belief in life apart from God, and prove for all time and all peoples the unreality of death. His raising the dead through the understanding of God as Life was but another step toward his next demonstration, known as the resurrection, which was followed by his final demonstration, which has been called the ascension. Jesus' whole human experience was that of hourly having part in the ascension, for was he not with each overcoming of sin, sickness, and death, for those around him, rising in the scale of being—his conscious at-one-ment with God? None but he knew that his work was not finished with the healing of the sick, the raising of the dead, and the resurrection of his own material body; for he said to Mary, on the morning of his resurrection, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."

Christian Science is teaching us to-day, as Jesus taught his disciples, that every spiritual or right idea perceived is ours now by right of man's sonship with God, and is the coming forth from the bondage of its supposititious opposite,—a false belief. It is having part in the resurrection, as was Jesus throughout his whole earthly mission, even unto the ascension, his immaculate perception of Truth.

Right Thinking

FLORENCE C. SAVAGE

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE teaches man to recognize conditions as states of thought. In Psalms we read, "He sent his word, and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions." A word is an expression of thought, the means whereby an idea is made known or recognized in consciousness. Then the word of God which came with healing was a manifestation of the active divine Mind, bringing the blessing which is always proceeding from the abundance of infinite Love. Christian Science also teaches that man reflects God. Since this is so, the only right activity of any man is the expression of spiritual understanding, which inevitably brings joy, comfort, and a sense of harmony to all who come within the focal distance of the right thinker.

Ruskin writes, "Every right action and true thought sets the seal of its beauty on person and face." This is readily admitted to be true, for how often we judge rightly of a person's admirable mental qualities by the countenance, the refined bearing, the calm and confident poise which is the heritage of those who dwell in "the secret place of the most High," the consciousness of good. Is it not just as true that the reverse of right thinking,—namely, a wrong conception of the universe including man, a false belief concerning the nature of God, investing Him with the desire and power to do evil as well as good,—would result in bringing forth undesirable and unlovely manifestations upon person and face? Would not this easily account for inharmonious conditions of mind and body and would not the remedy consist in an exactly opposite method of thinking?

Mrs. Eddy has given the cure for human ills and the manner of release from bondage to sin and sickness in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 341) where she says, "First purify thought, then put thought into words, and words into deeds; and after much slipping and clambering, you will go up the scale of Science to the second rule, and be made ruler over many things."

In Scripture we read, "For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end." The Revised Version gives it, "to give you hope in your latter end." What does humanity hope for more than deliverance from all the varied forms of evil which are constantly striving to appear and which we know to be simply the manifestations of wrong thinking, endeavoring to gain a hold in human consciousness and to hide from men the peace which comes when a man thinks with God?

Then let us know that consciousness is filled with the truth,—"thoughts of peace and not of evil,"—that we may bless our fellow men, that the light of His countenance may be seen upon ours. Let us refuse entrance to any suggestion that is unlike good and thus by purifying thought we may follow Paul's admonition to the Corinthians, "Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

"Every valley shall be exalted"

LOUIS LONGSTRETH MOORE

IN the book of Isaiah it is written, "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." To many the old theological presentation of this prophecy has given a story which was either incomprehensible to the untutored thought or else suggested only the vision of a geological cataclysm. In any event it presented a great material upheaval in order that "the glory of the Lord" might be revealed and that mankind should witness the spectacle.

The purpose of this did not clearly appear, for "the glory of the Lord" seemed already so wonderfully manifested in every direction where the eye could rest upon fertile field, or wooded dell, or foam flecked sea; even these mountains and hills and valleys, with their majesty and verdure, seemed already to be revealing God's glory. So the one hungering and thirsting after righteousness perhaps looked away from this picture, feeling that the prophecy must be true, but surely, as Job had put it, God "doeth great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number."

When such a one turns to Christian Science for a clearer understanding of God, and studies the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, there is presented a different and more wonderful picture. He reads in Science and Health, "Divine Science, rising above physical theories, excludes matter, resolves things into thoughts, and replaces the objects of material sense with spiritual ideas" (p. 123). Therefore, fortified with a clearer insight into the spiritual meaning of the Scriptures, he joyously turns back to Isaiah's words, not as to a threat of some impending upheaval, but as to a glorious promise of that which is to be accomplished for him as he puts down those things which do not glorify God. He sees that as mortal mind is brought under subjection, every valley of love and kindness and purity shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill of egotism, pride, and self-righteousness shall be made low, and the crooked sensitiveness to evil influences, selfishness, deception, shall be made straight and the rough places of ingratitude, injustice, impatience, plain. When this has been accomplished in his thinking, through the operation of divine Love, what will be the result? "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed" in daily living and activity, "and all flesh shall see it together;" he will be a living witness that "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

How grateful we should be to that divinely inspired, loving, lovable woman, Mary Baker Eddy, who, through unremitting years of sanctified endeavor, discovered and gave to us Christian Science, which has revealed the spiritual import of the Scriptures and enlarged our understanding so that we may now "see, and know, and consider" the blessed promises of divine Love, which are ever present, waiting to be fulfilled to our apprehension. With the understanding of divine Science, the Scriptures become our guide and chart and we can claim our birthright as children of the loving Father-Mother, possessing only that which was created by God and knowing that He created and pronounced "very good" all that really is.

With this understanding, or demonstrable knowledge, we can rest confidently in the assurance that we cannot be touched by "any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie," if we will but put our trust in God and realize the fact that "in him we live, and move, and have our being."

The Time Is Come

TAYLORA K. JONES

TWO statements of our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, on the opening page of the Preface to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," are: "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings," and, "The time for thinkers has come." These statements afford simple enlightenment to those seeking Truth. The sick, the sinner, the discouraged, and the pessimist, find material ways and means of no avail in this war of Armageddon. The desire to know something demonstrable of God, awakens thought. Then like little children they are turned to divine Love and begin to learn what Life is as revealed through Christian Science. When one begins to think, one begins to analyze; and to analyze is to test,—for all that is learned about God in Christian Science can always be proved to one's perfect satisfaction, and brings joy and peace and never ending gratitude.

The two statements referred to are helpful in understanding the definition of Church which Mrs. Eddy gives us on page 583 of Science and Health. As we lean on "the sustaining infinite," we understand "the structure of Truth and Love; whatever rests upon and proceeds from divine Principle." Of course this structure can mean none else than divine consciousness manifest, which the only man there is must ever reflect. This right reasoning begins to destroy wrong thoughts. No headway can be made in trying to put new wine into old bottles. For good and evil to go hand in hand in this process of purification is an impossibility. "To begin rightly is to end rightly," our Leader tells us on page 262 of Science and Health. Always by keeping before us the unchanging and ever present truth that God is good only, and man His perfect reflection, we experience the blessings which come to us through comprehending the true meaning of "leaning on the sustaining infinite" and "the structure of Truth and Love; whatever rests upon and proceeds from divine Principle." Truly this is Life eternal.

There Is No Death

GRACE A. BOUGHTON-LEIGH

THERE is no death. When standing in the light
We lose the seeming shadowland around;
There it is always day, there is no night;
For Life and Love forever there abound.

There is no death. God's universe is one;
There is no world outside the perfect Mind.
'Tis but the shadow of an earthly sun
That makes its darkness seem to be mankind.

Selected Articles

["Fasting and Healing"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., March 30, 1920]

The world continually attempts to smother spiritual things in materiality and formalism. So it is with the experiences called fasting and the resurrection. Fasting cannot be restricted to forty days or to any particular kind of abstinence. And the resurrection must be participated in by every human being every moment of every hour until he has in truth risen from the dead beliefs of material existence. Then there will be found what always has been the only reality, the divine Mind and its expression. The resurrection is here and now for every man. When Martha at the grave of Lazarus would have postponed the rising from the dead until the "last day," Jesus corrected her and said, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." The Master, of course, was here referring to the ever-present Christ, the activity of divine Principle. With this understanding of the truth about real existence, Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead; that is, from his false belief in death as an actuality. Every one must be lifted above any belief of a power opposed to God. All must relinquish the sense of any being besides the eternal consciousness and its forever living reflection.

Jesus at the tomb was thus truly fasting. He abstained completely from all trust in matter as real, so that it could not impose upon him any assertion of a dead Lazarus. He totally surrendered every sense of material dying, just as he fasted, or gave up any sense of his own death on the cross, and brought about the resurrection. And in the same way, and with just as wonderful results, did Jesus fast from all other forms of the belief of matter. He gave no credence to them at all. All that meant anything to him was eternal Principle, or God, whom he knew to be the omnipotent creator of the true, spiritual man. This sort of fasting was revolutionary, but was no more of an innovation in his day, and was no more resisted by the flesh, than now. Mrs. Eddy writes of this on pages 52 and 53 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "The bigot, the debauchee, the hypocrite, called Jesus a glutton and a winebibber. They said: 'He casteth out devils through Beelzebub,' and is the 'friend of publicans and sinners.' The latter accusation was true, but not in their meaning. Jesus was no ascetic. He did not fast as did the Baptist's disciples; yet there never lived a man so far removed from appetites and passions as the Nazarene."

A fasting is an elimination of something. The eternal allness and oneness of Mind and its idea is the permanent elimination of all belief in matter as real. The world must acknowledge this verity and come to it. And in coming to its acknowledgment and the practicing of the truth contained in it, the true fasting will unfold to mankind increasingly and continuously. Withdrawing from the world, abstinence from passions and appetites, and the turning to God in greater measure will not then be a matter of forty days out of three hundred and sixty-five, but will be a matter of every moment throughout every man's career, until he has reached the point where, for him, the world and "all that is in the world" vanishes and the only substantial and true is found to be eternal Soul and its reflection.

From this it is easily seen that fasting in this human sense of things must be a man's turning to Principle as his only joy and desire. He thus gives up all belief in happiness in material things, such as false appetites and pleasures.

It is only too true that according to the world's concept of abstinence, a man may stop various indulgences for a month or so, while at the same time permitting evil full play in his thoughts. This, of course, constitutes a travesty upon fasting. In Science and Health is found a discussion of this very thing, and in that book Mrs. Eddy says (p. 597): "The Judaic religion consisted mostly of rites and ceremonies. The motives and affections of a man were of little value, if only he appeared unto men to fast. The great Nazarene, as meek as he was mighty, rebuked the hypocrisy, which offered long petitions for blessings upon material methods, but cloaked the crime, latent in thought, which was ready to spring into action and crucify God's anointed."

All this does not mean that there is no period set apart for seeking after spirituality. Throughout all eternity the real man, the likeness of Mind, is seeking and finding immortal perfection. God's man is faultless and is perpetually separated from all belief in materiality, purely because there is nothing beyond all-inclusive good. Hence Principle and its perpetual activity go on forever. The modern formal observance of a period of abstinence is said to be based on the Bible passages recording the forty days of fasting by Moses, Elijah, and Christ Jesus. But does the world remember what resulted from these three different "forty days"? After Moses had "fasted" he gave to the children of Israel the Ten Commandments and "his face shone." Following the "fast" of Elijah, he had revealed to him that God was not in the wind, or the earthquake, or the fire, but in the "still small voice;" in other words, that omnipotent power is not matter but divine intelligence manifested, and that material things are in reality nonexistent. As a result of this spiritual understanding which unfolded to him, he escaped the sword of Jezebel. And in the case of Christ Jesus, immediately after his "fast" he overcame the promptings of material sense, called the devil, and healed "all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatick, and those that had the palsy." Clearly, the basis of the fast of all three of these men was the truth that matter and discordant conditions were nonexistent. And that is the issue before the world to-day. Every man must take up his cross and abstain in every hour from any belief of a suppositional opposite of the immortal consciousness and its pure idea, which is all there really is.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Wiltshire Advertiser, Devizes, England]

Our critic is mistaken in thinking that Christian Science has anything to do with so-called material science. It is, as its name implies, Christian knowledge or science. He will no doubt agree with the statement universally accepted that "like produces like." He will also acknowledge that God is Spirit; therefore, to be logical, he must agree that the offspring of Spirit must be spiritual.

The first chapter of Genesis certainly declares that all that God created is "very good," but it does not imply that this creation is material. On the contrary, it must be spiritual, for man is therein mentioned as made in the image and likeness of God, Spirit. By no conceivable means can the image and likeness of Spirit be made of Spirit's opposite, matter. It would be as impossible as to make flames of frost.

The Scriptures are emphatic in this declaration that the material world is only a temporal phenomenon and must pass away. John says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." Could anything be plainer than this in showing that God is not the author of the material condition of things. The eternal nature of God's creation is brought out in Ecclesiastes, "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it."

Christian Science teaches the eternal and spiritual nature of all that proceeds from God, and the temporal and material nature of all that appears real to the physical senses. Jesus' spiritual understanding enabled him to control the belief that matter was substance, and instantaneously to overcome its discordant conditions.

[C. W. Hale in The Tipton (Ind.) Times]

Christian Science is based upon a demonstrable spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures, an interpretation that proves the Bible to be wholly consistent and logical, and enables the student to prove the law of God as given therein as Christ Jesus did and commanded his followers to do.

In the effort to explain "mental healing" and "spiritual healing" a critic has given the impression that Christian Science healing is accomplished through some occult process of the human mind, or "strong and continued suggestion." This is wholly wrong, and it should be understood definitely and positively that the power of human will does not enter into the practice or teachings of Christian Science. Suggestion, hypnotism, mesmerism, and all other occult processes of the human mind are dangerous and undesirable. Their influence is wholly bad, and places unsuspecting people at the mercy of selfish and evil manipulations and influences.

This is confirmed by the statement of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, on page 445 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Christian Science silences human will, quiets fear with Truth and Love, and illustrates the unlabored motion of the divine energy in healing the sick. Self-seeking, envy, passion, pride, hatred, and revenge are cast out by the divine Mind which heals disease. The human will which maketh and worketh a lie, hiding the divine Principle of harmony, is destructive to health, and is the cause of disease rather than its cure."

Christian Science teaches that spiritual healing is accomplished through the power of God, infinite, divine Mind. It teaches and proves man's relation to God, and that God, the one eternal power, governs, guides, and controls man, giving to him peace, harmony, and health. So in Christian Science it is positively demonstrated that sin and sickness were not created by God, but are the manifestations of a supposititious consciousness apart from God, and that the regenerating influence of a pure, clear realization of God's love and ever presence and man's coexistence with God brings as a necessary and inevitable consequence deliverance from all evil, sin, disease, and death.

In answer to the assertion that Christian Scientists do not believe in the deity of Jesus, Christian Science teaches that Christ Jesus himself made it perfectly plain that he was not God, and no one needs any clearer statement than he made when he rebuked the young ruler. This is still further emphasized in the following: "Then cried Jesus in the temple as he taught, saying, Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of myself, but he that sent me is true, whom ye know not. But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me." "Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me."

Christian Science accepts unreservedly the teachings of the Bible and does not deny the atonement of Christ Jesus. It gives to mankind the highest and holiest sense of what the atonement is, and proves its teaching by practical demonstration in the healing of sickness and the overcoming of sin. Christian Science teaches that the mission of Christ Jesus was to reveal and prove the love of God to man, and to demonstrate the way out of sinful beliefs into man's rightful heritage as "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." Christ Jesus showed to mankind the real relationship of God to man, and demonstrated the atonement, man's at-one-ment or unity with God, and consequently his dominion over all phases of false beliefs and everything that would claim to separate him from God.

Mrs. Eddy makes this clear on page 37 of her book, "No and Yes," where she has given the following: "The spiritual interpretation of the vicarious atonement of Jesus, in Christian Science, unfolds the full-orbed glory of that event; but to regard this wonder of glory, this most marvelous demonstration, as a personal and material blood-giving—or as a proof that sin is known to the divine Mind, and that what is unlike God demands His continual presence, knowledge, and power, to meet and master it—would make the atonement to be less than the at-one-ment, whereby the work of Jesus would lose its efficacy and lack the 'signs following.'"

Christian Science has come into the lives of multitudes of intelligent people, fully capable of understanding and proving its teachings, and to these people it has brought a broader and more wholesome conception of life, a deeper sense of brotherly love, a clearer and purer concept of God and His relation to man, and an abundant realization of man's birthright of health, happiness, and peace.

One of the correspondents who has written criticizing Christian Science, desires Scriptural authority for the teaching that Jesus is not God. This is amply afforded by Christ Jesus' own words. When the young man came to him, addressing him as "Good Master," Jesus replied: "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God." If Jesus, or Christ, were God, the Master would not have spoken as he did. Christ Jesus was simply enabling the young man to understand that God is infinite good, and that the Christ is the manifestation of God's goodness.

Upon another occasion when the Jews were stoning him, the Master asked why they did so, and they answered: "For blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God." In reply, Jesus did not deny that he was a man, but he corrected them on the other point. These were his words: "I said, I am the Son of God." His words clearly show that he did not claim to be God. They also show that he saw the need of correcting their misstatement in regard to this vital point. Christian Scientists believe that Christ Jesus knew best who he was. They accept his own unmistakable teaching as to his identity; especially, too, since the understanding of this fact is the basis of the Christ-healing restored in Christian Science. His words, "I and my Father are one," are in perfect harmony with his specific teaching that he was not God. These words simply mean: I and my Father are at one, in unity. Thus he signified the inseparability of the Christ from God, just as the rays of light are inseparable from the sun, and manifest the sun's brightness, although the rays are not the sun. It is through the sun's rays that the radiant light and genial warmth of the sun reach the earth. So it is through Christ, the manifestation of God, that God's goodness and love and healing power reach and bless humanity. This Christ, moreover, is as present now as in Jesus' day, in confirmation of his own words, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Both critics quote the opening words of John's gospel, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." In the light of Christ Jesus' own clear teaching as to his identity, the explanation of this passage is beautifully simple: "The Word was God" made manifest. So also in the case of the Master's words to Philip: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" made manifest. Christ Jesus' mission was to manifest the Father, to manifest Love.

These facts are indeed vital. Their value is best seen in the healing of disease and the destruction of sin, and it is on this solid foundation that Christian Science stands.

[T. E. Davidson in Newcastle-on-Tyne (England) Chronicle]

A canon in his sermon, as reported in the Chronicle, speaks of what he regards as the differences between the teaching of Christian Science and of the orthodox church. All Christian Scientists will appreciate the Christian spirit in which he approached the subject, and also his kindly words toward those who differed from his views.

On the subject of matter Christian Science teaches (Science and Health, p. 468): "There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter. All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all. Spirit is immortal truth; matter is mortal error. Spirit is the real and eternal; matter is the unreal and temporal." Not long ago Mr. Balfour, speaking at the University of Cambridge, said that modern natural scientists had not only explained matter but had explained it away. Christian Science accepts the teaching of such idealistic thinkers on natural science as Plato, Berkeley, and Kelvin, in so far as they agree that all natural phenomena are either the subjective condition of the human mind or the result of energy, but goes much further and accepts the teaching of the New Testament as given in Hebrews: "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." The canon's statement that the Christian faith taught them "that matter was the means by which God expressed His majesty, glory, and creative powers," places him in the position of having to explain the evil and suffering expressed through nature and humanity, as having been created by God. Against this view we have the definite words of Jesus, "The flesh profiteth nothing," and of Paul, "They that are in the flesh cannot please God." The idea of a good God creating something which profiteth nothing and is not pleasing to Him, is not accepted by Christian Science, and this is claimed to be more in accord with Scripture teaching than the dualistic theory as taught by the orthodox church.

The canon also refers to the difference between prayer as understood by Christian Scientists and by the orthodox church. Mrs. Eddy devotes a whole chapter in her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," to the subject of prayer. It is certainly, as the canon says, "spiritual communion," but it is much more. Christian Science does not regard prayer as a kind of medium of exchange between God and man, nor a process of pleading with Him for favors either for one's self or others. It regards prayer as a mental process by which man meets the divine requirement, a realization that God is the Giver of all good, and that man is the image and likeness of the Father. Right thinking based upon divine Principle is prayer.

Circulation

THE only thing that can be circulated is truth. That, of course, is a statement entirely contrary to all human belief and experience. Yet it is a statement of absolute truth, and there is no truth which is not absolute. A lie is a mere negation, and so cannot pass into circulation, in as much as it never passes out of its native nothingness. What, then, is it that deceives the human mind into a belief in the reality of a lie, and the consequent possibility of circulating a lie? It is the fact that the human mind is itself a lie and a liar, endeavoring to circulate its belief of the reality of matter, and so of a world apart from divine Mind; "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself," Paul wrote to the Galatians, with penetrating directness. There is the simple truth about the whole matter. Men live in a world of sensuous impressions which they accept all the time for facts. Even Sophocles could write of "a necessary evil," even Shakespeare could be betrayed into the admission that "the evil that men do lives after them." Yet the latter, at any rate, must have read repeatedly in the letter to the Galatians the words already quoted, together with that tremendous following warning, "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

There, with that ever recurring force of true ideas which circulate persistently through the Bible, is the warning to all those with eyes to see and ears to hear, of the utter unreality of the material and all its works. Now a lie is something which belongs entirely to the flesh, since it has obviously no part in things spiritual, that is, in Principle. Therefore a lie is merely, like a fever or any other disease, an unreality circulating in a false medium; in other words, it has no real circulation. It is quite true, as a statement of something relatively true, that nothing circulates so rapidly as a lie; every one opposed to truth is in a hurry to believe it, and to spread it. But this circulation is metaphysically fictitious, and just as an epidemic of fever can be stopped by an understanding of Truth, so can the circulation of anything outside Principle. Where the world, always working from a material cause to a material effect, makes its mistake, is in imagining that the circulation of truth can be stopped by what seems to be a successful attempt to suppress any manifestation of it in a form cognizable by the human consciousness. Every one knows the apparent success of the ecclesiastical tribunals of the medieval centuries and of much later days, in their efforts to prevent the circulation of the Bible in the vernacular, or to stifle freedom of thought through the Inquisition. But everybody knows also the abject failure of the attempt; how Bibles eventually increased in circulation, how heresy grew, and dissent flourished. The simple fact, of course, is that you cannot stop the circulation of anything that is true, and nothing that is untrue has a real circulation. That wise doctor of the law, Gamaliel, understood this perfectly when he said to the Sanhedrin, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

It requires, however, a true metaphysical understanding of Principle to comprehend and to act upon advice such as that of Gamaliel. The Sanhedrin certainly had no such understanding. Under the influence of Gamaliel's realization of Truth, it bent for the moment, but for the moment only, to his advice. Almost immediately it responded to its own passions, and the result was the stoning of Stephen and the persecution of the Christian church. That persecution was, however, quite unable to prevent the spread of Christian teaching, and that for the reason so simply explained by Mrs. Eddy, on page 99 of "Miscellaneous Writings," when she says: "In no other one thing seemed Jesus of Nazareth more divine than in his faith in the immortality of his words. He said, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away;' and they have not." And this for the simple and all-sufficient reason that neither time nor the efforts of men has, or can have, any effect upon the circulation of truth. It was Jesus' intense spirituality that enabled him to ignore material considerations; just as it was the overmastering materiality of the Sanhedrin which led it to ignore the wise counsel of Gamaliel. What was the result? The Sanhedrin appealed from Mind to matter, from wisdom to passion, and it found its reply in the swords and catapaults of Titus. The Roman plows passed over Jerusalem. The Jew was himself subjected by the Christian to the brutal persecution to which he had subjected the Christian. But the truth of the teaching of Christ Jesus remained, undestroyed and undestroyable, to be demonstrated in the ratio of any man's and woman's ability to make themselves free from the lie of evil through a knowledge of the truth. It was, indeed, exactly as Gamaliel had warned the Sanhedrin: If this counsel or this work be of God ye cannot overthrow it.

For nineteen centuries, then, truth has been circulating through the world, while the Pharisees and Sanhedrins have been striving to overthrow it. The attempt is bred of the natural antipathy of darkness to light, but it is hopeless, since it is the effort of a lie to get itself mistaken for truth. Some fictitious circulation the lie, of course, seems to attain. But it achieves this by disguising itself. In the metaphorical language of the Bible, it is now the serpent, now the crocodile, now the hippopotamus, and now the dragon. The liar, as plain liar, has no chance naturally of being believed; indeed, as Cicero long since pointed out, he cannot obtain credence even when he tells the truth. His very activity is a falsehood, for true activity is the circulation of truth.

"One race"

IMMORTALITY is here and now the real man's actual experience, altogether separate from mortal illusions. As Mrs. Eddy declares on page 14 of Science and Health, "Entirely separate from the belief and dream of material living, is the Life divine, revealing spiritual understanding and the consciousness of man's dominion over the whole earth." The sun with its ever streaming light is forever separate from and untouched by either earth clouds or the falsity of seeming sunrise and sunset. In the same way, divine intelligence, of which real living must be the expression, is forever separate from nonintelligence. The carnal mind with all its so-called material manifestations is merely the supposititious opposite of the one divine Mind which is all there truly is. What truly is must be completely distinct from what is not.

Digitized by Google

As Wordsworth says in his famous "Ode on Immortality,"

> The clouds that gather round the setting sun
> Do take a sober colouring from an eye
> That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality;
> Another race hath been, and other palms are won.

Let us consider, then, this other race, this true experience, which endures in spite of any mortal seeming. Infinite divine Mind is one and indivisible. What it knows must be complete and indestructible, and wholly apart from mortal concepts. In a beautiful poem called "The New Century" (Poems, p. 22), Mrs. Eddy points out that

> 'Tis writ on earth, on leaf and flower:
> Love hath one race, one realm, one power.

In place of the counterfeit, she saw, more clearly by far than Wordsworth, the true immortality which the divine Mind infinitely expresses in the spiritual now.

What more could ever really be present than the unlimited divine consciousness of good? Eternally the immortal man of God's creating is present with all there is. Never for an instant could he be separated from the cause for his being. The course of all good, the one perfect Mind, must be undying, indestructible, and indivisible. Principle, with its entire manifestation, continues and tangibly satisfies even while human concepts are vanishing. Being forever present with Principle, man is thus inseparable from all that ever has been real. His happiness lies in the spirituality of genuine living in all its variety.

In the last analysis, what does one ever really have of a friend, a son, a brother, or a husband? The spiritual consciousness of friendship is the only true friendship; the spiritual consciousness of brotherhood is the only real brotherhood; the spiritual consciousness of kinship is the one perfect kinship. The veritable strength, nearness, and love must be spiritual idea, altogether different from any merely human concepts. Any mortal concept, no matter how good it may seem, is but a poor imitation of the glorious idea which dwells permanently in the one Mind, which is ever present. The real man has always depended wholly upon loving, divine intelligence expressed. For the image and likeness of God there is nothing else with which to associate. The inseparability of true cause and true effect goes on forever.

Could geographical location, then, or bitterness possibly affect the reality? The real man rejoices now and immortally in what he has always loved. All the goodness there ever has been to appreciate is still sent forth inexhaustibly by the one Mind. "God is our Father and our Mother," Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 151 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "our Minister and the great Physician: He is man's only real relative on earth and in heaven. David sang, 'Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee.'" Whatever may seem to be is, therefore, just an opportunity for thorough turning to the divine reality, the perfect relationship of God and man. This is the wonderfully comforting fact that Christian Science is presenting to the whole world, in the midst of no matter what seeming turmoils. The course of true experience goes on, untouched by any illusions.

When any suggestion would try to prevent men and women from turning harmoniously together to Principle, what each one needs to know is this inseparability of the one infinite Mind and its idea. The genuine man is associating only with divine intelligence endlessly expressed. In the knowing of this, there is no room for disappointment or discouragement. From any mere conjectures, all must turn to what really is divine intelligence. To reject any human sense of things for Principle is the glorious sacrifice. Rejoicing that the one Mind alone is ceaselessly active means full safety and continuous unfoldment. This joy can never be limited within human concepts. It is sure defense against any suppositions of error.

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" Paul once eloquently asked. "Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" The absolute metaphysical truth is that the one divine Love, which is synonymous with Principle, expressed as idea, is all that has ever inspired, supported, pleased, or been good in any way. It could not possibly be interfered with by so-called matter or any human sense of things. The love of God goes on uninterruptedly. The sooner, therefore, we all turn to and rely upon the infinitely loving Principle, the sooner do we prove spirituality in everyday experience. In this way only can we demonstrate in all circumstances that we are keeping watch on immortality, not on mortality with its utter unsatisfactoriness. Thus we run the race that is set before us, experiencing here and now the goodness of right doing. The true race that has always been, is now, and ever will be, is the immortal activity of the divine Mind.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BRATTLEBORO, VT.—Deeds were filed yesterday [March 25] transferring a house and lot on Putney Road to First Church of Christ, Scientist. The property is located on the east side of the street next south of the Estey residence. The grantor sells to the Christian Scientists for $6500.

Rutland Herald.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—At the morning service of First Church of Christ, Scientist, yesterday [March 28] the building was formally dedicated with a short and simple ceremony. The church has been completed for a number of years, but it is a custom among Christian Scientists not to dedicate their churches until they are fully paid for. The remaining part of the indebtedness on the classic structure at Dunlap Street and Monroe Avenue was canceled in February, more than two years before its maturity.

The history of Christian Science in Memphis dates back to 1888, for in this year one of Mrs. Eddy's students came to Memphis and started the work. The first public services were held in the Appeal Building at Main and Jefferson Streets, from which location the little congregation moved to the old Firemen's Hall on Linden Avenue. With a largely increased attendance at the services more spacious quarters were needed and secured in the Randolph Building, and these rooms were occupied for several years, more space being added from time to time.

In 1894 First Church of Christ, Scientist, was organized with a charter from the state, and in 1906 the congregation purchased the old Central Methodist Church on Union Avenue. This was used only for a few months, when it was completely destroyed by fire. In the meantime the church had purchased the lot on which the present structure is located, and after the fire plans were immediately put into effect for building. While the lower story was being built, services were held in Beethoven Hall; and when the lower story was completed, it was occupied at once and used until the entire structure was finished. The corner stone was laid in 1908, and the church was completed in 1913. The lower story is now used for the Sunday school. The church also has spacious quarters in the Exchange Building, which are used for the public reading rooms and the distribution work.

The Lectures

HURON, S. DAK. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Miss Della Groom, who said in part:—

Deep down in the consciousness of every thinking individual is an earnest desire for an understanding of man's relationship with the "great First Cause," God. Jesus of Nazareth came explaining this relationship by declaring the oneness of God and man, Father and son, and teaching the import of this wonderful truth to sick and sinning humanity. He proved that he fully understood the Science of being by casting out evils, healing the sick, and destroying the power of death. Christian Science claims to be the same Science which Jesus taught and demonstrated.—The Huronite.

BRIGHTON, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by H. Burnham Silver, who said in part:—

Christian Science is reiterating Paul's words, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." It is calling upon us all to awaken from sleep, to arise from the dead and unprofitable dream of the material senses and, through the light of spiritual understanding which Christ most surely gives, to avail ourselves here and now of demonstrable truth, thereby overcoming and destroying every form of sickness and sin.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Second Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Charles E. Heitman, who said in part:—

As one studies the various characters of the Bible, it is interesting to note that those who most consistently relied on the one infinite God, were willing at all times and under all circumstances to have their religious faith subjected to the practical tests of results. This was particularly true of Elijah when the people showed an inclination to turn from his teachings and go after strange gods; likewise with the three Hebrew boys when passing through the fiery furnace, and Daniel in the lions' den. In a like manner did Jesus look upon results as being the most important and convincing testimony as to the divinity of his teachings, as is evidenced by the fact that when the messengers of John the Baptist came to him to inquire as to whether or not he was the Messiah, he referred them to the results of his teaching rather than to the teaching itself as proof of his Messiahship.

In view of this it is not strange that we find Mary Baker Eddy, the Founder and Discoverer of Christian Science, who was at once a true and practical follower of Christ Jesus, saying to a questioning world that the results attained through the practice of Christian Science are sufficient proof of its divine power in healing disease and discord of every nature. Thus it is that Mrs. Eddy, following in the footsteps of the prophets as well as of the Master himself, asks the world to accept Christian Science, not as an unproved theory, but rather on the basis of demonstrated results.

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Miss Mary Alexia Cusack, who said in part:—

Was there ever a time of more unrest, more disquietude, more discontent and dissatisfaction with conditions social, civil, political, economic, industrial, than in the panorama that the world presents to-day? An author has said, "The unrest of the world is its unvoiced cry after God." This is the enunciation of a great truth. For it is only the truth about God that will meet the world's need, quiet its fears, and bring surcease to its broken hearts.

Christian Science is doing this, because it is the Science which reveals the truth about God, the truth about man, the truth about God's beneficent law of good; and the God of Christian Science is not a God afar off, but a God near at hand, ever present Love, which is to-day healing humanity mentally, morally, physically.

ALHAMBRA, CALIF. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Ralph H. Dyer, who said in part:—

Christian Science is practical Christianity. It is founded on the teachings of Jesus, and the proofs of its efficacy are to be found in every quarter of the globe, living proofs in individuals who have been healed of sickness and who have been freed from the bondage of sin. Any one can prove for himself the truth of this healing power, if he will study and apply the teachings as given in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy.

FITCHBURG, MASS. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Walter S. Cross, who said in part:—

No one who reads the Bible intelligently can for one moment honestly doubt that there was ever a more efficient method of healing sickness and disease than the method taught and practiced by Christ Jesus and his disciples as recorded throughout the New Testament. Jesus showed clearly in his own words and throughout his entire ministry that his healing works when understood would establish conclusively the truth of his teaching, and that healing works would always follow the understanding of his teaching. The record reads: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

Fortunately for us to-day, there has been one who lived close enough to God to be able to prove through her own experience that Jesus' words and works are true for all mankind and throughout all time, and who, furthermore, through her discovery and life work has made the Christianity of the Bible again prolific in the healing of the sick and in the liberation of those in bondage to sin, sorrow, or despair,—a system of Christian healing before which every kind of disease and sin known to the human mind has been met and overcome. This teaching Mrs. Eddy has given to the world in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

ATLANTA, GA. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Edward H. Carman, who said in part:—

All down the ages mankind has sought a way of escape from its suffering in body and mind. Christ Jesus came and taught and demonstrated the way of escape from sin and the penalties of sin—disease and death. His was unmistakably "the way," but Jesus and his teaching and demonstrations were misunderstood until Mary Baker Eddy rediscovered the divine method and by application and loving practice gave to the world the rule of divine healing and metaphysical understanding in her unique book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the textbook of Christian Science. The study of the Bible in connection with this book is helping mankind to escape from sin, fear, suffering, and discord. It is the way of salvation in the present age. It has healed many and will benefit all who are willing humbly and meekly to follow its teachings.

GLASGOW, SCOTLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Jean Ramsey, who said in part:—

Of all promises in the New Testament, probably one of the most cherished is conveyed in the words of Christ Jesus, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." To-day out of turmoil and trouble the world looks, prays, and longs for the fulfillment of that promise. In the teachings of Christian Science some of us have discerned the desired haven, even though it may seem a long way off. All the same we have got a glimpse of it, and that glimpse has healed us and in many cases remodeled our lives.

PHILADELPHIA, PA. (Third Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Stella M. Hirsh, who said in part:—

In Ecclesiastes we read, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Little can be said for the man of mortal invention, since he is not an improvement on God's upright, spiritual man, whom He made in His image and likeness. Our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, says in her book "Unity of Good" (p. 60), "From such thoughts—mortal inventions, one and all—Christ Jesus came to save men, through ever-present and eternal good."

Christian Science teaches that God is that "ever-present and eternal good." This fact is shown forth in the still, small voice of conscience which constantly guides and guards, and in the happy results from following obediently His directing.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Third Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Frank W. Gibson, who said in part:—

In Matthew it is recorded that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." On page 18 of the Christian Science textbook, Mrs. Eddy says that "Jesus of Nazareth taught and demonstrated man's oneness with the Father, and for this we owe him endless homage." There can be found no command from Jesus to preach the gospel that has not coupled with it the command to heal the sick also. A specific instance is to be found in the tenth chapter of Matthew: "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give."

LOVELAND, COLO. (Society).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by John D. Kelly, who said in part:—

Those who have laid aside all malice, prejudice, and biased opinions and, taking the Bible in connection with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, have given these books a sincere and thorough investigation, are enjoying many blessings in increased health and happiness and freedom from many discordant conditions.—The Loveland Herald.

Testimonies of Healing

It is now more than thirty years since I was healed in Christian Science and had the blessed privilege of class instruction. I was healed in one treatment and the healing was so marvelous that it astonished all who knew of the case. I had been to the sanitarium at Battle Creek and had two operations and was left helpless, the physicians saying I would never be able to walk again without supports. I did not walk across the floor from March until June, and suffered agonies all the time. One day a friend came to see me and brought a lady with her, saying as she came into the room, "Cheer up, Sarah, I have brought you something now that will heal you." I asked what it was and she replied, "Christian Science." Somehow I thought they were the sweetest words I had ever heard. I asked what it was and the practitioner replied, "It is God who does the work." I was always willing to trust God and had always had a craving for higher things, and Christian Science came right into the place in my consciousness that had been prepared for it. The work was done absolutely and immediately and I was as well and strong as I had ever been, and remained so and went about my work, happy and free as a bird.

I could tell of many, many demonstrations that have proved both to myself and others that Christian Science is the truth just as the Master gave it and as explained by our blessed Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. I have been asked this question, "Do you have just as much confidence in Christian Science now as you did at first?" and I can answer that my confidence has increased as my understanding has enlarged its borders. It is such a blessing in time of need, and nothing can take its place. Just the other day some one said a word that seemed to hurt and at first I had a struggle to keep the tears back; then the thought came to me, When Daniel was thrown into the lions' den, he did not sit down and cry because some one had wronged him, he just kept his face turned toward the light, having no room in his thought for anything but the things of God. I am ever grateful for Christian Science and all that it has brought to me.—(Mrs.) Sarah A. Williams, Evanston, Ill.

I thank God every day that I was led to visit a Christian Science practitioner at a time when everything seemed dark and life not worth the living. I had been almost an invalid for seven years, had taken treatment from a number of doctors, and much medicine, but continued to grow worse until I gave up hope of ever being well again. After that first visit with a Christian Scientist, I noticed my habit of thinking began to change, I simply forgot the wrong things that had been tormenting me. There was more love shown in our home, and everything began to change for the better. Really it was the new birth of which the Bible tells us.

We purchased a copy of Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy, and other Christian Science literature was kindly lent me. It tasted so good that I read most of the time and was healed in one week's treatment. Stomach and other internal troubles and rheumatism were some of the diseases overcome. I can work all day without feeling tired.

Of course, we are thankful for the physical healing but that is not all. I have found the "pearl of great price,"—the rule of right living,—and by daily study and using what I learn, find I can prove that Christian Science is indeed God's word, explained so plainly that we can understand and live by it. Jesus said, "Hear, and understand."

I have a large family, and they have all been healed of various troubles. In October, 1918, my youngest son had his leg broken. He was taken to the hospital and had a doctor's care for eight weeks. When he was brought home, the doctor showed me that the injured leg was shorter than the other, but I did some earnest work in Christian Science while he was recovering his strength and am happy to say that he walks and runs without a sign of limping. Last summer while I was canning fruit a jar broke and my hand was badly scalded. The pain was intense at first, but was almost instantly overcome. I only stopped work for about ten minutes. In two hours my canning and washing were done, and my hand showed not the least sign of the injury.

I could not tell all the blessings that have come to me and my family through Christian Science, for they are more than can be numbered. My only desire is to gain a better understanding of the truth, that I may do better work and witness what all mankind are praying for, "Thy kingdom come ... in earth, as it is in heaven."

The reading of testimonies in the Christian Science periodicals has always been very helpful to me, therefore I would like to add my demonstration, hoping that it may be of some benefit to those seeking deliverance. Although I had known of Christian Science for about twenty years, I did not take it up until about ten years ago. Since then I have been healed of extreme nervousness, backache, fever, and other minor ailments. In August, 1916, the test came for me to take a stand when I was stricken with blood poisoning. I tried to work for myself during the day and all that night but seemingly could not overcome the pain. The following morning I thought it wise to call for help, and as we have no practitioner in our little town I telephoned to a friend in a neighboring town, and was relieved of the pain. A few days later a different phase of poison presented itself. I again telephoned the practitioner, who gave me immediate treatment; but the sense of pain was so intense that I could not get any rest all night, and next morning when I tried to arise I fainted; my whole body was affected. That afternoon I telephoned for the practitioner to come and stay with me as I felt I needed present help. She came and stayed with me all night and part of the next day, and I am very grateful that through her loving help and patience I was enabled to stand firm under an apparently stubborn test. Before she left I was able to sit up a little while, and I knew my demonstration was made even though it was several weeks before the false evidence entirely disappeared. I am very grateful to the practitioner who so faithfully worked for me, also to Mrs. Eddy who so patiently taught the way in Christian Science, that we might accept the Christ-teachings and be free.—(Mrs.) Emmy Grube, New Braunfels, Texas.

With heartfelt gratitude I bear witness to the healing power of Christian Science. For fifteen years I was afflicted with an intestinal trouble, accompanied by daily hemorrhages and great pain. I was treated by many physicians, among them specialists, but in vain. Then, to my great joy, Christian Science came into my life and, after I had received only four treatments from a dear practitioner, brought me healing. I am now healed, being free from hemorrhages and all inconvenience.

My wife suffered from varicose veins for years. Through severe strain in the exercise of her duties, her right leg was very much swollen and threatened to become sore. After three treatments from a practitioner the swelling disappeared and the leg is now normal as the other. The strain remained the same, but the difficulty did not reappear. My wife was also healed of a severe attack of the grippe in one absent treatment. These physical healings are only a few of the blessings that we have received through Christian Science. For all the proofs of God's power to heal, as well as for the many other blessings Christian Science has brought to us, I am very thankful. My heart goes out in gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

I am deeply grateful to our Father-Mother God for all the wonderful blessings that have come to me through the understanding of divine Love as always available to meet our every need. The greatest of all the blessings I have received is my healing of prolapsus. For four months I had been suffering without any effectual relief from materia medica, and was in the end told that no hope of ever regaining health could be held out for me. It was then, when everything had failed to cure me, through the loving thought of a friend the truth was brought to me. After a faithful study of our textbook I was at last led into seeking the help of a Christian Science practitioner, and in twenty-four hours was completely healed. This healing brought with it so great a spiritual uplift that it has helped me to see the light far more clearly than ever before. I am indeed truly grateful to our heavenly Father for this and all other blessings through the understanding of God as good and the only Mind, and I am now trying daily to follow in the way Christ Jesus taught, as revealed to us by Mrs. Eddy in the inspired writings of Christian Science.—(Miss) DORIS MABEL CHÉLIN, Auckland, New Zealand.

Having received so many benefits from reading the testimonies, I wish to send mine. Eight years ago I took up the study of Christian Science for physical healing. At that time I had been told by various physicians that an operation was the only relief; this I would not consent to. Finally I was told by one physician that he might give me temporary relief, but I would never be a well woman; but thanks be to God, through the study of Christian Science, I am now a strong and healthy woman. When first taking up this study, I was to sense suffering from nervousness, an abnormal growth, pain, and many other discordant conditions. I can now say that the truth has made me free.

I would like to tell of the healing of my little girl, five years old. She was playing with scissors and ran across the floor, falling on them and cutting her upper lip very seriously and clear through. The extreme bleeding frightened the child, but she suffered no pain whatever. As my husband is not in Science, he drove with her to a physician, who remarked at there being no swelling and no pain, and my husband noticed that the physician did not use any medicine, but simply drew the lip together, and put a plaster on it. I held to the truth and the healing was beautiful.

I would like to tell also of the healing of my boy. He was thirteen years old and took great delight in riding on calves' backs. One evening he came walking into the house with blood streaming from his mouth and nose, seemingly dazed, as he did not even know me. I began to declare that memory is spiritual, and in about ten or fifteen minutes he came to, but was seemingly in great pain. Then I began to declare that nothing can withstand the presence of divine Love. In about an hour after the accident his father came home, and the boy had fear that his father would want to take him to a doctor; I then told him that in reality we are courageous, happy, the ideas of Mind, and are not afraid. We also declared that there is but one Physician, after which the pain ceased. His father asked if he should take him to a doctor, and I told him to do as he liked, but he seemed pleased with the way the boy was getting along, and said he would wait until morning. He has never taken him to a doctor, although the nose was seemingly crooked until recently, when his father remarked that the nose had been broken and set, and he would like to know what did it. The boy slept peacefully all night long after the accident and suffered no pain whatever, but the face was swollen about three days; he seemed discouraged and asked me to write a practitioner to treat him. After I had written the letter I said, "Son, you are not grateful enough, that is the reason why the healing has not been entirely manifested." Later I found him singing, "'Twas the Truth that made us free" (Hymnal, p. 213), and the next day the swelling had nearly disappeared. When I heard from the practitioner, she lovingly said she felt the work had already been done, that we only had to be grateful to receive more good.

For this and many other blessings, I am most grateful, also grateful to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.

(Mrs.) ELNORA SLOAN, Parker, Colo.

I wish to verify my mother's testimony in regard to my little sister's healing, which we consider to have been beautiful, and also to my brother's, which was wonderful. They certainly have taught us that God never loses sight of his spiritual ideas, and since that time we always are sure of God's protection. I would also like to mention the healing of influenza which occurred in our home, and was another proof of God's care.

I now wish to tell of my own healing of a malady which has been overcome through the study of Christian Science, and also of the spiritual uplift. We are starting a little Christian Science Society, which is four miles and a half from us and which we are always eager to attend whenever possible. I am grateful to "Christ Jesus, the Way-shower," and to Mrs. Eddy for pointing out the way to suffering humanity.—(Miss) NINA E. SLOAN.

When I think of all the blessings which have come to us during the past five years as the result of Christian Science, I realize that only a life consecrated to Truth will ever pay the debt of gratitude I owe to God and to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

Our twin sons were eight years old when Christian Science found me. Neither of them had ever been well and I was a semi-invalid, never free from pain. Nervous dyspepsia, abscess, partial paralysis of the bowels, neuralgia, and sciatic rheumatism were named in the diagnosis of my case by the doctors. I could eat nothing without suffering terribly and was very weak. Finally one of our boys was taken with St. Vitus's dance, and all seemed very dark indeed. Then one day Love sent me a dear friend who brought the wonderful message that it was possible through Christian Science for all of us to be well and happy. I had tried so many doctors and osteopathic and Turkish massage treatments and had taken so many medicines, only to grow worse instead of better, that I had almost lost hope of ever being well again. This truth cure, however, appealed to me greatly and I thought if it could possibly make our boys well and strong, there might be hopes for me. I was so careful to plan just how the healing should be accomplished, not having learned to say, "Thy will be done."

I secured a copy of Science and Health, and how I did live in that book! It was a revelation to me, that for which I had always been looking and had never found. The days came and went but nothing seemed of much importance outside of this beautiful truth about real life. Before I had finished reading the book, I was eating anything I wanted to eat, without any discomfort whatever. I kept on reading and in two months discarded all medicine. Then the bowel trouble yielded, and from that time Christian Science has been our only healer. I had worn glasses three years for eyestrain but have not worn them for four years now, the sight is perfect and I can read for hours without any bad effect. The neuralgia and rheumatism have also been overcome to a great extent. Tired, aching feet with two very painful corns were healed through the understanding I had gained.

The nervous malady of one of our boys, which I have mentioned, seemed very obstinate. He was helped greatly by the work of the practitioner, but after I had studied about six months, I felt I was depending too much on another and that there was work here for me to do. By constantly overcoming fear and realizing fully that action is in Mind and governed by Mind, all inharmonious action was overcome. Through absent treatment by a practitioner, he was healed of inflammatory rheumatism in one week, whereas before under medical treatment when he was six years old, he was confined to the bed for two months and to the house for four months. The other son was healed of blood poisoning in his foot in four days. I asked for help in this case. Minor ailments such as coughs, colds, toothache, and fevers have yielded quickly. Instead of our having two frail, sickly boys, they are now active, healthy, and normal in every way.

I am truly grateful for every physical healing, but that which means far more to me is the revelation of the Christ-truth, as taught by Jesus. Before I read her wonderful books I did not like to hear even the name of Mrs. Eddy mentioned, and was very careful never to look at her picture. After reading her biography by Sibyl Wilbur, all prejudice vanished and I love her for her faithfulness and courage.—(Mrs.) Edna L. Kent, South Bend, Ind.

It is two and a half years since I reached out to try to understand Christian Science, and the blessings have been so manifold from the very beginning that this testimony would be too long if I tried to tell them all. My physical healing was immediate and complete and included the casting aside of glasses which had been worn because my sight seemed to need aid as I grew older. I am also being healed of the sense of age.

The daily study of the Lesson-Sermons is indeed spiritual food, and the pure delight of advancing, step by step, in the understanding of God and man, seems too wonderful to tell in words,—my life must do that. Our literature is most helpful and answers many questions; The Christian Science Monitor is indeed an educational influence which I appreciate sincerely. The rules Mrs. Eddy left for us do guide and guard us if we study and sincerely use them.

(Mrs.) L. M. Mellors, Winnipeg, Man., Canada.

I would like to express my deep gratitude for the blessings we have received through the study of Christian Science. I had suffered with headaches all my life, and for eight years many additional complications had gathered. I used to see things in no other way except that I would be a burden to some one, but I began to hope that I would be delivered from this kind of life, and my thought of prayer was soon answered. Some days later I met a lady who spoke to me about healing and gave me the address of the Christian Science church, of which I had never heard before. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, was given to me, and after reading it for only two weeks I was suddenly healed of several ailments. Not quite everything was healed, but I know that as I gain more understanding the healing will be made perfect.

My son was healed of severe bowel difficulty after reading Science and Health two nights, and the children at school are very much helped in their work by knowing that God is their intelligence. This is just a little of our experience, and I hope that it may help some one else. I am deeply grateful for physical healing, but more so for the spiritual uplift and the peace "which passeth all understanding."

For two years I have had the privilege of knowing something of Christian Science; the blessings it has brought and the happiness it is bringing daily to me are more than I can well express. It has healed me of a skin trouble of many years' standing, which had been given up in materia medica. It has cured me of many colds and of headaches. My baby's life was threatened once very shortly after her birth, but through the efforts of a practitioner the baby now lives, a witness to the efficacy of Christian Science.

No one can know this new-old religion without having a fuller sense of joy in living and a keener realization of what Life really means in true brotherliness. No one can know Christian Science without losing fear and discouragement and worry, and no one can know the life of our Leader without becoming more desirous every day of being more generous and more Christlike. For all that it has brought me I am very grateful.

I feel that it is time for me to acknowledge the blessings I have received through Christian Science. At the time of my father's death, when I was only seventeen years old, I prayed to God for protection and to be guided aright always, and I did have the faith that God did take care of His children, and am so thankful for having been brought up with that faith in God, as it has kept me in the way of Truth when mortal sense has tried to tell me I was not getting the results from Christian Science that I was working for. I firmly believe it was in answer to that prayer that I was led to a Christian Science home where I first heard something about it that I could understand. I did not take up the study though until three years after my marriage. Just before the birth of my oldest child I took scarlet fever but had the help of a practitioner, with the result that everything was harmonious and the physician said it was a marvel, that he could not understand why I got along so well, as under those conditions very few people lived. A few months later, when trying to get a better understanding of Christian Science, just the one thought of God's perfect creation healed me of a trouble for which I had taken medicine daily for over five years, and I have not used medicine for myself or children since.

It is a blessing to receive the physical healings but I am so grateful for the understanding of God's protection and guidance in all the affairs of our everyday life. I could not begin to tell the daily proofs I have of God's presence and the protection I feel my children have no matter where they are. I am more grateful for this than I can tell, to know they will be guided and protected always. I am grateful for the periodicals and for the privilege of being a member of the local church here.—MRS. GEORGE EMERY, Topeka, Kans.

I have received so much benefit from the testimonies in the Sentinel and the Journal that I feel it is now time that I helped others by telling a few of the blessings that I have received. I did not come into Christian Science for physical healing, but because I was in an extremely depressed and unhappy condition, having passed through the great sorrow of losing my mother. I had heard about Christian Science a year or two previously, but after reading a very little from one or two pamphlets I regret to say I thoughtlessly put them aside and thought no more about it. However, at the time previously mentioned, I thought about it again and decided to investigate it further. I therefore began the study of Science and Health by Mary Baker Eddy and I can truthfully say that my life has been quite changed from that time.

Whereas I used to be of an extremely worrying and nervous disposition, I now feel quite free of fear, worry, or nervousness. These last four years of war would, to human sense, have been a great occasion for worry, anxiety, and depression, but both my husband and myself have been marvelously protected. My husband, through the aid of Christian Science, has quite recovered from a sharp attack of trench fever. He was also marvelously protected at the front during several strenuous months of trench warfare. I myself have been cured of many minor ailments, such as troublesome colds which in the old days used to last for many weeks at a time. When the error now crops up it is invariably overcome in a short time. I was also very quickly cured of a poisoned toe a year or two ago, for which I am very grateful. My greatest gratitude is, however, for the spiritual uplift and the new understanding of God which comes to us through the study of this new-old religion.

(Mrs.) D. M. WALLINGTON, Sidcup, Kent, England.

In the year 1901 I first became interested in Christian Science. At that time I went from my home to a distant city to attend school. I boarded with an aunt, who was a student of this Science, and soon became interested enough to give up all medicine and rely upon Science treatments for all ailments. During the four years I remained there, my health, which had been poor, became perfect. However, busy with the school work as I was, I did not gain much understanding of Christian Science, and upon returning to my home, near which there were no Scientists at that time, I soon gave up the study entirely.

Almost immediately discordant conditions arose, followed by bodily ailments, and then came physicians with drugs and minor operations, all to no avail, as my health steadily became worse. Finally, following a severe illness, I became a semi-invalid, confined to my bed much of the time. After consulting several physicians and trying a change of climate for six months with little benefit, I went to a famous institution where I was examined by eminent physicians who pronounced the trouble a nervous one, for which there was no cure except a complete change in my manner of living. We sold our home and moved to California. For a short time I seemed better, then the old trouble seemed reappearing. At this juncture I decided to return to Christian Science and at once discarded all medicines, bought the book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, began to study the Lesson-Sermons, and attend the church services. I was freed, almost immediately, of an ailment for which I had taken medicine daily for three years. After a short time I had a struggle with the temptation to resort to the medicine again for relief, but when I relied upon God entirely, the healing came and has been permanent. With the help of a practitioner, I was later healed of severe abdominal cramps, nervous headache, threatened nervous breakdown, worry, grief, and other ills. My husband was also healed of a very troublesome itching skin rash, of a severe attack of malaria, and a bad cough which resulted from it.

For all these healings I am indeed grateful to God, and to Mrs. Eddy, who presented this wonderful truth to this age, but far more thankful for the spiritual uplift and the change in my mental attitude from hostility toward many people, to love for even those I considered my worst enemies.—(Mrs.) MAUDE D. WISE, Kingsbury, Calif.

I desire to add my testimony to those I have been so interested in reading in the Sentinel. About two years ago I was suffering so severely that many who saw me had no thought that I would recover. I had no doctor because I had no faith in them, and besides I had previously become interested in Christian Science, but never came to the point of adapting it to my daily needs, as I was waiting for my wife to become interested also. But man's extremity became God's opportunity, and I was healed. A double blessing came to us at that time, as my wife was healed of a rupture through her efforts to help me, although she had no thought at the time of applying the declaration of the truth to her own needs.

Since then we have had many demonstrations of the allness of God and His ever present help in time of need, especially in the application of this Science to the needs of our little son. Previous to the time that the trouble caused me to seek God's help for my own physical ailment, my wife and little boy seemed constantly to need the most skilled physicians and surgeons for different ailments, but now we all know the truth and have been made free from the law of sin, sickness, and death. I am truly thankful for the awakening from the false claims of error through the teaching and application of Christian Science and the peace, happiness, and harmony that have been the natural result of the knowledge of the allness of God, good, in our little family.

God's Messages

JENNIE WALBRIDGE BRIGGS

GOD'S messages are holy thoughts
That comfort and sustain;
They fill the soul with happiness
And banish fear and pain.

God's messages are thoughts of peace;
They calm the troubled breast,
They still the raging tempest,
And give the weary rest.

God's messages are loving thoughts;
They scatter doubts and fears,
They lighten every weary load,
And wipe away our tears.

Signs of the Times

[Grit, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia]

We have to thank America for many things. Among them, and not the least of them, is The Christian Science Monitor. I have nothing to say about the religious tenets of this remarkable body of people, but of their daily paper I have much to say. It has proved that a great daily can be run without police court news or questionable advertisements. It is a magnificent newspaper, but it has resolutely refused to imitate all the world's daily papers and have "a chamber of horrors" column, a sport page which flatly contradicts the ethics of its leading articles, or lying advertisements which enter thousands of homes in the respectable garb of daily news and do untold harm. This paper in its size, "get up," illustrations, news, and special articles ranks with the best papers the world has yet produced.

[The Press, Memphis, Tenn.]

The fundamentals of Jesus' program are that all men are brothers and should live together on a basis of mutual service and equality of material supply; that Mammon, "the god of riches," is the chief enemy of God and His kingdom and must, therefore, be overthrown if the kingdom of God is to come, and that true worship consists, not in ceremonies and creeds, but in bringing all the doings of humanity into obedience to the law of love, thus enabling humanity to develop into the highest type of spiritual beings.

For about three centuries his followers obeyed him by living the communal life which he taught; but for sixteen centuries our so-called Christian civilization has rejected him for dogmas and creeds about him, making thereby a bloody track across the ages. None of the wars, poverty, and crimes of the historic past could have occurred if the world had accepted his program.

Is it not about time for people who believe in Jesus to demand that the world be run according to his plainly indicated plan? Why postpone the kingdom that he taught? Haven't we had enough of wars, poverty, crime, and unrequited toil? To oppose his plan, even negatively, as is so generally done, is to reject him and to merit his rebuke: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say." The heart of humanity cries out for Jesus' world program; for a social system economically just and ethically Christian. If the believers in Jesus continue, either from ignorance, selfishness, or prejudice, to oppose this plan, still will the kingdom come, though possibly through dire disaster and suffering; for God is certain to triumph, and woe be to the civilization or the creed that gets in His way.

The professed followers of Jesus have even now ample political power to make the will of God to be done on earth or to perpetuate the present Mammon-ruled social system, which is the opposite of His will; but they cannot do both, and there is no middle ground.

[Des Moines (Iowa) News]

"The need of the hour is religion." Right, Mr. Babson! But in seeking this greatly needed religion it must be kept in mind that the need is not for the religion of any particular creed or ism; not for a religion that puts on a sanctimonious face with its Sunday clothes and tries to get the best of every one for the other six days in the week.

We have had too much of that kind of "religion" already, and what we want and need now is not talks and promises about religious matters, but a religion that is demonstrable—the demonstration of which will really mean the putting in actual, daily practice the teachings of the Golden Rule and of Christ's Sermon on the Mount.

Then, and then alone, will the need of the hour be fulfilled; the petty differences that now seem to cause disruption will disappear, and that peace "which passeth all understanding" will become part—and the main part—of our everyday life.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

I WOULD like to say how highly the periodicals are appreciated in this household, and particularly THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, which literally goes on from strength to strength. Perhaps the paper is especially appreciated by us because we happen to be writers of fiction, and find in THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR an unfailing mine of information, inspiration, and encouragement. Indeed, the very broadness of view now taken in the printed page to disregard the suggestions which would confine Science and Scientists to the cloistered cell, and, rather, to make the best of circumstances—or, as the MONITOR once said, "Do the best under the shadow of the Almighty." It is the tremendous catholicity of the thought of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR which so greatly helps those who are out in the world. It practically helps men to keep mortal things in right perspective, whilst never losing sight and touch of the fact that the real and true experience is the only real idea at any time anywhere. As a playwright I can speak feelingly of the excellence of the theatrical news, and the intelligent manner of its summing up of British productions. And as a parent I can speak with even more gratitude of the inspirational quality of, in particular, the Home Forum page, which, all may rest assured, will educe the best and strongest and sweetest that is crying out in every child mind for encouragement, and reassurance, and unfoldment.

VOLUME XXII MAY 29, 1920 NUMBER 39

Joy and Gratitude

LAURA LOUISE GALSWORTHY

ONE modern dictionary gives this definition of gratitude: "An emotion excited by the possession or prospect of some good, that will give joy or make glad." Taking one step higher in our search for the explanation of this subject, we find quoted from Phillips Brooks' "Sermons in English Churches," "Thought and the struggle after truth are the best joys of the best men." Then we turn with relief to page 164 of Miscellany, by Mary Baker Eddy, and there we read, "What is gratitude but a powerful camera obscura, a thing focusing light where love, memory, and all within the human heart is present to manifest light." What a beautiful thought of radiation is here expressed, a consciousness so full of gratitude, so overflowing with the light of love that it must desire to include all and share with all with whom it comes in contact. Our Leader further tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 8), "If we feel the aspiration, humility, gratitude, and love which our words express,—this God accepts; and it is wise not to try to deceive ourselves or others, for 'there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed.'"

May it not be that often we try to deceive ourselves and others by endeavoring to assume a position we have not yet attained, talking from a metaphysical standpoint and with a courage we have not yet made our own? Here one may say: Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 264 of Science and Health, "We must look where we would walk, and we must act as possessing all power from Him in whom we have our being." Ah yes; we must act, not talk. What a wealth of meaning lies in the difference between those two words! When conditions all around us appear harmonious, and consciousness seems pervaded with a touch of sunlight, it is easy to fancy one's self on the mountain top compassionately ready to assist others to reach this lofty position, but should a testing time arrive and mental confusion and consequent physical discord assert themselves, then we need to pause and ask ourselves if we can stand by our declarations of Truth.

The infinitude of God's law is the fact which renders the belief in any other law null and void and gives us the necessary courage with which to go forward steadily, consistently endeavoring to demonstrate the truth of being, not only in words but in deeds, even when the senses seem persistently to deny and oppose our efforts. The eternal demand on man is for purity of thought, the single eye with which to perceive God's idea and to be ever mentally on guard against the mortal claim of impurity and double-mindedness. What a bugle call to thought and consequently to the realization of God's eternal allness comes to us from the words in the first chapter of Revelation, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." How the mortal sense of time and finity is swept away by this grand declaration, and the infinite wholeness and eternality of God's omnipresence and completeness is brought to light. Matter can set up no opposition, intervene with no obstruction, and occasion no action; for the perfection and operation of God's law in its ordered action is ever present and cannot be delayed, limited, or displaced. We can, therefore, if obedient to what we apprehend of Principle, rest in the knowledge of this perfect law and action. As there is no mortal mind to oppose or misdirect, we must endeavor with unfailing obedience to refuse to give way to the demands of the senses. To manifest true gratitude we must recognize the need of unswerving loyalty to Principle; and the joy of this demand obeyed, brings more clearly to our thought the fact that the true man is but the acting expression of God, perpetually His likeness, thus maintaining the perfect harmony and unity of the true idea. What an uplift and support this knowledge of our rightful and only true relationship to our heavenly Father is, and how grateful we are for the teaching of Christian Science, which exposes the counterfeit suggestions of mortal mind, and so reveals their impotence.

In this new-found joy, it is inevitable that thought turns with simple humility and tenderest gratitude to the noble woman who discovered and founded Christian Science, and who through selfless love and purity won the victory over error, leaving the path clearly defined for all to follow. Our Leader gives a perpetual call to her followers to overcome fear and demonstrate in their lives the fruits of her teachings. We often hear it said, "Why should there be so much striving and struggling to be gone through, if good is the only reality?" and the answer must be, "If we do not know good as the only reality, we give the chief place in our thoughts to the supposed power of evil and so fail to demonstrate the spiritual fact."

In our textbook we are patiently and lovingly shown on every page the allness of God and the nothingness of error, and yet mortal thought still clings tenaciously to old beliefs, constantly bringing forward experiences of the past to justify and establish the present suffering, when the great need is to yield up all belief in past, present, or future illusions for ever present spiritual fact. Sometimes we hear the remark, "Why am I suffering and so conscious of my body when all day I have been trying only to think rightly?" and this question needs the awakening reply, "To think rightly is to think ever away from self, and out and up to God." To possess our bodies with the truest sense of control is to turn away from the belief of a material body, and recognize only the embodiment of pure, joyous, and constructive thinking. With what positive authority and imperative command did Jesus rebuke and dismiss the error, and demand and call forth the perfect manifestation. Ever accompanying his wonderful works was a quiet humility and joyous gratitude to the Father, whose image and likeness he was so faithfully presenting. True gratitude ever carries with it the desire to give and radiate the joy which comes from the revelation of Truth as the consciousness which is the cause of our gratitude.

Searching mental analysis is often necessary to discover and uncover the errors which would often pass unnoticed unless we are animated by the most sincere desire to eliminate all that is unlike God. This process of elimination does not promote self-absorption, morbid self-contemplation, or condemnation, but lets in the light and sweetness of pure thinking, thoughts of love and tenderness and joy, which are the beacon lights illumining the path along the straight and narrow way we all must tread.

Every demonstration of Truth we make in the overcoming of mental or physical inharmony must bring to us a clearer glimpse of our true, spiritual birthright and call to our memory those beautiful words in the Bible, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Are we proving our gratitude by constructive, uplifting thinking when we allow some quick and thoughtless criticism or unloving word to escape unchallenged and unrecognized? Is joy expressed by the constant recital of our sufferings and the consequent self-pity and depression which accompany this recital? Years of the repetition of error neither constitute nor refute a fact, nor can we hope to attain a positive and harmonious state of consciousness when we allow such weak, negative thinking to obscure our perception of Truth.

Another suggestion put forward to discourage us is the subtle question, "Why do some attain so easily while others seem to make such slow progress?" This question recalls a well merited rebuke from the Master to one of his disciples when in reply to a question he said, "What is that to thee? follow thou me." It is certain that to attain we must individually strive to—and we can—follow in the footsteps of Jesus the Christ and learn to rejoice wherever and whenever we recognize progress for another or ourselves; for is not the truest joy and gratitude experienced in sharing with others thoughts about our Father-Mother God? With heartfelt gratitude for every gleam of spiritual light, may that verse of our Leader's hymn (Poems, p. 13), sing itself in our hearts:—

My prayer, some daily good to do
To Thine, for Thee;
An offering pure of Love, whereto
God leadeth me.

Righteous Judgment

MARY E. TURLEY

THE strong statement made by Christ Jesus, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," brings joy to every student of Christian Science. This joy is the right activity of Mind. Really to know is to understand. On page 505 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Understanding is the line of demarcation between the real and unreal." Christian Science practice makes this separation between the true and the false; but to detect that which is false we must first know that which is true. This detection of the false does not try to attach the wrong merely to a personality. Through the application of our understanding of the Principle of Christian Science we are enabled to see the wrong as a false sense about that which is true. This judgment blesses a man and never injures him.

Mrs. Eddy clearly states in Science and Health and her other writings the basic truth that we start with to prove the falsity of any claim of mortality. On page 151, for instance, she says, "All that really exists is the divine Mind and its idea, and in this Mind the entire being is found harmonious and eternal." Over and over she reiterates this truth in various words. The clearness with which this truth unfolds to us displaces any false belief with the divine idea.

Since God is All, the idea of God infinitely expressed is the truth about anything. Now every claim of error proves positively the presence of the truth, because the error is a false statement about that which is correct. Our work in Christian Science is not to strive to find out what so-called material sense is claiming but to know what God and His idea is, to understand His law and what His judgment about man is. As we work to prove that Mind and its idea is all there is, we find that the divine idea is all the man there is. God's man is never condemned by God, and cannot do what Mind has not done. Error is all that is condemned, the error of believing a falsity about God and His creation. What is usually looked upon as judgment is merely that which is accepted from sense testimony; whereas the only righteous judgment is knowing man as the son of God, capable of expressing infinite good. He cannot truly conceive of anything beyond infinity, since the infinite God is his only Mind. The true man, rightly judged and rightly judging, neither stands nor falls on account of mortal opinion. He cannot be prevented from expressing right activity nor can he be interfered with in expressing such activity by any suppositional opposite called a mind apart from God.

Man as the expressed image of God cannot do anything unlike God. Because he is the reflection of God, the real man is always doing that which is right, since God can be expressed only in uprightness, in purity of purpose and act. In fact, all the qualities of the divine Mind must find their expression as man; otherwise he would not be the expression of infinite Mind. Then it is not true man that is ever found to be discordant mentally, morally, or physically, but the mortal counterfeit of man that claims he is both good and evil and that he can do the wrong thing as well as the right. Even human reason admits that what really is can never become that which is not. For instance, the fact that two and two are four cannot be destroyed by any belief that the sum is five.

By like reasoning we learn that what really is always is. One's progress and growth depend upon what he accepts as the truth about man. As one knows what the true divine judgment is, there absolutely is no unrighteous judgment, for that which claims to be something wrong is only the seeming absence of good, and the absence of the truth has no real entity, for Principle and its idea is all there is.

Rest

EDITH ALLEN WATTS

TO be at rest is to know God. When one knows the allness, completeness of good, one ceases to anticipate or entertain erroneous suggestions. Mortal mind, in its continued contemplation of suppositional error, has writhed and suffered in the throes of its own imaginings, portraying those false pictures upon the human body as sin, sickness, pain, death. Such thoughts are not conducive to the state of mind which Webster defines as rest—"freedom from anything that wearies, disturbs, or troubles; peace of mind."

While Christ Jesus was beset with the multiplied agonies of a sin-cursed world, he saw and knew only God as good. Evil beliefs could not possess his thought. When they came they found nothing in him which responded to their subtle insinuations. One does not connect the thought of unrest with Jesus—nor of fear, worry, nervousness, doubt, dismay. Throughout the New Testament records, poise, quiet, rest, and confidence in God constituted the Master's attitude.

Physical weariness accompanies mental unrest. It is the result of wandering in the wilderness of human doubt and uncertainty without an established basis of good from which to proceed. When, weary of the unrest of mortal mind, we turn to God, however, Christian Science enables us to establish a definite basis whereon we may rest with scientific confidence. This basis is wholesome activity. As Mrs. Eddy implies when she says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," beginning on page 519, "The highest and sweetest rest, even from a human standpoint, is in holy work." In the same paragraph she writes, "God rests in action." This action is manifest in the healing of the sick and the sinner, and the raising of the dead. Mental unrest is constituted of beliefs of material existence. So the true rest is the understanding of spiritual existence and blessedness.

The Bible repeatedly indicates that rest is present when we are at one with God through Christ. The prophet Isaiah refers to a day when "the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve." And we remember Jesus' loving invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Mrs. Eddy pictures the climax of this state of thought which knows God, or the allness of good, when she says (Science and Health, p. 31): "It is the living Christ, the practical Truth, which makes Jesus 'the resurrection and the life' to all who follow him in deed. Obeying his precious precepts,—following his demonstration so far as we apprehend it,—we drink of his cup, partake of his bread, are baptized with his purity; and at last we shall rest, sit down with him, in a full understanding of the divine Principle which triumphs over death." Paul, after writing at some length upon the subject, confidently affirms, "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Since this is not only a desirable condition of Mind, but is absolutely requisite to the knowledge of God, let each examine himself, and see to what extent he is proving his expression of the Mind which "rests in action."

"Not my will, but thine"

FRANK BARNDOLLAR

AMONG the many things to be learned through the study of Christian Science is the true or spiritual sense of activity. We have so long listened to the interpretation of this quality by the so-called mortal mind, that it often seems that activity is a manifestation of physical exertion.

The Scriptures, however, clearly state that man was created by God, or Spirit; hence his manifestation must be of a spiritual nature and not of a material. He, then, who is truly active is giving evidence of such activity through the demonstration of the spiritual qualities of joy, happiness, harmony, and charitableness, and the result of this demonstration is healing and freedom from contrary and false conditions of inharmony, unhappiness, and uncharitableness. True activity, then, is essentially that perpetual and unerring desire to know and experience the perfect love of God and man—that infinite expression of eternal harmony wherein man's at-one-ment with his Father in heaven is clearly demonstrated. From this understanding of activity we gain also a clearer concept as to the purpose of God's creation, including man. It becomes quite evident that man as God's creation has a specific duty; that this duty is to bear witness to the eternal fact that God is. Through the demonstration of happiness, charitableness, and brotherly love we must perform this important mission.

To his mother's question, "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing," the child Jesus when found by his mother in the temple at Jerusalem made answer, "How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Again on the Mount of Olives, just before his betrayal, when the material senses were no doubt screaming to be heard, when thoughts of physical resistance were evidently uppermost in the minds of his disciples, as evidenced by the action of Peter, the great Way-shower calmly and firmly demonstrated true activity. When by resorting to the physical he could have so easily escaped this trial, he meekly stood his ground, realizing to its fullest import his mission. His appeal, as recorded in Luke, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done," together with that of the child in the temple, voiced accurately that infinite and absolute sense of true activity which is caused wholly by God and is entirely apart from any material beliefs. It is thus for all to follow his example, by being actively about the Father's business, active in knowing that God's will is always joyously good.

False Pride

ALEXANDER F. PRIMROSE

SOONER or later the earnest student of Christian Science comes up against what on careful and honest examination is seen to be a false sense of pride or fear of being laughed at. It is a question which every one has to face, and the forms in which it appears are without number. Christian Science is very welcome when it brings relief from sickness, dispels unhappiness, and removes religious doubts. It is, however, rather a different matter when it comes to giving up something which still seems desirable or which he thinks he will be laughed at for doing. This at any rate was the experience of one student.

After leaving school he had much the same experiences which a young fellow usually goes through. He took part in various sports, he joined the army, and, as was expected of him, he joined the church in which he had been brought up. He was, however, haunted by ill health and was rebellious at some of the theological doctrines of his church, such as that of predestination. Then he heard of Christian Science, and all this was changed. His chief desire then became to leave no stone unturned in order to learn more of this wonderful truth. He began attending the local Christian Science church and commenced studying the Lesson-Sermons regularly. But one Sunday morning something happened. While listening to the church notices being read by the First Reader, the thought came to him that, being just about nineteen, he could still attend the Christian Science Sunday school until he was twenty.

This thought he indignantly dismissed. Had he not finished with school and all that kind of thing? Had he not left home and gone out into the world? And how could one who had started on a professional career and was a soldier, possibly think of going into a Sunday school? Such were some of the arguments which seemed to justify his attitude. Then the thought came to him, Had not Mrs. Eddy some very sound reason for permitting pupils to be received in the Sunday school classes up to the age of twenty years? But he argued, "I have never been in a Sunday school in my life and I do not see why I should go into one now." Still he was not happy and he could not get rid of the thought that he ought to go into the Sunday school.

One day he remembered the story of how Naaman, the captain of the host of the king of Syria, went to Elisha to be healed of his leprosy, and his indignation at being told to go and wash himself seven times in Jordan. A new light was also thrown on that striking statement of Jesus, "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein." It was now seen that it had been a false sense of pride and fear that his friends might laugh at him, which was making him unwilling to go into the Sunday school. The battle was then over and he was ready to go and ask the superintendent if he might be allowed to attend for the few months until he became twenty. Looking back now he sees that the struggle which he had with himself and the lessons which he learned in the Sunday school have been a great help to him since then, and he is very grateful that he had to go through this experience. Needless to say he was never laughed at for being a Sunday school pupil.

"Converting the soul"

CARRA L. THORESON

THE Hebrew poet declared that "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." A dictionary gives as one definition of the verb to convert, "To change or turn from one state or condition to another," and it also gives as a definition of the word conversion, "A change from the service of the world to the service of God;" all of which accords with Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy makes it very clear on page 482 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" that soul is not some vague, intangible thing imprisoned in the body, only waiting to be set free by death, when it will unfurl its wings and fly away to fields Elysian, for there she declares, "As used in Christian Science, Soul is properly the synonym of Spirit, or God; but out of Science, soul is identical with sense, with material sensation."

From my earliest remembrance, as the daughter of a clergyman, I heard much about conversion. My conception of that process of mental transmutation, however, was most indefinite. I heard repeatedly that a "change of heart" meant the "conviction" of sin as well as an earnest desire to repent and be forgiven, which was supposed to produce an ecstatic state of spiritual bliss. However, as I was allowed to think for myself and did not attain to that beatified mental condition, neither could believe that a loving God could afflict His children who were patiently and obediently endeavoring to do His will, I drifted along on an uncertain sea of doubt and unrest until at length my bark was forced by physical suffering into the calm, peaceful waters of Christian Science. Here, at last, I learned what "converting the soul" really means.

As one persists in converting the thought from the material to the spiritual, one gains a clearer apprehension of Principle and idea, and consequently of divine government. To know that God and His spiritual idea are never separated for an instant, must result in the understanding that the Father governs His idea with unerring care and love. When some mental or physical discord seems present, it is necessary to turn instantly from the mortal thought which affirms the error to the spiritual truth revealed to us by our revered Leader in the teachings of Christian Science. Through obedience to these we may prove that the seeming discord is unreal, is as untrue as the dream of sleep. Divine Mind being the only power, we have nothing to fear when we are acknowledging this power, trusting all our affairs to the operation of divine law and living in obedience to its demands, knowing that everything will then be correctly adjusted according to God's own loving wisdom in the way that is best for us.

A complete reversal from the material sense of things to the spiritual sense, a change from wrong thinking to spiritual understanding, from wrong acting to right acting, proves the perfection of God's law, unfolding the understanding that God made all, and that as He could not make anything unlike good, all must be good; that He is the only cause, and that from a perfect cause no ill effect can come; hence the unreality of all seeming sin, sickness, and sorrow.

The first step in conversion through Christian Science usually comes in the way of physical healing of one's self or some dear one, or through a longing for a better knowledge of God and a greater peace of mind. Sometimes one is led to its investigation through friendly association with some Christian Scientist who is letting his light shine, and very frequently this leads to conversion. When, at a Wednesday evening meeting, one earnestly and lovingly expresses gratitude for some healing and for the knowledge of the truth that solves all our problems, he never knows how far-reaching the influence of these words may be, however simply or imperfectly expressed, for they may meet the need of some hungry seeker for spiritual truth, and conversion may follow. It is the love thus reflected that reaches and feeds the hungry heart; empty words never find a resting place. How necessary then it is to pray as our dear Leader teaches in the Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 4), where she says, "It shall be the duty of every member of this Church to pray each day: 'Thy kingdom come;' let the reign of divine Truth, Life, and Love be established in me, and rule out of me all sin; and may Thy Word enrich the affections of all mankind, and govern them;" and as she also writes in "No and Yes" (p. 39), "Prayer can neither change God, nor bring His designs into mortal modes; but it can and does change our modes and our false sense of Life, Love, and Truth, uplifting us to Him."

The demonstrable understanding of this beautiful truth replaces material sense with spiritual sense, and brings one into obedience to the ever present, ever operative, and perfect "law of the Lord," dispelling every discordant condition. This is indeed the true conversion.

Grace

BERNARD M. JOY

THE steady and gradual development of spiritual understanding as it unfolds in the thought of the writers of Scripture appears very clearly to the student awakened to the practical import of the Bible. A most interesting example of this unfoldment may be observed in a study of the word "grace" in both the Old and the New Testament. The frequency of its use and the peculiar emphasis and reference made thereto seem to attach a significance to its meaning and character not generally appreciated.

Designated in the early Scriptures as the bestowal of divine favor or pardon, grace slowly ascends the height of inspiration and becomes manifested in individual consciousness as the actual activity of the divine nature of God. Instead of a reluctant favor bestowed upon an unworthy subject by a fearful but just ruler, it gradually assumes the form of a benign and blessed influence in the hearts of mankind. Indeed, it appears to denote in the later Scriptures an essential element contributing to the success of the struggle between a human sense of things and a perfect understanding of the loving-kindness of God. To every earnest student seeking to know the way of salvation it is worthy of careful consideration.

To human sense, grace is assumed to be a highly desirable attainment expressing beauty of intellect, charm of manner, and loveliness of character. Too often, however, a false sense of education and social culture has led mankind into the error of believing grace to be a peculiar elegance of speech, action, and deportment acquired through the practice of certain forms and ceremonies; in other words, that grace is a sort of mental garment to be donned for personal display and attraction. Such a perversion of true comeliness and worth has only served to promote mortal duplicity, social diplomacy, and superficial politeness—the very soil of deceit, sown with seeds of hypocrisy. It seeks to cover beneath a cloak of pretty speeches, charming manner, and brilliant wit, a desolate waste of ghastly lies which are the very antipode of gentleness, purity, and good will—the embodiment of grace.

A careful study of the Scriptures seems to leave no doubt that the conscious and practical exercise of this virtue is vastly important and relatively essential to spiritual apprehension. It is a practice, not a precept. A kind and gentle disposition to promote the welfare of others is its abiding place. Strictly speaking, one cannot be said to possess grace, but to perform it. It must be understood, however, that it is not a perfunctory performance of religious duties, but rather the expression of gratitude in Christian activity for blessings already received, and the hope of continued growth.

That human aspiration should be reaching toward diviner conceptions was considered so important by Mrs. Eddy that she made it a part of her scientific interpretation of the Lord's Prayer; and she further states in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 4), "What we most need is the prayer of fervent desire for growth in grace, expressed in patience, meekness, love, and good deeds." It is certain that the exercise of this Christly attribute advances human progress and establishes individual freedom. Doubt, fear, deceit, impurity, selfishness, and discord cannot appear to the consciousness filled with Truth; and grace is that true capacity that enables the student to continue in chaste and perfect understanding.

It is perfectly apparent that the ability to express or manifest beauty of character confers also the ability to discern and appreciate a like quality in others. Thus the individual not only is blessed himself, but is enabled through compassionate humility to help others to rise to the consciousness of at-one-ment with our Father-Mother God—infinite Life, Truth, and Love. Grace and mercy temper justice. When justice would condemn the sick and sinful to the operation of an inexorable law, grace enables the Christian disciple to reach the wanderer in the darkness of pride, hypocrisy, lust, and self-will, and by gentle persuasion and kindly example, without fear, shame, or confusion, help him to return to the Father's house. Truly, the garment of grace is the beauty of holiness expressed in kind thoughts, loving words, and good deeds.

Brotherhood

JENNIE WALBRIDGE BRIGGS

WHAT is true brotherhood?
It is more than a name;
It glows in the heart,
A pure, holy flame
Of unselfish devotion
To duty and right,
That seeks the promotion
Of true love and light,
That sees in his brother
The true child of God
Born of the Spirit—
Not made of a clod.

Selected Articles

["Knowledge of God"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Feb. 19, 1920]

There is no particular need of urging mankind to seek after knowledge, as that has been the chief occupation of humanity since the beginning of time; but because it has mistaken material knowledge for true enlightenment, its search, in proportion to its success, has been very logically rewarded with the cumulated evil effects of materialistic knowledge. The knowing of evil is a travesty of knowledge, proved to be so in the first human taste of materiality. Furthermore, it is only a material so-called mind that can know evil and explore its ramifications. Material knowledge is based upon the evidence of the corporeal senses, and the farther material knowledge is extended, the nearer, necessarily, it comes to the essence of materiality, the carnal mind itself,—which is, as Paul declared, enmity against God,—and its product, material-mindedness, death. The search for merely material knowledge is something worse, then, than time wasted; it becomes a positive evil in that, instead of truly liberating thought, it more hopelessly confines it within the illusions and limitations of materiality.

It is necessary, of course, for the human being to seek knowledge; for progress is a law of being, and progress is possible only through the unfoldment of thought, the instrument of knowledge. A simple test may be applied to knowledge through which a man may determine whether what he is learning is a true development or whether it is leading him farther from the liberation that should follow enlightenment. The writer of Proverbs understood this test and knew that true knowledge leads a man nearer to God and that this is the end of wisdom. "If thou criest after knowledge," he said, "and liftest up thy voice for understanding; . . . then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God."

If it be conceded that God is omniscient, that is, all-knowing, it is clear that in Him, as Paul declared, "are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge;" and that spiritual man, in the likeness of God, must derive all that he knows or can know from divine Principle, the fountain of knowledge. Humanity's need, then, is to determine whether in all the knowledge that it seeks it finds God nearer and knows Him better. A man must know that Truth is divine Principle, if he is to have any way of ascertaining that what he knows is true. When he knows this he can no longer reasonably seek after false knowledge based upon the material senses. He recognizes it for what it is, ephemeral, limiting, an unreality which he must eventually discard. He labors, instead, for that spiritually scientific knowledge of God, or Principle, which includes all true knowledge, and which is indicated by Mrs. Eddy, when she writes on page 127 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "If God, the All-in-all, be the creator of the spiritual universe, including man, then everything entitled to a classification as truth, or Science, must be comprised in a knowledge or understanding of God, for there can be nothing beyond illimitable divinity."

If a man could immediately eschew all material knowledge, false systems, theories, and mortal modes, and know God as the Christ or spiritual man knows God, he would enter at once upon the experience of immortal, harmonious being; for to know God and man, His idea, aright is to realize eternal life, as Jesus taught when he said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." A mortal is the expression of mortal mind or a false sense of being. The human being, having accepted this false identity, or, perhaps more precisely, having it imposed upon him, does not at once wholly separate himself from false material knowledge, so that he may know only God, or Truth. The complete exchange of material for spiritual knowledge involves the utter conquest of all that constitutes material selfhood, and the understanding and expression of spiritual sonship with God. Sonship with God is the only reality of man, is real all the time, even while the mortal is believing that man's identity is material. The material selfhood is unreal every moment that a man is believing in its reality; and if he could wholly grasp these two facts, the mortal sense of existence would, of course, instantly disappear, and man as a son of God would be fully revealed. As it is the knowledge of the true that alone causes the false to disappear, the human being, because he is partly beclouded by false belief, is obliged patiently, persistently to strive for the knowledge of God. He gains a little here and a little there, and he finds his belief in material selfhood giving place to spiritual understanding, as he succeeds in "casting down imaginations," to use Paul's phrase, "and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

It is the prerogative of spiritual man to know God aright; and, because there is nothing beyond Mind's all-inclusive knowledge, it is impossible for him to know aught that God does not know. A man's access to true knowledge never suffers any real limitation. The only limit that appears is the human mind's own belief in a material selfhood apart from God, and the belief that man can know evil, the essence of limitation, as well as good. "Man," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 39 of "Unity of Good," "has no underived power. That selfhood is false which opposes itself to God, claims another father, and denies spiritual sonship; but as many as receive the knowledge of God in Science must reflect, in some degree, the power of Him who gave and giveth man dominion over all the earth."

All that a man attains, if his development be true, is the spiritual knowledge of God, divine Principle; and, included in this understanding, is the revelation of man's individual spiritual identity. In practical demonstration, this knowledge is manifested, as a man progresses, in whatever forms best meet his human needs, for its effect is to make more real to him good and that which best expresses good in his particular experience; and as good becomes the reality to him, materiality with its limiting influences naturally and inevitably begins to lose its apparent actuality and thus to disappear. "If we regard good as more natural than evil," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 3 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "and spiritual understanding—the true knowledge of God—as imparting the only power to heal the sick and the sinner, we shall demonstrate in our lives the power of Truth and Love."

[A. O. Freel in Medford (Ore.) Mail Tribune]

The teachings of Christian Science are the teachings of pure and undefiled religion as taught and practiced by Jesus. They are not new, nor did Mrs. Eddy invent them. She simply discovered and revealed to hungering humanity the spiritual meaning of the words and works of the prophets, the Master, and his disciples. As the result of her labors, vast multitudes have been healed physically, mentally, and morally. Thousands of these cases turned to Christian Science for healing after they had failed to get relief from material methods.

The teachings of Christian Science are in no way disproved by the passing away of Mrs. Eddy, nor does her passing in any way indicate that she "repudiated her doctrine." The fact remains that eternal Life is God, who knows no death. Through a false sense of life we may seem to die, but this does not in any way interfere with immortal life, which is revealed through spiritual understanding. "To be carnally minded is death;" wrote Paul in the eighth chapter of Romans, "but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Death, then, is the result of the belief of life in matter. Mrs. Eddy clearly sets forth the position of Christian Science in this regard on page 329 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" when, in speaking for herself and others, she says: "Because you cannot walk on the water and raise the dead, you have no right to question the great might of divine Science in these directions. Be thankful that Jesus, who was the true demonstrator of Science, did these things, and left his example for us." The teachings of Christian Science are absolute, but Christian Scientists are able to demonstrate these teachings only so far as they understand them.

Christ Jesus said, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." There are many examples given in the Bible of those who were spiritually minded enough to overcome death and lay off the flesh, as Jesus did at the ascension. These witnesses bring comfort, and serve as incentives to others to strive to let that Mind be in them "which was also in Christ Jesus."

[T. E. Davidson in Newcastle (England) Journal]

A clergyman in his lectures on "Christian Science," reported in recent issues of your paper said that "people could not accept the teaching of Christian Science and be loyal to our Lord." Does he mean by loyalty the acceptance of the interpretations of his particular church; for there are over one hundred sects all calling themselves Christian which have from the earliest times persecuted each other because they taught different things as Christian.

Christian Science is content to be judged by the test laid down in the New Testament, "Ye shall know them by their fruits." This religion is satisfying the spiritual needs of increasing numbers of people all over the world, and within its ranks are numbers of men who have been clergymen, doctors, and teachers of natural science. Many clergymen and ministers admit the debt of gratitude they owe to Christian Science in awakening them to the fact that they have neglected an important part of the teaching of our Lord. Christian Science is making practical to-day the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth, and it has no fear of condemnation. If it is of God, nothing can overthrow it.

[Robert G. Steel in Owosso (Mich.) Argus-Press]

An article appeared in a recent issue of the Argus-Press in which a traveling revivalist announced as the subject of his closing sermon, "Mischief Makers and Modern Religious Heresies, Being an Exposure of the False Doctrine of Christian Science," et cetera.

The announcement of such a subject in the manner indicated constitutes in itself an exposure of our critic's ignorance of Christian Science. Christian Science is based solely on the Bible. It accepts in their entirety the teachings of Christ Jesus. It enjoins on its adherents the emulation of Jesus in all his ways. Every command of Jesus to preach the gospel was accompanied by the equally imperative one to heal the sick. Christian Scientists accept the whole gospel of Christ Jesus, the undivided garment, and are healing the sick and the sinning, and casting out devils, evils, in obedience to the Master's commands and in strict conformity with the spiritual method exemplified by him. Can our critic truthfully claim as much for members of the denomination for which he stands sponsor? In the language of James, Christian Scientists might exclaim, "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" "Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works."

If it be making mischief for Christian Scientists to obey all of Jesus' instructions, it were better for mankind were all who call themselves Christians, engaged in it, since such mischief-making destroys only evil. If the Christian Scientist's insistence on the practice as well as the preaching of the whole gospel of Jesus the Christ be false doctrine, it can be false only to the man-made, erroneous, materialistic conception of Christian duty perpetuated by scholastic theology. Of such materialistic beliefs Mary Baker Eddy in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 134 writes as follows: "Man-made doctrines are waning. They have not waxed strong in times of trouble. Devoid of the Christ-power, how can they illustrate the doctrines of Christ or the miracles of grace? Denial of the possibility of Christian healing robs Christianity of the very element, which gave it divine force and its astonishing and unequalled success in the first century."

[Harry K. Filler in Sidney (Ohio) Journal]

In a recent issue of your paper we read of an address by a theologian, entitled "Inconsistencies of Christian Science," which is a fair example of how far afield one can go in the discussion of a subject he has not made his own as a result of practical demonstration. Christian Science is not theoretical; it is demonstrable. He speaks of the "large task we have before us to prove the inconsistencies of Eddyism;" of the fact that he has given this subject "and its chief doctrines" only "a brief study;" and then he proceeds in his way to explain away Christian Science, which is as old as God, and which must eventually be discerned, practiced, and taught by Christian churches everywhere—this because nothing less than a scientific and practical Christianity can ever satisfy the people of the world and save them. On page 355 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy states, "The charge of inconsistency in Christianly scientific methods of dealing with sin and disease is met by something practical,—namely, the proof of the utility of these methods; and proofs are better than mere verbal arguments or prayers which evince no spiritual power to heal."

For centuries the churches have preached their doctrines and creeds, for centuries the practical, scientific Christianity of Christ Jesus had been almost forgotten until the advent of Christian Science and its restatement of the new-old gospel truth. The theologians of Jesus' time, though versed in the letter of the law, were his chief critics and his bitterest opponents. They would have none of this man, or his practical, scientific Christianity. Is it not rather remarkable that the religion which most faithfully and most certainly patterns after the great Way-shower should be the one most bitterly attacked by the theologians of this day and age? Now, however, as in Jesus' time, they do not attack Christian Science, but their own erroneous sense of it. If all the critics of Christian Science really understood it, they would love it just as Christian Scientists do.

Is Christian Science Christian? In no least way does Christian Science depart from the teachings of Christ Jesus. Nothing that Mrs. Eddy ever wrote could be construed as indicating that she claimed Christian Science to differ from the teachings of Jesus the Christ.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Freethinker, London, England]

A correspondent, "Mimnermus," writing on the subject of Christian Science in a recent issue has completely missed the point. In his article entitled "A Saucy and Spurious 'Science,'" he vainly endeavors to show that Christian Science is an attempt to build a bridge between religion and science. No such attempt is therein made. There is hardly a word of the English language which has a wider meaning, and yet is so limited in meaning by the average person, than "science." It means according to Webster "knowledge classified and made available in work, life, or the search for truth."

Christian Science means Christian knowledge, and stands, as Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 127, "for everything relating to God, the infinite, supreme, eternal Mind." It is not, therefore, an attempt to build a bridge between religion and what is termed natural science, as our critic avers. It is purely the Science of Christianity. It will be acknowledged that all one will ever know about God must come through revelation. The unillumined human mind, which is the carnal mind spoken of by Paul, is "enmity against God." This so-called mind cannot know God, and must be replaced by the divine Mind, the Mind which was in Christ Jesus, before God can be understood. It was the Mind of Christ which gave to Mrs. Eddy the great spiritual understanding which enabled her to take the things of God and show them unto the world in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and her other writings.

One wonders if our critic has ever had the humility to stop and consider why so many people from all walks of life, who have professed almost every other form of religion, as well as atheists, agnostics, and freethinkers, have come into the ranks of Christian Science. It is because they have found therein a logical, reasonable, and, above all, demonstrable religion. They have found that Jesus the Christ was the most scientific man the world has ever seen, and through the light that has been thrown on the Bible by the Christian Science textbook the priceless treasures it contains have been revealed. I do not think even "Mimnermus" would say they were all wrong and that he was right. I would advise him to study the textbook a little more carefully the next time without prejudice, and honestly try to see the point of view of the Christian Scientist.

Truth's Revelation

LAURA GERAHTY

TRUTH stood beside me, white and strong and clear
In the dim twilight, but I could not see;
Bound by the chains of discontent and fear,
I dared not move to claim such ecstasy.

Joy was unknown to me till that dull day
When Love removed the scales from off my eyes;
'Twas but a little thing—a sunbeam ray
Broke through the clouds and stilled an infant's cries.

I thought my burden great. The infant's care
On such slight shoulders, was it not as great to bear?
O coward heart, where is thy faith? I cried;
And there stood Truth, all radiant, at my side.

The Impotence of Evil

The belief in what is popularly known as dualism is as old as the human mind itself. The primitive man, conscious of the storm, the avalanche, and the volcano, came almost naturally to regard nature itself as the seat of everything which had terror for him. In the existence of these things he founded his worship of nature, with the result that the storm god, or the personification of the storm, gradually drew to himself the worship originally extended to the storm itself, so that there grew up thousands of "other gods," the worship of some one or another of which was perpetually drawing the Israelites from the sterner religion of monotheism. Now as the altars and temples of these gods were raised, as the groves in their honor were planted, and the ritual of their worship was established, there developed around them a priestcraft which undertook not merely to speak in their names, as the priests of Delphi spoke for the oracle, but to demand contributions for them of gifts and sacrifices, to stand as mediators between them and their victims, and even to disseminate penalties for disobedience.

Out of such conditions there arose gradually the whole army of magicians, necromancers, divinators, and exorcists, who levied such a tribute on human ignorance in the ages of darkness, and from whom have descended those traffickers in mental manipulation who claimed to be able to control the will of their neighbors, in medieval and even in comparatively modern times, through recourse to spells, incantations, and magic, and in later days through what have come to be known as mesmerism and hypnotism. The descendant of these Egyptian magicians and these necromancers of Asia, in more recent times, was the German doctor, Franz Mesmer. His theory, which has ever since been known as mesmerism, predicated that there was a power which could be exercised over the human body, similar to the attraction of metal to the magnet. This theory placed the human being at the disposal and under the control of the person capable of exercising such control, in a way which linked up the pretensions of the priests of Egypt with the pretensions of the philosophers of the French Revolution, in what might be termed a series of consecutive centuries of mental suggestion. Such an idea was only conceivable in the terms of the dualism which proclaimed the joint powers of good and evil, and which gave the greater power rather to the devil, willing to do evil, than to the deity endeavoring to protect man through his benevolence. Thus Mrs. Eddy summed up the whole hideous theory, with unerring accuracy, on page 103 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," when she declared: "As named in Christian Science, animal magnetism or hypnotism is the specific term for error, or mortal mind. It is the false belief that mind is in matter, and is both evil and good; that evil is as real as good and more powerful. This belief has not one quality of Truth."

Inasmuch, however, as natural science is willing to concede that matter is merely a phenomenon produced by the human mind or by material energy, it is manifest that any physical activity capable of producing evil is something entirely apart from good; is, indeed, the fruit of that symbolic tree of good and evil, the eating of which produced death, as distinguishable from that of the tree of life. But since life can know nothing of death, and is therefore eternal, a belief in a life ending in death can be nothing but the counterfeit of true life. Man, then, in the image and likeness of God, Life, is a perfect spiritual idea, of which man in the image and likeness of the human mind or energy is but the material counterfeit.

Now the human mind, according to the theory of the mesmerists, claims that it has the power to produce upon the human body the physical results it chooses, and it claims to be able to do this through what is known as mental suggestion. It is here that the gulf which yawns between heaven and hell separates the supposititious healing of the human mind from the healing wrought by the divine Mind. The mental manipulator claims to be able to make a man who is well believe that he is sick, or a man who is sick believe that he is well; but the Christian Science practitioner, realizing that there is no power but good, and in reality no man but the image and likeness of God, destroys the lie of sickness which is oppressing the human being, and so leaves the indestructible fact of health manifest even to the physical senses. This is precisely the healing to which Job referred when he declared, "In my flesh shall I see God."

The power of good which produces this result is, of course, omnipotent, and, as a result, when a man has once been healed in Christian Science, a relapse becomes an impossibility. All the powers of evil that may be enlisted in the effort to produce it are impotent. Thus, as Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 442 of Science and Health: "Neither animal magnetism nor hypnotism enters into the practice of Christian Science, in which truth cannot be reversed, but the reverse of error is true. An improved belief cannot retrograde." In other words, when a case of sickness has once been healed in Christian Science, that belief of sickness has been destroyed, and there is no power of evil which can ever reproduce it. If, consequently, a patient who has been healed seems to be suffering from a relapse, what is obviously taking place is that the victim is suffering from some belief in a supposititious law of reversal, which supposititious law is itself only a counterfeit of law, and as such can be destroyed just as the original belief of sickness was destroyed.

Now it matters not in the least whether the relapse is suffered by a man who is physically sick, or in a man's business, or in any other form of human activity. Every form of human activity is legitimate or illegitimate in proportion as it reflects Principle, good, or reflects some belief in evil. Therefore, to imagine that a physical manifestation of good, which has been brought about through the demonstration of Principle, can be destroyed or injured, is to look for something exactly as hopeless as the relapse of a case which has been healed by Truth. Mental suggestion may, it is true, produce in a man's business the symptoms of relapse, as it may produce these in a man's body. But all that is happening is that some mental suggestion is, for the moment, being successful, so far as the human senses are concerned, in producing the effect of the supposititious law of reversal. And it is for this reason that Mrs. Eddy has written, on page 419 of Science and Health: "If your patient from any cause suffers a relapse, meet the cause mentally and courageously, knowing that there can be no reaction in Truth. Neither disease itself, sin, nor fear has the power to cause disease or a relapse." What, of course, is claiming to be able to cause this appearance of reversal, is the claim of the human mind to effect good and evil. For centuries this human mind has been struggling against Truth, in a hopeless effort to prevent its own annihilation; and its want of intelligence is manifest in the fact that in the twentieth century it is relying on the same methods as it relied upon when the sorcerers of Egypt imitated the signs of Moses, when the witch of Endor produced the appearance of Samuel, and when the exorcists of Ephesus pretended that evil could be expelled by evil. The foolishness of error was never more clearly manifested than in the attempt of error to reverse the action of good in the face of the fact that the centuries have demonstrated the impotence of evil.

The Sure Basis

OF what can one be really sure? In time of trouble or in time of calm, people of all sorts find themselves asking this question. To turn to matter for an answer is in vain. Who, indeed, truly knows that there is such a thing as matter? Apart from what the mortal senses would claim, there is no semblance, even, of proof that matter is real. The human senses, of course, give no firm basis on which to reason. So often are they fooled that sooner or later one must conclude not to rely on them in any case but to seek instead, quite aside from them, the whole truth which they would try to distort and reverse. What is called knowledge gained through research by means of these supposed senses cannot be exact or true. It all, therefore, must be replaced by the surety of divine Science—Christian Science, which springs from the one Mind alone and can be denied by no mortal sense of things.

To the one who seems attacked by disease, either acute or chronic, a drug or serum can afford no certain relief. Few would pretend that any of the most modern methods of caring for the sick will result in perfect health. How could these methods, when true health is wholeness of Mind expressed, not a mere phase of a belief in matter? So, in turning to Christian Science, the seeker for speedy and complete healing must be glad first of all that he has Mind to depend on. Life, or Mind itself, is the one sure cause for all real action. This each one may rejoice in for himself. No one needs to be told by some one else that he is alive. For his very being, there must be some present source, and this is simply Spirit, Mind, God. Just to know this is indeed good and wholesome.

Tired of the turmoil of mortal seeming, the many are glad to turn to God. Yet creeds and dogmas that always were false, because based on supposed matter, never can suffice to show what God is. A false belief about God cannot take the place of the one Mind which can be proved in daily action to be the cause for right action. Over and over again the sincere seeker finds any mortal sense of formal worship to be lacking. No matter how stately or ancient a mere form may have seemed, it is by no means a rock on which truly to stand. Only those who would be inert, torpid, could ever seem content with less than the alert doing of the boundless divine Life which is Mind or Spirit. To know that the one Mind governs man in the divine likeness requires awake living always. From the extreme of belief in either the pains or the pleasures of the mortal senses, one needs to turn wholly to the endless means of joy in Spirit alone, not to the other extreme of void usage. What is vital is the thorough knowing and proving that the divine Mind does produce right action here and now, despite any former seeming.

The well-known lines of Browning,

> One who never turned his back but marched breast forward, give a glimpse of the true sureness. Never can the going forward on the real basis be confused or hindered by any doubts that the so-called mortal mind would try to suggest. Because the divine Mind and its action is all there is, any mortal fears have to vanish, since they never have been real. Try as one might, one could not turn his back on Spirit and reject the one true God, for the Mind which is divine Love maintains all there is to real being. Humbly but boldly, then, each one has to go forward for himself, ever sure that divine Love sustains only righteous action. The fact that Life is, proves that it cannot cease to be. So what can there be to fear?
> Never doubted clouds would break,

Often one turning to Christian Science asks for some words or sentence to think of in the midst of seeming trouble. Such an asking is, of course, but the desire for something sure to cling to. Yet no mere form of words could ever mean surety. Since words merely give impulse to thought, any phrases that one reads or hears should simply set one to work knowing the truth for one's self in place of any belief in matter. The truth is, that the divine Mind knows only its perfect concept, which any false belief would so vainly oppose. Being boundless, divine Truth expressed can never be confined to human words and phrases. Each one, therefore, must soon learn through Christian Science to reason rightly for himself at all times and not just to repeat words. The true meaning of God and His image and likeness appears as ever new in daily practice. Let each sincere student of Christian Science use such words as are needful for his own clear knowing at any time and not try to cling to less than the whole wide range of the divine Mind and its idea.

Now on page 151 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says plainly: "All that really exists is the divine Mind and its idea, and in this Mind the entire being is found harmonious and eternal. The straight and narrow way is to see and acknowledge this fact, yield to this power, and follow the leadings of truth." To study these or any other words of Mrs. Eddy is to see something of the sure basis of Christian Science, a basis, though, far broader than any few words can express. Christian Science is enough for all, because it fulfills each right desire with the true idea, in all manner of cases. It is the thorough truth, proving the presence of the Christ here to-day and always, "even unto the end of the world."

As Mrs. Eddy says again on pages 259 and 260 of "Miscellaneous Writings:" "Truth is the power of God which heals the sick and the sinner, and is applicable to all the needs of man. It is the universal, intelligent Christ-idea illustrated by the life of Jesus, through whose 'stripes we are healed.' By conflicts, defeats, and triumphs, Christian Science has been reduced to the understanding of mortals, and found able to heal them." And on page 47 of "Unity of Good," she declares: "Nowhere in Scripture is evil connected with good, the being of God, and with every passing hour it is losing its false claim to existence or consciousness. All that can exist is God and His idea." These are, of course, but a few of the passages in which she has stated the one basis that is sure.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

RENO, NEV.—Ground will be broken next Monday [March 15] preparatory to the erection of a $50,000 home for First Church of Christ, Scientist, at the corner of Court and Granite Streets. The edifice will stand on the elevation which Court Street climbs in its winding course west of Virginia Street. First Church of Christ, Scientist, was incorporated in 1907 and since that time has grown to be a flourishing institution. Services were held originally in the Odd Fellows Auditorium, but in recent years the Christian Science church has been using Masonic Hall.

Reno Gazette.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—Construction of a new edifice at the northwest corner of Sixth and Swan Streets, to be started not later than July of this year, was voted Friday night [March 5] at a meeting of the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist. The building is to be ready for occupation in 1921. The total cost is expected to be $100,000.

Terre Haute Post.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.—After having been put aside for several years, the plan of building a new Christian Science church has come up again, and at the meeting Monday night [March 8] it was discussed and approved. The church building at 48 Parkwood Boulevard has been outgrown by the congregation, which averages two hundred, and will be sold.—Schenectady Gazette.

The Lectures

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Rev. G. Martin, who said in part:—

The preaching of Jesus was a declaration of the truth about God, and his healing was a demonstration of this truth. It was thus by means of preaching and healing that the Master proved his Messiahship. And in his example we have the only right method in doing the work of God. For three centuries the early church followed in the footsteps of the Wayshower, and healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, and raised the dead, as Gibbon, the historian, bears out.

Owing to the spread of materialistic beliefs, the healing became divorced from the preaching, and soon got into the hands of officialism, the divine unity of thought and deed was destroyed, and things have drifted until they are as we see them to-day. But they are not to remain so. There is the promise of a better and more glorious future. Truth is again being restored by declaration and demonstration. The second coming of the Christ, Truth, is at hand, and this renewed presence and power of divine activity is to be found in Christian Science.

LONDON, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Captain Geoffrey Wilkinson, who said in part:—

In the Preface to her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, says, "The time for thinkers has come." Those words were written many years ago, and, since they were written, thought has been increasingly active; but the trouble has been that the world has known of no definite basis from which to think. Now Christian Science has provided such a basis, turning as it does to God as the cause or Principle of all existence and making clear God's nature and man's relation to God. Nor is its teaching on these subjects merely theoretical; on the contrary, it is intensely practical, for it is demonstrated in the healing of sickness, the destruction of sin, and the overcoming of every form of evil and discord.

CINCINNATI, OHIO (Second Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by John K. Peyton, who said in part:—

All the misery in the world is due to ignorance of God. All the sorrow, sickness, resentment, crime, and oppression can be destroyed through the spiritual understanding of God. Throughout the ages there has lived and will live, but one healer. Mankind needs no other, for this healer is the Christ, Truth. An understanding of this is gained through the study of Christian Science, which destroys the false beliefs of sin, disease, and death.

The Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

BELOIT, WIS. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Ralph M. Fisher, who said in part:—

Some of the problems which human beings wrestle with may be classified as questions of finance; efforts to lessen deprivation; sin, such as greed, envy, malice, jealousy, and hate, causing inharmony among friends and families; sickness and death. These same conditions manifested individually show us the basic thought which, collectively, is the cause of so much of the present unrest throughout the world. We gain little by attempting partially to solve these questions: we cannot rest secure on a false sense of harmony. Christian Science makes the claim—and this claim has been substantiated—that it can solve these problems, for the reason that it is a practical religion which can be successfully applied to any and all phases of mortal discord. To the one who solves a problem correctly in Christian Science, the solution remains everlastingly and eternally true. Then there is but one way effectively to clear up the individual consciousness, which must necessarily have its effect collectively in the world, and that is by the application of one's understanding of the Christ, Truth.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Seventh Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Howard Lovewell Cheney, who said in part:—

Christian Science has become a subject of world-wide interest among thinking people, because in this practical religion is recognized the most potent factor in the solution of our individual and national problems. The social and industrial unrest which seems everywhere to pursue men and nations as the aftermath of the World War, is proving the futility of human ways and wisdom in the affairs of everyday life, and humanity is crying out as never before for relief from all forms of suffering. Multitudes are finding the answer in the practical teachings of Christian Science, through which the prophecies and promises of the Scriptures are being fulfilled. The precedent for this Christianly scientific system of healing was established by Jesus of Nazareth.

For many hundreds of years the power of God, which made possible the so-called miracles of Jesus and his immediate followers, was to a large degree lost sight of; but through the revelation which came to Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, this ever operative divine Principle has been spiritually discerned in this age and is again being demonstrated in every part of the civilized world in obedience to the direct command of our Master, with "signs following."

GREENFIELD, MASS. (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Miss Marian B. Atherton, who said in part:—

There has never been a time in the history of the world when people have not been searching for happiness. Their ideas of that much desired state have been many and varied; but as each individual faces the question squarely, he reaches the conclusion that happiness is unattainable without freedom from the pangs of sickness, the bondage of sin, the haunting fear of death. To many thousands, in many parts of the world, Christian Science has brought the glad message that such freedom is attainable here and now.

Greenfield Recorder.

COLUMBUS, OHIO (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Frances P. Hershey, who said in part:—

We are living in an age of change and dissolution. The old order of things is passing away, and all things are becoming new. Mankind is awakening from its dream of dull contentment and unthinking acceptance of the cold conventionalities of custom and materialism. Human hypotheses and dogmatic creed no longer satisfy the demands of an awakened humanity.

Confusion and unrest may for a season seem to be the result of this breaking up of time-honored systems and theories; but out of this débris will rise a world whose thinking is based upon Principle, and whose living is ordered in accordance with an understanding of the one governing intelligence of the universe. This is what Christian Science is giving to the world,—a scientific, demonstrable knowledge of the laws of divine Mind, and this is the panacea for all troubles, by means of which mankind will avail itself of the truth which Jesus said would make us free, and rise into that consciousness possessed by John when he said, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away."

LONDON, ONTARIO, CANADA (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Wilkins Shuff, who said in part:—

We look out to-day across a storm tossed world. The very foundations of human society are rocking under the fierce assaults of mortal passions; and humanity, awakening from its long nightmare of materiality, is crying out, like the Philippian jailer of old, "What must I do to be saved?" On every hand thinkers are advancing one theory or another for the pressing problems of to-day, but it is safe to say that never in the history of the world have men been so keenly aware of the necessity of reliance on a Power outside of themselves.

Two thousand years ago the greatest thinker that the world has ever known, lived and taught amongst the simple fisher folk of Galilee, and to-day Christian Science is revealing to a world distraught that in Christ's Christianity alone lies the perfect solution, the universal panacea, for all the woes of men.

OROVILLE, CALIF. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Louise B. Gregory, who said in part:—

The mission of Christ Jesus was to bring healing to a world filled with sin, disease, and death. The minds of the people were so filled with false beliefs that his teachings could scarcely be understood by them. The greatest need in the world to-day is a knowledge of God, and this comes only through Jesus the Way-shower. Christian Science is unveiling God to men as Love, and is teaching us to love as Jesus loved, to think as Jesus thought; and it is only by following him as "the way, the truth, and the life" that we understand God and His creation which is continually unfolding to his children.

LONDON, ENGLAND (Fourth Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by A. O. Butler, who said in part:—

We have heard a great deal lately of the word "revolution" as being associated with the overthrowing of some form of tyranny or despotism and accompanied by bloodshed and destruction. To-night, however, we are to hear about a different kind of revolution, a revolution of thought, a mental revolution, directed against the tyrannical and despotic beliefs of the human mind. This mental revolution comes with the power of divine Love and thus regenerates the human mind and lifts it out of its illusions about sin, disease, and death.

Testimonies of Healing

In love and gratitude for all that Christian Science is to me I send this testimony, trusting it may prove helpful to others. I had been an earnest seeker for Truth since girlhood, but the peace that "passeth all understanding" was never mine until I found it in the teachings of Christian Science. I had never heard of Mrs. Eddy or Christian Science until I picked up a book in the library, the title of which appealed to me instantly, and I immediately wrote to a bookseller in England for the book, which was "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

At that time I was in great need of healing, as a severe illness had left me in a very nervous state with a great dread of death. Through the reading of this book I was entirely healed. That was eight years ago, and since then I have had many healings—some instantaneous. When my beloved husband passed on I was a stranger in a strange land, but the kindness and help given me brought the realization of God's love and care for us at all times and in all places. I was able to continue my journey, of some thousand miles, alone, four days afterwards and to work out many problems.

I thank God for the truth that is Life. May my life attest my sincerity. My gratitude to Mrs. Eddy is deep and sincere for her faithful work, and I thank all who have helped me in my great need. Words could not express my gratitude for our literature, which is such a help in my daily life.—(Mrs.) Kate Stokes, North Adelaide, South Australia.

For twenty years I suffered from varicose veins and cramps in the legs, and after each slight exertion suffered intense pains, especially during the night. The doctors told me I could not be freed from this trouble as it was due to heredity, and that I would have to bandage my legs in order to avoid greater trouble, which I did for twelve years. Through my sister and brother-in-law I heard of Christian Science about the year 1914, and read several pamphlets and Heralds. Although I did not wholly understand them, I believed every word I read, and it was my greatest desire to learn more of this teaching. One morning, after having again spent a painful and sleepless night, I put aside my bandages, declaring that God alone could heal me. I continued reading Christian Science literature, and my faith made me whole. After three days I was free from all pain. For several years I have had no pain, nor have I worn the bandage. Through this sudden healing and freedom I became firmly convinced that I had found the truth.

I also wish to relate a healing of blood poisoning, which to mortal sense was very dangerous. In July, 1917, my finger became inflamed under a ring, but I paid no attention to it, believing it would disappear. After a few days, however, not only the finger but the whole hand was swollen, and I suffered intense pain. On the following day the swelling had extended to the shoulder and the arm was covered with large and small painful knots, and I was scarcely able to move it. My husband, who at that time was not interested in Christian Science, insisted upon consulting a physician, but I refused to do this, declaring that I wanted only Christian Science treatment. After some hesitancy my husband consented, and a practitioner was asked for help. Shortly after the treatment was begun I experienced relief and the next day the inflamed part opened, the poison passed off, and the pain was gone. During this experience my faith in God remained unshaken. I clung steadfastly to the truth that God alone could help me; and He did help me wonderfully. Since knowing of Christian Science my family and I have received much help through the application of the truth and many instantaneous healings have been effected, among which are the healing of several other sicknesses. Through our understanding we are all healthy. For all these beautiful proofs of the power of divine Love I wish to express my deepest thanks to God. I am much more grateful, however, for the spiritual knowledge gained of Him and His wonderful creation. Through this spiritual awakening I experienced the peace "which passeth all understanding."

Christian Science has also helped us greatly in the bringing up of our children, and we are especially grateful for the privilege of Sunday school instruction, through which they have advanced physically and mentally. I am truly grateful for having found Christian Science and it is with deep love I think of our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, through whose wonderful work the world is being freed.

(Mrs.) Martha Rust, Hamburg, Germany.

I feel it a privilege to write my testimony of the many blessings that have come to me since learning about Christian Science. My first healing took place about ten years ago when I was cured of nasal catarrh. The doctors had said they could do nothing but check the spreading of the condition. I told the doctors I could be healed in Christian Science and they answered they would like to see it, and they did.

About four years ago I was suffering from a disease that affected me so that I could do nothing, and I suffered severely. My children insisted on having a doctor. He was puzzled about the disease and said he did not know what ailed me, so called in a second, then a third and a fourth. They all said they did not know what the trouble was, so wanted me to have a picture taken and send it to the medical school. I would not consent to it for I knew I could be healed in Christian Science. After a few treatments from a practitioner I slept well and began to walk. In a short time the demonstration was complete, and my eyes were also healed so that I have not had to use glasses since.

I owe my gratitude to God, and to Mrs. Eddy for her divine revelation; also to the dear practitioner who so lovingly helped me all along the way.

(Mrs.) Anna Gilbert, Wichita, Kan.

Having been greatly benefited by the reading of others' testimonies, I am constrained to express some of my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. In two treatments I was entirely healed of rheumatism. The tobacco habit, after twenty years' indulgence, left me when I was reading the book Science and Health. The social drink habit, also profanity, dropped away from me. I have received wonderful benefits in my business experience. My daily prayer is to know more of this truth which is blessing and healing mankind.—G. Floyd Beach, Kansas City, Mo.

The study of Christian Science came to me through the urgent need of help in sickness. I had always been healthy except for a bowel trouble. This trouble suddenly grew worse, followed by severe headaches; then followed a peculiar form of nervousness, sleepless nights, and attacks of epilepsy, which became more frequent and severe. Effects upon the proper action of my lungs were already apparent, and very little hope was held out for me by physicians.

A neighbor told my mother of the healing of her daughter's eyes through Christian Science, and absent treatment for me was asked for. A most wonderful feeling of peace soon possessed me. I threw away all medicines and material remedies of any kind, and have never since felt any need for them. At night sleep came easily. I could eat anything with no bad after effects. The discords did not all disappear until more than a year, but I was happy meantime, feeling no sense of discouragement, since a great blessing, outside the healing, had come into my life. I am well and strong now and have proved many times that Christian Science is a practical help in need, no matter in what form the need may appear.

Through the study of Christian Science the Bible has become a helpful and interesting study. Many errors in my disposition are gradually losing their hold, others are constantly being uncovered for destruction. I am indeed thankful for being able to grasp more clearly the meaning of eternal Life. My great desire is to pay the debt of gratitude I owe for all that is being revealed to me through this study. I am truly grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who so lovingly worked to show us the way of Truth, and grateful for all the activities established by her and so faithfully carried out by students of Christian Science all over the world.

(Miss) MAY E. DESPER, Amarillo, Texas.

I have often wondered if I could ever tell just how grateful I am for Christian Science. About five years ago while visiting my mother I became interested in this healing truth, and from that day to this I have never used any other means for healing. I have found it applicable to every phase of need, never having the least fear that any problem, no matter how great or small, could not be met in Science.

I have been healed of the belief of lung trouble and chronic bowel trouble and many other physical ailments. I had a great habit of seeing faults in others, which has been nearly overcome, and for this I am indeed thankful. I am very grateful to God for leading me into this great truth of being; also thankful to our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.

MRS. GEORGE CALLOS, Denver, Colo.

I would like to acknowledge with gratitude the good and healing that we have received since coming into Christian Science. It was in January, 1918, that we were led into this true light through the healing of our little daughter. We had taken her to a well-known physician in a near-by city for the examination of a growth and swelling on her face, which had been there for about three months. He examined her and also had an X ray taken of the growth. It was pronounced a tumor and the only hope that he could give was an operation that would disfigure the child for life. I had been raised in Science and had witnessed the healing done by Christian Science in my own case and others, but had drifted away, and, to be honest, had thought it was too hard to practice and that I could get along without it. We decided to turn to Christian Science for help, as we were at the point of despair. We called on a practitioner the next day, and through her loving and tireless work the child was healed. The healing was seemingly slow but it made us strive the more.

We are grateful for this healing and especially to Mrs. Eddy, who has given to the world the truth that we can apply in our daily work. Last year I was able, through the understanding of my wife and myself, to overcome an attack of influenza while at work; I have been healed of insomnia and other claims. The desire for tobacco has vanished through the study of this Science, and other habits are also being overcome as more is understood and put into practice. I am grateful for the authorized literature, also for class instruction, which has enabled me to see more clearly the truth as revealed in Christian Science.

R. A. HAYNES, Waterloo, Ill.

I can testify as to the truth of the above testimony of the wonderful healing of our little daughter. I also am thankful for the blessings received through Christian Science. Through reading Science and Health I have been able to leave off glasses while reading. I am also thankful for the privilege of class instruction and for the authorized literature.

(Mrs.) CHRISTINE HAYNES.

In turning to Christian Science at a time of great intellectual worry and uncertainty as to life in its larger meanings, I have been so wonderfully helped in every way that it has awakened in me a real desire to understand spiritual truth, to turn away from the human mind, and to learn something of the vastness of the one Mind. During the first weeks of study I left off wearing glasses, and the headaches which had perpetually troubled me left me and have never returned; from the very beginning also I found that Christian Science helped me to overcome attacks of depression and gradually to arrive at a more orderly and dependable state of thinking.

In the early part of 1918 I had what I suppose would be called a nervous breakdown, accompanied by extreme exhaustion. I had thought of myself as acutely sensitive and as having inherited a delicate heart, and had made a reality of the need of certain foods which were not available then, and in other ways I had accepted the belief that health was dependent on heart, brain, and outward circumstances. I had the kind help of a practitioner at first, until I was able to help myself, and within six months of that time I was taking long bicycle rides in very hilly country in all weathers, frequently at night and amid traffic.

My complete healing has been slow, and there is more earnest work to be done before I can say, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." I have, however, been growing stronger each day and have been able to do anything necessary in the way of work. I have come to a better state of health by giving up the wrong thought of health in the body and by understanding in some degree, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 120 of Science and Health, that "health is not a condition of matter, but of Mind." I have exchanged the old anxious thinking about problems of work and affairs for a less self-centered and more sincere desire for usefulness in the world, and I find now that my thought habitually turns to Christian Science when confronted by any difficulty. There is nothing too great and nothing seems small, for every least demonstration results in the uplifting knowledge of being nearer to the truth of Life.

I deeply appreciate the privilege of being a member of a branch church and of being able to share in the work of making this Science more widely known. For the writings of Mary Baker Eddy and for her life and for all that she has done to destroy limiting beliefs and build up humanity anew in the likeness of its Maker, I can never in words alone express my gratefulness.

(Mrs.) HILDA B. EVENNETT, London, England.

I have long had the intention of testifying to what Christian Science has done for me. I began to read Christian Science to see what it was, and after reading the Sentinel several months I left off my glasses. I had used them for nearly seventeen years, and I have not worn any glasses for over five years.

One day I slipped and fell, hurting my shoulder and arm so I could not undress myself, but in reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and the Sentinel, and by knowing the truth, my shoulder and arm were healed in a short time. When my little girl was six weeks old I started down cellar to get some things for breakfast. I stepped too far and, missing the first step, I fell. One foot turned around and was under me when I fell, and when I got up I could not step on my foot. Knowing, however, that God is All-in-all and is ready to help in time of trouble, in five minutes' time I walked up the steps all right and was on my feet, working all day, and the next day I walked three miles and carried my baby. I have not had any trouble with that foot since and that is over three years ago. I did not know that my baby was cutting teeth till I saw four in her mouth. She was free from any trouble when she was cutting them. I have overcome other ailments by reading Science and Health, and I am grateful for what Christian Science has done for me and hope this testimony may help others.—Mrs. Lewis Gehring, Delta, Ohio.

I became interested in Christian Science through a dear friend, who was healed of stomach trouble of years' standing. A short time afterwards I was overcome with a nervous breakdown. I asked for Christian Science treatment, which was given me late one afternoon. That night I slept soundly and when I awoke in the morning it seemed as if I never had felt so well. Through that treatment also I was healed of constipation and a weak heart. I have had many other demonstrations. Influenza was overcome in a few hours. Glasses, which I had worn for two years and a half, are no longer used. My little son, past ten years old, has never had any medicine, and has been healed of adenoids. I could tell of many more demonstrations through this wonderful truth. I am grateful for the Christian Science periodicals and thank God for Mrs. Eddy and for this never failing truth she discovered.

(Mrs.) Grace Lillian Hamilton, Goldfield, Nev.

It is now nearly eight years since I became interested in Christian Science and in that time I have been helped by it in a great many ways. Since taking up this study I have found that I have been almost free from colds where formerly I used to have one right after the other about all the year round. By applying what I understood of Christian Science I was cured of chilblains a few years ago and have never had them since. I was also cured of pink eye in a few days.

I am very thankful for our periodicals and for the Home Forum page of the Monitor, our daily newspaper. Christian Science has helped me to understand the Bible better than I ever did before. I am indeed very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this wonderful truth.

(Miss) Cordelia Hobbs, Medford, Mass.

The question is often asked, "Can I be healed if I have no knowledge of Christian Science?" This I can answer by my own experience about fourteen years ago, when I was healed by reading the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

At that time I had been struggling with hay fever and catarrh which was said to be inherited. After leaving my home and coming to Minnesota I had hopes that the change of climate would be beneficial to me, but instead I grew worse. One day I was obliged to leave the office where I was employed, as my eyes were so badly affected that it seemed impossible for me to work on figures. After reaching home I noticed my mother's copy of Science and Health lying on the table and I opened it and commenced reading, and never thought of my eyes again. In a short time I arose from my chair completely healed. From that time I took up the study of Christian Science and have had the privilege of working for the cause in many ways.

While I have always been grateful for this healing and realize that "man's extremity is God's opportunity," in bringing me into this new-old truth, I am daily more grateful for the knowledge that is coming to me. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 95 of Science and Health, "We welcome the increase of knowledge and the end of error, because even human invention must have its day, and we want that day to be succeeded by Christian Science, by divine reality." I am thankful to God and grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

I have had abundant and varied proof of the protecting power of Christian Science for those who endeavor to live by its teachings. I wish to relate a recent instance of this. One morning I was preparing breakfast in the kitchen; a teakettle holding a gallon of water and full to the brim was boiling over. When I tried to remove it to another part of the stove it slipped from my grasp and fell to the floor. At the moment of its falling, I stooped forward to grasp it by the handle but failed to do this, and, the kettle coming in violent contact with the floor, its boiling contents splashed upward, nearly covering my arm, which was bare to the elbow.

For a short time my arm was a "sight," and the smart was intense, but I at once went to work in Christian Science, which for many years has been my only remedy for every ill. I stoutly declared God's allness and the nothingness of matter and mentally repeated many times over with great earnestness and conviction the "scientific statement of being" as given on page 468 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. Then I sat down to breakfast. By the time I had finished my meal the pain had quite subsided and in less than an hour every trace of the injury had entirely disappeared from my arm.

I send this testimony in deep gratitude to God for this and all previous healings and in loving tribute to our revered Leader, to whose unselfish labor for mankind we are indebted for the priceless blessing of Christian Science.

Mrs. C. H. McIntyre, Denver, Colo.

In view of the words of our Leader on page vii of the Preface to Science and Health, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings," I should like to express my gratitude for the many blessings which have come to me, since taking up the study of Christian Science. For several years it seemed as if I sought all the material help there was, getting little help, if any, even an operation giving but temporary relief. While very much in need of physical healing, I thought even if I could not get well, yet if I could only find God and know Him aright, this was all I was asking for. About six months before I found this beautiful truth, I had disposed of a lot of material means, longing only to find help from the real God. When I found Christian Science my healing was almost instantaneous. With the loving help of a practitioner I soon began to see and receive the wonderful good gifts God has for His children.

We have had many proofs of God's protecting care, one of which I would like to mention, which I am very grateful for,—an almost painless childbirth. I am grateful for the healings; but I am much more grateful for the spiritual understanding. I thank God, and also have gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has taught anew to the world this new-old religion, which Jesus taught many years ago.—(Mrs.) S. T. WENTZ, Espanola, Wash.

It is with deep gratitude that I offer a testimony of what Christian Science has done for me. I did not take up the study of it with the idea of finding healing for any physical discord, but because I had not found Truth in the teachings of the church in which I had been a lifelong member. After studying Christian Science for a short time I found I had been healed of bowel trouble, for which I had sought relief in materia medica as far back as I can remember. This is over five years ago and since that time Truth has been my only remedy. I can never express the gratitude I feel for the help Christian Science has been in overcoming discordant conditions for our children. Two years ago our little girl was taken ill with measles. We asked for help from a Christian Science practitioner, which was lovingly given at once, and in three days she was up and out. Shortly afterwards our little boy fell ill with the same complaint. He was very feverish and altogether the symptoms pointed to his having a very bad time. However, we again asked for Christian Science help, and the next day he was well enough to play in the garden, all symptoms having practically gone. Whooping cough was met and overcome within a fortnight by the power of Truth for the same two children.

We are indeed grateful for all the physical healings we have had in our home; I am most grateful for the joy and peace which have come into my life through the better understanding I am gaining of God and man, as taught in Christian Science.—(Mrs.) ETHEL C. POGSON, Nether Edge, Sheffield, England.

With feelings of deep gratitude for some knowledge of Christian Science I verify my wife's testimony. Words cannot express the joy that has come into my life through the understanding of God which I have gained through the study of Mrs. Eddy's textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."—ALFRED POGSON.

It is about two years since we first took up the study of Christian Science, and it is with deep gratitude that I testify to various demonstrations of healings in our family, and of problems met in our everyday life. One of our children had an instantaneous healing of severe throat trouble, and our eldest boy was also healed of the same trouble. My wife and I were both healed of influenza in a few days, and the understanding of God as our supply and of God as divine Love has been demonstrated many times. God has been our only Physician since we took up the study of Christian Science, and it is with deep gratitude to Him that I give this testimony, and to Mrs. Eddy for bringing to light again the true religion which Christ Jesus taught and which we can practice in our daily lives.

JAMES C. WILKIE, Brooks, Alberta, Canada.

I am sending my testimony to express my gratitude for the many blessings I have received through Christian Science. Seven years ago I was a physical and mental wreck, having been a victim of ulcerated stomach for about three years. I had doctored with five different doctors, but continually grew worse. I had a vague idea of Christian Science and decided to investigate it to see if I could be healed. I first borrowed a Science and Health from the public library, not knowing of the reading rooms, and then purchased one for myself. After several months' time I was completely healed through earnest reading of this textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

I had worn glasses since I was a very small child. The trouble was a structural defect of the back of the eyeball, and astigmatism. After my stomach was healed I decided that my eyes could be healed. At first I was able to lay off my glasses only a few hours at a time; then I could have them off several days at a time. Now I have not had them on for about a year and a half, and my eyesight is better than ever. I have also had many minor healings of troubles, such as headache, grippe, and so forth. I am very grateful to be freed from the physical suffering caused by these things, but more grateful for the spiritual growth that came with these healings and for my better knowledge of the Scriptures. Among the happiest and most profitable hours of my life are those spent with my Bible and the Christian Science literature.—(Mrs.) BERENICE ROBEY, Topeka, Kan.

Before Christian Science came into my life few days were free from some physical ailment or other, a feeling of insecurity arising from the belief that almost any disaster, accident, or disease might choose me for its next victim, and a confused sense of something fundamental lacking in life. I now know that all this discord was the result of my ignorance of God, good, as the divine Principle of all being. The understanding that has come to me has already made me healthy and happy and brought much harmony into our home. Many physical and mental difficulties have been overcome by the power of Truth as taught by Christian Science, and its value in aiding me to solve the daily problems that arise in my family cannot be estimated.

By far the greatest blessing conferred by Christian Science is the confidence it bestows in infinite good alone and the lifting of thought above false material standards. I am humbly grateful to Mrs. Eddy for so bravely and lovingly enduring unspeakable persecutions that the world might be blessed by her discovery. I am very grateful for the daily bread supplied by the Lesson-Sermons and for all the periodicals, which constantly extend a helping hand to those seeking to find and walk in the pathway of progress from materiality to spirituality.

Awakened

LENA M. HALL

I CAME upon a violet—
A little thing;
Ah, but I thought, and thought again,
That day in spring.

A lark, aloft, trilled gladsome song—
A simple thing;
And yet, I felt a moment hence
My soul awing.

I saw one raised to speedy health;
Death thrust aside!
Only the touch of Love, but lo,
"Christ risen," I cried.

Signs of the Times

[A. E. Brandt in Pittsburgh (Pa.) Leader]

If the lessons of the war tended toward one point more than another it was toward the principle of unity. Not the unity which is the demand of momentary expediency, but that which comes from the final acceptance of unity as an abiding and satisfying principle. If during the war we were too busy, too enthusiastic, about the purely military side of our enterprises to take account of the drift, the psychological effects were nevertheless flowing from psychological causes. The principle of unification was at work. It may have been ever so silent; none the less it was constantly at work.

That principle was steadily, if slowly, bringing all the people together in a way that was different, if not entirely new. Old conditions took on a different, if not completely new, aspect. None seemed to be quite the same any more. Many may have failed to discover all the changes and to follow the reasons, while sensing the fact that changes had arrived which were not displeasing.

That which was impressed upon every mind, juvenile along with the mature, was the value of service. Service took the place of every other consideration then. Nothing else counted for much. The man or woman or boy or girl who did not contribute something in the way of service was pursued by a sense of humiliation. They felt that they were outside that magnificent house of service toward which all feet were directed and to which all hands were bringing something. No matter what else men and women were doing, if their intelligence and energies were contributing nothing to that service they counted their labors wasted. The spirit of service was strong upon all. It was dominant.

It is not only among the men and women of the churches that the result of that experience has brought forth new fruit. A new vision has come to men and women everywhere. The spirit of service is still heavy upon them. It furnishes a new light for their feet. Whether in the ordinary, commoner relations of life, or in fidelity to formal social organizations, the effects are the same.

Men and women who have subjected themselves and their inspirational ideas to critical scrutiny and analysis have reached a new conclusion. The service impulse is their prompter. They want their religion to be something which can be of service every day, all the time. They want their religion to be something which may be of service to others than themselves. They no longer want the religion which contents itself and its devotees with the narrower, individualistic selfishness that looks no further than their personal "safety." During the war they came into close, intimate fraternal contact with their fellow humans in a common service —and they recall the experience with delight. They want to continue it.

[Christian Century]

We have need to remember that it is the times, not the eternities, which are out of joint. It is our small corner, not the universe, which is, or seems, in disorder. Though our view is short, and our minds provincial, still we can believe that the author of reason is the God of a reasonable order.

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

Only as we live the atoning life in the home, in the church, in business, do we become his [Jesus'] disciples, helping him to reconcile our fellows to God. For it is love that reveals, love that reconciles, and it is by love that God and man are made at-one.

Appreciation and Comment

The following is an extract from an introduction to a Christian Science lecture given by a member of the Board of Lectureship of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston:

AS you all know, I am a newspaper man, and my attention was first attracted to Christian Science because of its journalistic fruits. The greatest of these fruits, to my mind, is THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, an international newspaper in the United States to-day. My admiration for this paper increases with each day; for it approaches my ideal of what a newspaper ought to be. Its English is as chaste, as lucid, as vigorous, as that of Hawthorne and Macaulay. Its editorials are as profound, as clear, as comprehensive, as lofty, as the essays of Emerson or the poetry of Victor Hugo. Its policy combines the best in the practical and idealistic aspects of life, the vital things of life; it ignores the superficial, the froth, the foam, the bubbles upon the surface; but, diving into the depths, discusses those things which are closest to men's hearts and bosoms. For these reasons, I have no diffidence about repeating what I have said before: That, if the ordinary newspaper is the poor man's college, then THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is the university where he should take his postgraduate course. It has been said of old, Ye shall know them by their fruits. And, since I have tasted of the journalistic fruits of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and have found them to be good, I am pleased to be present this afternoon to learn something of the vital force, of the driving power, behind such a wonderful newspaper.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JUNE 5, 1920 NUMBER 40

The Gathering of the People

SARAH BEATRICE SLOTE

IN the early days the man who conquered himself and was called Israel, a soldier of God, declared, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be."

In this day, and throughout the past few years, when people have been gathering in small groups, large groups, committees of all sizes, audiences and congregations, also mobs, one has been moved to consider the meaning of this coming together of the people. What do these gatherings portend? Are they an organized effort for destruction, or is it the beginning of a movement for a standardizing, equalizing endeavor expressing the desire for brotherhood among men? The recent victory of Principle over the destructive forces of evil in the war would indicate a movement toward harmonizing and unifying peoples in one common cause of righteousness against unrighteousness. The breaking of old chains of bondage and long continued, iron-clad laws of oppression, however, place many in the position of one in the streets of a strange city, not knowing whither to turn or whom to trust. Feeling ignorant and confused, they are the more easily swayed by human will and passion. The effort to organize and standardize human thought uncovers false, reactionary elements; yet order is manifest among mankind by organization when it signifies brotherhood and harmony.

In the twelfth chapter of Luke we find these words: "In the meantime, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, insomuch that they trod one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy." As growth in numbers accrues to an organization, human opinion, or human will, would endeavor to become a moving influence. In "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy" by Sibyl Wilbur, a chapter entitled "Conflict of Personalities" shows the result of differing human opinion, human will, and personal ambition endeavoring to tread "one upon another," culminating in a competition which in its selfishness heedlessly would bring about a movement for destruction, but, unsuccessful in having no foundation in Principle, eventually goes its own way or works its own destruction.

Evil has learned the belief of power in organization, but does not realize that it is not the organization numerically, but the purpose of a movement, which makes the organization temporal or permanent. The organization is but the symbol and the agent. In the Christian Science church it is necessary to-day, in order to prove to doubting human beings that good is successful and that a body of people can move forward together obedient to the revelation of Truth, united and harmonious in advancing the cause of universal and impersonal good, even though each one healed does not change the measure of good in the true universe, for nothing can be added to Truth or taken from it. With the awakened thought the veil is but lifted farther so that more of the eternal presence of Truth is revealed.

Spiritual organization typifies the unity of man with God, and as only like can continuously be united to like, so only those whose aim is the same remain permanently together. Spiritual unity is not accomplished by the unity of man and man, but of man and God, and thus of man and man knit together by the common interest in God. As each one comes nearer and nearer to the understanding of the Christ, he comes nearer and nearer to his brother. In false organization true individuality is lost, while in true organization based upon spiritual unity true individuality is found; for nothing can be truly individual which does not bear the imprint and likeness of God.

In all bodies of people various types are represented. By long and devious ways men come to Christian Science, and much in the line of mental as well as spiritual education is needed. As growth comes, human opinions are dropped; for Mrs. Eddy says, "The opinions of men cannot be substituted for God's revelation" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 92). Each one's development comes through his individual perception and demonstration of the Christ-idea. Thought liberated from the belief of life and intelligence in matter, with a sense of conscious power from this fact, should be governed and purified by constant study of the Bible and our Leader's works, for "a little learning is a dangerous thing." Considering the different types of thought which come to Christian Science, the difference in social grade, wealth, education or the lack of it, the different trades, professions, religious beliefs, the sick, sinning, sorrowful,—one is impressed with the wonderful unity, harmony, and order which prevail in the collective body of the movement. It could not possibly be otherwise considering the constructive work done by our great Leader, and eddies along the shore cannot affect the mighty current of Truth.

Men may superstitiously claim that outside influences are responsible for their differences and their nonsuccess in organization, yet the worst factors for disruption in enterprise usually come from the inside, not the outside, coming from the lack of desire to conquer self, to endure, or perhaps from satisfaction with material effects, as well as from inherent laziness. Clement is quoted on the influences which he believed affected the early Christian church: "Call it zeal or jealousy, by which is meant violent self-assertion; in fact, human nature, which at all times resists any invasion of its ancient claims. Not necessarily the malignity of human nature, not the stupidity, but sometimes its lusts, its animality; sometimes its individualism, its covetousness; sometimes its inertia, its hatred of change, even for the better."

That lack of desire for change, even for the better, easily yields to the contagion engendered by will power and personal opinion, easily accepts, without correct analysis or careful thinking conditions which are not the result of the working of Principle, and false thought temporarily does its will. Harmony in the united movement is the result of self-government in the individual, the conquering of human nature; and until this is realized there will be differences of human opinion; yet the actual truth represented in the body of the movement will never be touched. The wise man said, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty: and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." The great lesson taught by an army is that of self-discipline under obedience. The great lesson taught by Christian Science is (Science and Health, p. 125), "Reflecting God's government, man is self-governed."

Our movement presents the highest form of organization as manifested in human experience, and its spiritual essence as well as its unity should be kept intact, if necessary by individual sacrifice. It is the test of Christliness to be able to give up in the nonessentials and to hold fast to the essential spiritual truth. So-called enemies do but give one the privilege of exercising scientific ability to meet all problems. In meeting the greater problems, lesser difficulties are often swept away. False reports, human gossip, which is usually supposition, cannot stop the progress of the true worker, yet some measure of Christlikeness must be earned before the idea can be presented. Suggestion and autosuggestion, formula and limitation, cannot sustain demonstration. The value of Mrs. Eddy's demonstration is that she was able to present the vision of Truth to the world in all its beauty, diversity, depth, order, its individual simplicity and grandeur, founded on demonstration and for demonstration. This was only done by close study and application. The vision is sweet and glorious; its demonstration in human experience is sometimes bitter, yet the truth must be worked out. In Science and Health we read (p. 135), "Christianity as Jesus taught it was not a creed, nor a system of ceremonies, nor a special gift from a ritualistic Jehovah; but it was the demonstration of divine Love casting out error and healing the sick, not merely in the name of Christ, or Truth, but in demonstration of Truth, as must be the case in the cycles of divine light."

Our nation presents the highest form of political organization, founded as it is on religious freedom. In the early days, that nation was accounted the greatest to which came the greatest revelation of Truth. God's revelation came to a great and pure American woman of New England. To the second-born of the great English speaking nations has come the privilege of restoration of primitive Christianity, the birthright and blessing of the firstborn in spiritual understanding. Representative of all peoples, many in one, holding fast to Principle, it must become the bulwark of the world, assured in its integrity and individuality. One can have gratitude for citizenship as well as for church membership. The material law needed to curb the ungoverned, and the material lawgiver will be here until men yield obedience to Spirit's mandate, which speaks in the inner sanctuary of conscience. Isaiah says, "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." The gathering of the people, we are coming to see, is to Shiloh, to the inner tranquillity of his kingdom, and in the exemplified spirit of the Christ-idea alone is found peace and rest, whatever the human condition and whatever the cost.

Individual demonstration accomplishes in the united movement that victory over the "world, the flesh and the devil" which is necessary to prove to others that Christian Science is true. Each one has his place in the united movement, the grand army of the Lord, the moving hosts, even as the true idea of God, so that none may hinder but all may help, governed by that spirit in which Mrs. Eddy writes (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 144): "To-day, be this hope in each of our hearts,—precious in God's sight as shall be the assembling of His people in this temple, sweet as the rest that remaineth for the righteous, and fresh as a summer morn,—that, from earth's pillows of stone, our visible lives are rising to God. As in the history of a seed, so may our earthly sowing bear fruit that exudes the inspiration of the wine poured into the cup of Christ."

Practice and Theory

STUART SESSIONS

HOW often one hears it said by those just beginning the study of Christian Science that they see the theory but cannot understand or demonstrate its Principle. How insidious is the temptation in the early acquaintance with metaphysics to advise the inquiring friend to go to a practitioner rather than to endeavor to give the help one's self. How familiar the excuse which always argues that the experienced and tried practitioner is the only one who can meet the case quickly and efficiently; but how hopelessly devoid of understanding or any basis in Truth such an attitude is. If the experienced student were the source of the healing, if the balm were derived from mere human experience, then there would be some reason for such shifts of arguments. But to the student who gains a glimpse of the understanding of what God is, there is no excuse and no such excuse suggests itself.

On a hillside in Judea, more than nineteen centuries ago the Master said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." Now the grain of mustard seed was used to illustrate, as every one knows, the smallest atom of faith possible of conception. Yet small as this was, its power removed mountains. It is, of course, axiomatic that God appears or is revealed to mankind through the understanding. A gleam of sunshine never mixes with the darkness of the cavern into which it may penetrate. That gleam of sunshine will always show the sun to any one who looks into it, and will cause all it rests upon to radiate and glow, and it should be remembered that such radiation and glow is reflected and never inherent in anything but the sun. That understanding, however, which receives the revelation of the Christ-idea is broadened and illumed accordingly, but the fact that Truth works independently of any human agency enables the student in Christian Science, even as a beginner, to demonstrate the power of Christ in ways which seem often to startle and surprise even the demonstrator himself. It is for the reason that Truth is never limited or affected by any human understanding of it, that the results of the practice of Christian Science either for one's self or for others so often exceed the seeming ability of the student. This is surely the explanation for the remarkable results so often accomplished by children in their simple acceptance of metaphysical Truth.

No man is stating his convictions correctly if he says he sees the theory but cannot practice it. Practice involuntarily must accompany the revelations of Truth, else it is not Truth revealed. Such is the law of good. Truth is often believed to be seen through the lens of matter or material or human opinion. Truth, however, must surely be metaphysical, and is so understood in divine Science. Now the truth is what? Surely the correct, scientific, and therefore exact or full understanding of God. Hence Truth is God expressed. To the sojourning mortal who grasps the meaning of that, it is the "pearl of great price," and he can no more prevent its radiation than he can corral sunshine. That is why thousands are being healed daily by just reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.

There is therefore no halfway point between not knowing the truth and knowing it. Christian Science is not theoretical; it is essentially demonstrable, which is to enable men, communities, and nations to demonstrate that good not evil—right not might—is power. On page 98 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Mystery does not enshroud Christ's teachings, and they are not theoretical and fragmentary, but practical and complete; and being practical and complete, they are not deprived of their essential vitality." Never in the history of the world has this gift of Mrs. Eddy's been more needed, but Mrs. Eddy's gift is Science and Health and her published writings and the movement which they lead. No one would ever think of saying that he knows theoretically that two plus two is four but he cannot demonstrate or practice it. The demonstration of the fact must follow the knowledge of it. Thus it invariably comes about that the knowledge of what man is as God made him heals wherever that understanding is permitted to enter. The reliance on Principle always heals.

Arguments of Self-deception Unreal

HELEN W. BARNARD

WHEN we accept Christian Science and its divine Principle, God, as our only standard for right living, we find, as in everything else, our concept of honesty quite different from any former idea of honesty we have ever entertained. Though it may always have been clear to us that honesty proceeds from Principle, and is alike available to all, yet it has never before been based on the fact that Principle actually is God or Truth. Mrs. Eddy, in the very first chapter of her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," unmasks, and warns the reader of the necessity of alertness to detect and avoid, the most subtle form of dishonesty—self-deception, when she writes, on page 8, "If we feel the aspiration, humility, gratitude, and love which our words express,—this God accepts; and it is wise not to try to deceive ourselves or others." Then she shows the wisdom of this by quoting from the Bible, "For 'there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed.'" Thus one learns that the demands of Truth require nothing short of absolute honesty, permitting no form of self-deception whatsoever.

Christian Science, being the searchlight of Truth, strips off every disguise or false argument of so-called mortal mind, which tries so cunningly to clothe this false belief of self-deception as our own thinking, so that we will, through ignorance and fear of exposure, lack the moral courage to attack and cast it from us as the lie which it is. In so far as we attempt to indulge this false thinking, we find the cleverest and most successful way to try to deceive ourselves is to do just what Adam did—blame some one else and hold that one responsible, so as to delay as long as possible our reckoning with Truth.

If there is a more subtle or vicious false argument of self-deception, it is that form which seeks to hide an ulterior motive behind a righteous cause; but here is just the time it has proved its own ignorance, as it has tricked itself into being discovered. For righteousness is governed by the only cause, which is God or Mind, that is never deceived and never hides a lie, but uncovers and proves its nothingness.

Another foolish argument is the false belief that we can prove Principle to a greater extent if we contrive a very plausible excuse for running away from some material place and person or persons, of whom we are afraid because of our belief that there are mortal minds which practice evil and can operate to prevent us from doing the correct thinking we feel we could and would do in another place, in different circumstances. Let us wake up to the fact that suppositional person, place, or circumstance is powerless to affect in any way our true and only thinking, which is divine Mind expressed, and which knows that right where the fear of many minds practicing maliciously claims to be, right there divine Mind and its perfect concept of right practice is, and is all there is.

"Use hospitality"

LUCY E. DOE

SO much help and light were recently received by the writer from the words of Peter, "Use hospitality one to another without grudging," that she desires to share the blessing with others. The writer grew to young womanhood in a country where hospitality among neighbors is practiced to a marked extent, and as she compared this sense of hospitality with the greater understanding and deeper meaning of the word gained through the study of Christian Science, the thought came: We Christian Scientists ought to be the most hospitable people on earth! And why? Because through the understanding which Christian Science has brought to us of perfect God, perfect man, and perfect creation, combined with the knowledge of the practical way to demonstrate this truth in every line of right human activity as well as in the healing of sickness and sin and binding up the wounds of the broken-hearted, we always have in our home—consciousness—sufficient supply to feed, nourish, or care for lovingly every guest that comes to us for help or comfort.

With our mental larder filled with thoughts of Truth and Love gleaned from the Bible, from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and from the other writings of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, combined with our Christian Science literature, we are always well supplied to meet any call that may come to us. If it is sickness, we know the truth as taught in Christian Science and can at once begin to give spiritually to the suffering one what we have learned of the truth of being in regard to man and his God-given dominion over the seeming condition. If it is sin, we can also know that our knowledge of man as God sees him is sufficient to break the dream of pleasure in sin by giving the understanding that "man's wisdom finds no satisfaction in sin, since God has sentenced sin to suffer" (Science and Health, p. 322), and then pouring in the truth as to what really satisfies man, we find we have fed a hungry wanderer who has come to our door asking for food. The sorrowful, the broken-hearted, the lonely, all find comfort and peace where Truth is understood, because the realization of God as Love is potent to comfort, heal, and bless. In our thought for our beloved cause, the workers at headquarters, our churches, teachers, practitioners, and church members, as well as the attendants at our Wednesday evening meetings, in the giving of testimonies of healing in these meetings and through the pages of our periodicals,—in all these ways there is wonderful opportunity for constantly practicing this higher sense of hospitality which will bring a blessing to all. Let us give of the best we have to each other and to all mankind, and let us do it "without grudging" as Peter urges us to do,—do it with the glad heart and ready hand with which one naturally gives of his best to a dearly loved relative or friend, "as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

What a wonderful opportunity the students of Christian Science have to help each other and our cause if we will only use our hospitality along all lines. Think of the joy we shall find in this way of working, because there is always freedom, gladness, and love where true understanding predominates. We all know how much we love humanly to be with hospitable people, and so as we develop more and more the qualities of love, joy, and harmony, we shall be well fitted to feed and comfort all who desire the blessing of Truth.

LUCY H. MC DONALD

ON page 57 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Happiness is spiritual, born of Truth and Love." This expression is the antipode of the well-known couplets from Burns comparing pleasures to the short life of a poppy or to the evanescent nature of the snowflake on the river. Happiness, unlike "pleasures," is not born of the belief in the reality of the senses or their kingdom; happiness is of the nature of its source, being spiritual, true, loving, pure. Happiness is an effect or result of knowing and loving Truth and Love; therefore one does not set out as on a journey to seek for happiness, nor does he outline the road by which it must come to him. No limited idea of one's rights or one's place or one's work will result in happiness.

Sometimes one desire, one condition, or one position seems to loom so large that it fills our whole horizon, skyward and earthward. "That is the only right thing," we see emblazoned on our limited space, and, "Everything and everybody must yield to that one idea," we argue; "they must see it so." And we try to arrest every thought that would see the matter in a different light. One has a farm to attend to; another has just married; another is bound by a sense of duty that looks straight enough, narrow as it is. Curious to say, oftentimes the one thing we are outlining is a good thing, a good way, perhaps the best,—for instance, building a church,—but we block the whole way if we offend in one thing or look to one thing—if we work in limited sense instead of through the limitless intelligence that comes with rightly knowing God, man, and the universe, and declaring positively the truth of a given situation from that boundless basis.

Teachers of mathematics are often confronted with this poor method of working, by pupils seeking the answers to problems rather than the understanding of the fundamentals and process involved. Indeed, textbooks now no longer place the answers to drill problems where the pupil may easily see them but at the back of the book, to be used to confirm the pupil's independent effort; or, they are placed in the hands of the teacher altogether, so that confirmation may be used with skill. Thus the pupil is trained to depend on his understanding of the rule by which he is to work and to look to it, step by step. His power to reason is thus called out and when he finishes his problem and finds that his answer is correct, this proof of his understanding of the rule develops true self-reliance. It may be that he meets with many failures before he understands the rule so thoroughly that every example is to him confirmation, but if he persists in following the right method, he will win out. I have known a pupil to gaze at an answer in wistful and idle speculation as to how to obtain it. I have seen him sit pondering over some 5 or 6 that blocked his way. Dear me, how big that figure looked—larger the longer he gazed and chewed his pencil. "That 5 is all that keeps me from having my lesson for to-morrow," he mutters. But this is not true; his lesson is to know the rule and process, and if a shaft of wisdom strikes him, he will turn from the 5 to the rule. We cannot hope to wring happiness or harmony from a situation by such schoolboy methods. Looking for an outcome is fixing the gaze on the answer; it is outlining for Principle, when Principle is not circumscribed.

If a number of students of Christian Science desire to build a church, for instance, where shall they begin? Shall they select the lot first, or shall they see what "church" is, as the spiritual idea? The cart should go after the horse, not before it, and the truth of any problem, which is that the divine Mind and its idea is the only reality, must be the beginning and end for harmonious results—for happiness. We cannot expect happiness as the result of merely saying the truth and going on gazing at the answer with longing wills. We must declare the truth and realize that the outcome of Truth is sure and harmonious.

There may be a sense of triumph or personal pleasure in bringing about an answer to our desires, especially if we have expressed a great deal of zealous activity, but this pleasure has its day along with others of like nature,—a day that is short and unknown to God. Who would not gladly change this sense of pleasure for the true happiness or harmony that is the emanation of divine Truth, Life, and Love?

"Excellency of speech"

HAZEL L. ZIMMERMAN

PAUL, that tireless advocate of right thinking, has given to the world in his first letter to the Corinthians an urgent plea for right speaking, or, as he so fittingly puts it, "excellency of speech." It is significant to the Christian Scientist to note that Paul begins at once to impress upon his readers the necessity of voicing only that which is good when he says, "I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge." Think what it means to us to know that real man as perfect idea of the one perfect Mind can neither speak nor think anything that is unlike that perfect Mind! Could there be a more lasting demonstration of the power of Truth and Love than to have every individual one meets each day think and speak only that which is good—only that which is true, and consequently only that which is founded upon Principle?

Is not that what Paul has in mind when he goes on to say, "Now I beseech you, brethren, . . . that ye all speak the same thing and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment"?

Mortal mind would try to make itself a reality by endeavoring to force upon us the divided garment—fear where courage should triumph, criticism where praise is due, hatred where Love should stand, but Christian Science helps us to separate the tares from the wheat so that the realities may remain and the unrealities be destroyed by the very fact that they are unreal. Was it not this very temptation to let in the unrealities that Mrs. Eddy warns us against when she says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 392): "Stand porter at the door of thought. Admitting only such conclusions as you wish realized in bodily results, you will control yourself harmoniously"? Then in the measure that we are obedient in voicing only that which is good do we realize that "metaphysics resolves things into thoughts, and exchanges the objects of sense for the ideas of Soul" (Science and Health, p. 269). Excellency of speech is possible to each one of us, and as active Christian Scientists we must be alert to the responsibility it involves.

It is an individual problem—this spreading of the language of Spirit, and it is best understood in the exercise of a love which is "the fulfilling of the law." Let us begin now to know that our speech and our preaching are "not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power."

Be Joyful

ETHEL SANOR COMMERFORD

THE one consciousness, which is conscious only of good, forever recognizes and sustains the infinite idea, man. The eternal fact is that this one divinely joyous consciousness is all there is to real being. Man's real experience is now, and forever will be, joyous, free, harmonious, eternally conscious of infinite good. Hear the joyful song of the prophet Isaiah: "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands!" God's children must be glad. Gladness is a quality inherent in the divine Mind and is always expressed by man. Quoting again from the prophecy of Isaiah, "Behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy."

One who will persist in singing praises to God for His wonderful goodness to the children of men, in times of seeming trouble, will experience actual joy and behold right activity where discord seemed to be. A number of years ago a mother, who was a Christian Scientist, proved this to be true. Her child, only a few weeks old, had what mortal mind claimed was a serious disease. Neighbors declared that a child so young seldom recovered. The little fellow was faithfully treated, but did not seem to improve. The mother then realized that she must rejoice by acknowledging the omnipresence and omnipotence of infinite Life, Truth, and Love, this Life being forever expressed by its idea. Anxious thought was replaced by confidence and courage. This attitude of right thinking unfolded a greater sense of the fatherhood and motherhood of God. The mother then went about her usual work, leaving the little one in the tender, loving, unfailing care of the one infinite Mind, in whom all live and move and have their being. The healing was soon accomplished, and the mother experienced "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." Fear and discord were replaced by joy and freedom, expressed in right activity.

Why should God's children not sing His praises continually? Is not this what Mrs. Eddy has taught Christian Scientists to do and what she herself did, even during times of misunderstanding and persecution? On page 124 of "Miscellaneous Writings," Mrs. Eddy says of infinitely loving consciousness, "For 'who is so great a God as our God!' unchangeable, all-wise, all-just, all-merciful; the ever-loving, ever-living Life, Truth, Love: comforting such as mourn, opening the prison doors to the captive, marking the unwinged bird, pitying with more than a father's pity; healing the sick, cleansing the leper, raising the dead, saving sinners." This consciousness of joy is man's real consciousness now, and Christian Scientists are demonstrating it in the degree that they understand this absolute truth and disbelieve that anything can be conscious but good.

Selected Articles

["Circumstances"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., March 25, 1920]

The power of circumstances is too often admitted to be something that men cannot control. Each of us has heard it said of another that "he is the victim of circumstances." Thus recognition and acknowledgment are given to an influence which seems, to human sense, indefinable and yet inexorable, but which, to the enlightened understanding, is impotent and unreal. The average listener is ready to accept such a remark as the fact. This acceptance is due to his lack of knowledge of Principle. He sees what he believes, and believes what he sees, just as he has been educated to do. He has not been taught to think in terms of Principle.

The student of Christian Science, accepting as true Mary Baker Eddy's statement on page 379 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that "the real jurisdiction of the world is in Mind, controlling every effect and recognizing all causation as vested in divine Mind," refuses to admit that the real man can ever be made the dupe or victim of merely material circumstances. He has learned to know man as the immortal idea of divine Love. Because man is Love's idea, he knows that man must be cared for without lapse or interval, and regardless of the circumstances that human events may seem to manifest in so-called material life. Realizing that man can never be victimized, he further insists that Principle alone is cause, that there can be no effect except from Principle. Now it must be plain that events do not just happen, as the human mind would have us believe. Order is God's law. Every real circumstance is governed by that law. God, Mind, being the one and only cause, every event, or effect, must be the logical outcome of His law.

Truth is all-powerful. The apprehension of this great fact effectively antidotes or neutralizes the mesmerism of the human mind. Accepting this false, so-called mind as causative, results in nothing but a constantly shifting panorama of errors. This mortal mind accepts these errors as real and true, but this is solely due to its ignorance of that which really is. Lacking knowledge of the real, it accepts the unreal as true. When a man wakes to find that this so-called mind is not mind at all, and learns to know Mind, God, as his Mind, then there shines into his consciousness that light of understanding which enables him to demonstrate the truth of Mrs. Eddy's admonition on page 419 of Science and Health, "Meet every adverse circumstance as its master."

Christ Jesus demonstrated his God-given dominion over every circumstance in his earthly career. Even the belief of death, which human sense says is unconquerable, had to submit to the unerring understanding of the Christ which Jesus manifested and demonstrated. He walked on the water, stilled the tempest, healed the sick, fed the multitude, raised the dead, made the dumb to speak, the lame to walk, the blind to see,—all in direct violation of so-called man-made laws. He mastered every circumstance, irrespective of how it seemed to present itself. And did he not command those who would be his followers that they should go and do likewise? "And greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." More terrifying and hazardous circumstances than these shall be overcome.

What is it that whispers that men are the victims of circumstances? Is it not the very influence that claims to mold these circumstances, that claims that there is matter, that there is mind in matter, that matter has intelligence?

Is it not the same erroneous thought which says that matter suffers and enjoys, when in truth "matter," as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 277 of Science and Health, "is an error of statement"? Is it not the same unreliable tempter which insists that man is mortal, when in fact he is immortal? This group of errors, together with the claim that man is helpless in the grip of circumstances, all come from a single source—the false, supposititious belief in a carnal mind and in a system of theorizing.

Circumstances never made a man sick or poor, for the belief in sickness and poverty results from accepting wrong thinking as one's own thought—from wrong thoughts, not events, for events are not causes but rather the results of thought. To accept events as causative is, however, what this human mind so persistently tries to have us all do, for if it can keep our attention focused on effects rather than the underlying causes, it has accomplished its utmost and final purpose. Mrs. Eddy writes, beginning on page 377 of Science and Health: "The cause of all so-called disease is mental, a mortal fear, a mistaken belief or conviction of the necessity and power of ill-health; also a fear that Mind is helpless to defend the life of man and incompetent to control it. Without this ignorant human belief, any circumstance is of itself powerless to produce suffering. It is latent belief in disease, as well as the fear of disease, which associates sickness with certain circumstances and causes the two to appear conjoined, even as poetry and music are reproduced in union by human memory. Disease has no intelligence. Unwittingly you sentence yourself to suffer. The understanding of this will enable you to commute this self-sentence, and meet every circumstance with truth. Disease is less than mind, and Mind can control it."

Circumstances of a material nature, then, are not unconquerable, not inevitable. When rightly seen, they are neither a menace nor an obstacle, and are not even a vital force in our lives. They are merely the outward evidences of our thinking. Man can make his own circumstances; circumstances need not make the man. Man can control his circumstances by thinking scientifically, in terms of Principle and His idea, and by recognizing and asserting his true relationship to the one and only Mind. The results of such thinking will be manifested, quite logically, in harmonious circumstances.

Circumstances, then, are not cause, but rather effect. Since God is All-in-all, and therefore the only cause, the only effect that there can ever be must be good. Clinging steadfastly and understandingly to this eternal truth, we are enabled to exercise dominion over every circumstance, to be its master.

[James Gattis in Winston-Salem (N. C.) Journal]

In a recent issue a sermon was reported which claimed to be a comparison of Christian Science and spiritual healing. The clergyman was reported to have said that Christian Science was neither "scientific nor Christian." This statement has been used so often that it is threadbare and carries no weight. Christian Science is just what it claims to be and what its name implies. It is Christian because its teachings instruct those who accept it how to become Christlike in all their ways. It is scientific because it is a knowledge of Principle and of facts which are classified and made available in the application and demonstration of Truth. Mrs. Eddy in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 1) has defined Christian Science as "the law of God, the law of good, interpreting and demonstrating the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony."

While Christian Science does teach the unreality of matter with all its seeming attributes, qualities, and conditions, it does not deny that the phenomena relating to matter are quite real to the physical senses,—in short, just as real as the physical senses make them.

Christian Science is not a faith or mind cure, as the critic says, for the basis of Christian Science healing is that God is divine Mind, and it is the divine Mind, not the human mind, that heals. Our critic says that Science and Health and the gospels are opposed to each other, when the fact is that "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, is based wholly on the words and works of Christ Jesus and his apostles as recorded in the gospels. Christ Jesus gave this test of discipleship, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and Christian Scientists are willing to be judged by their fruits.

Christian Science agrees with the critic that the ministry or art of spiritual healing was given to the church, but that the church through worldliness lost this gift. Mrs. Eddy has rediscovered this lost element of spiritual or Christ healing. Christian Scientists will rejoice when the churches of our own and other lands return to the Christ or Christian healing; for only through this method can they see the complete destruction of sin, disease, and death. It seems strange to the writer that a clergyman should claim that the ministry of healing belongs to the church and practically admit that it is not being done, and then try to malign the religious teaching which does heal the sick and the sinning by spiritual means.

In nearly every hamlet, town, or city in the entire world to-day some one can be found who has been healed of sin or disease through the ministry of Christian Science, and hundreds and thousands are testifying each week through the periodicals and the Wednesday evening meetings of physical and spiritual healings through this new-old religion which has been brought back to the world.

[A. J. Chapman in New Orleans (La.) States]

In a recent issue the States quotes from a sermon delivered by a Roman Catholic priest on the subject of "Heaven." The speaker referred to the various denominations and to what they teach with respect to heaven, and among them referred to Christian Scientists.

Now, I think your readers are entitled to know just what Christian Science does teach about heaven, and I would like to quote Mrs. Eddy on the subject. On page 291 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she says, "Heaven is not a locality, but a divine state of Mind in which all the manifestations of Mind are harmonious and immortal, because sin is not there and man is found having no righteousness of his own, but in possession of 'the mind of the Lord,' as the Scripture says."

When the Pharisees demanded of Jesus to know when the kingdom of God should come, he replied, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, Lo there! for behold, the kingdom of God is within you." And at another time he said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." All of this goes to show that heaven is a divine state of consciousness gained through pure mentality.

The idea of heaven as a far-away place possible of attainment only in the dim and distant future does not appeal to a large number of thinking people, but Christian Science is bringing to light the old idea of heaven as taught by the Master, and through its teachings many are discovering that it is possible to experience heaven here and now through the destruction of sin and disease and the various ills that beset mortal existence.

[C. W. Hale in Portland (Ind.) Republican]

Christian Science has come to the world at a time when mankind is hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and has brought a message of peace, harmony, and health that meets the world's need, unfolding and proving a full salvation from all phases of evil. It is based wholly and without qualification upon the Scriptures, and upon the teachings and demonstration of Christ Jesus. Its basis is the law of God, the same demonstrable truth that Christ Jesus taught and commanded that his followers teach and practice.

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has said in her book, "Miscellaneous Writings," on page 252: "Christian Science is not only the acme of Science but the crown of Christianity. It is universal. It appeals to man as man; to the whole and not to a portion; to man physically, as well as spiritually, and to all mankind. It has one God. It demonstrates the divine Principle, rules and practice of the great healer and master of metaphysics, Jesus of Nazareth. It spiritualizes religion and restores its lost element, namely, healing the sick. It consecrates and inspires the teacher and preacher; it equips the doctor with safe and sure medicine; it encourages and empowers the business man and secures the success of honesty. It is the dear children's toy and strong tower; the wise man's spiritual dictionary; the poor man's money; yea, it is the pearl priceless whereof our Master said, if a man findeth, he goeth and selleth all that he hath and buyeth it."

The arbitrary statements that "Christianity is not scientific," and that "the author of Christian Science has written a lot of stuff and got away with it" prove nothing, and are but a repetition of a superficial criticism that has been voiced repeatedly by those who do not comprehend the fullness and accuracy of the power of God as revealed and demonstrated in Christian Science. Evidently this minister does not fully comprehend what his own statement means or he would realize that by it he has denied the power of God and of the teachings of Christ Jesus. If Christianity is not scientific, then the law of God is based wholly upon chance, and is subject to manipulation and changes. Christian Science teaches that Christianity is scientific because it is based upon an exact, demonstrable, and provable Principle that never fails. It teaches that Christ Jesus' works were no mere conjecture or manipulation, but were the outcome of accurate knowledge and understanding of that underlying and irrevocable law which is the basis of all being, and is capable of proof and demonstration right here and now.

On page 135 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says: "It has been said, and truly, that Christianity must be Science, and Science must be Christianity, else one or the other is false and useless; but neither is unimportant or untrue, and they are alike in demonstration. This proves the one to be identical with the other. Christianity as Jesus taught it was not a creed, nor a system of ceremonies, nor a special gift from a ritualistic Jehovah; but it was the demonstration of divine Love casting out error and healing the sick, not merely in the name of Christ, or Truth, but in demonstration of Truth, as must be the case in the cycles of divine light."

The inference of our critic that Christian Science is based upon human will is wholly wrong, as Christian Science teaches, and has proved, that human will is not a healing agency and is subject to chance and dangerous manipulation. Christian Science healing is accomplished through the understanding and application of the law of God, divine Mind, and through the scientific application of that law proves man's relation to God, as His child, made in His image and likeness. It demonstrates with scientific accuracy that it is by the power of God that all sin, sickness, and every other phase of evil and discord are removed, and men are proved to be "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ."

Mrs. Eddy recognizing this fact gives us on page 445 of Science and Health, the following: "Christian Science silences human will, quiets fear with Truth and Love, and illustrates the unlabored motion of the divine energy in healing the sick. Self-seeking, envy, passion, pride, hatred, and revenge are cast out by the divine Mind which heals disease. The human will which maketh and worketh a lie, hiding the divine Principle of harmony, is destructive to health, and is the cause of disease rather than its cure."

Christ Jesus recognized that will power has neither accuracy nor potency, but that all power is of God. He said, "I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me."

Funds of The Mother Church

The following letters were sent to the Editorial Department by the Treasurer of The Mother Church, on April 10, 1920, with a request for publication in the Christian Science Sentinel:—

"I am sending money order of five dollars to The Christian Science Benevolent Association. This came to me as a gift of love and gratitude to God for His wonderful goodness to the one who sent it, as he had come to know God as the Great Physician through the teachings of Christian Science. This has been a demonstration to me that God is my supply, for I had long felt the need of sending in my bit."

"Inclosed find check of seven dollars for The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. This is sent in loving gratitude for good received in Christian Science. All I am and all I have I owe to Christian Science."

"It is with very grateful thanksgiving and gratitude for wonderful benefits received in Christian Science that I send this bit in the hope that it will help another seeker after Truth."

"It has been my privilege to have been raised in Christian Science and the blessings that I have received have been many. Words cannot express my appreciation for this truth as a preventive agent. I am grateful for the opportunity given us to contribute to these funds."

"In gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me in healing disease and in bringing to my life such a great spiritual uplift, I inclose check for five dollars for The Christian Science Benevolent Association."

"Inclosed please find post office money order for ten dollars to be used for The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. This is sent in loving appreciation of a need met through Christian Science."

"Inclosed you will find money order for $6.00; one dollar to pay my per capita tax, the rest to be used for The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I am grateful for this truth and am glad to do my part in supporting a great work."

The Unreality of Evil

THE jargon of the schools has been a term of contempt with the true thinker for many centuries. It seems as if it were almost impossible to invent a scientific terminology which should not be subject to abuse by those who have not grasped its real significance. This is noticeable amongst those who chatter about Christian Science, just as they chatter of natural science; who talk of demonstration as if it meant getting something a person materially desired, and who seem to think that sickness is abolished by describing it as a claim. On page 54 of "Unity of Good," Mrs. Eddy warns her students specifically against such abuse of language. "To say there is a false claim," she says there, "called sickness, is to admit all there is of sickness; for it is nothing but a false claim. To be healed, one must lose sight of a false claim." And again, a little lower on the same page: "As with sickness, so is it with sin. To admit that sin has any claim whatever, just or unjust, is to admit a dangerous fact."

Mrs. Eddy uses the word claim to signify something which claims to be a fact but is not, but when the word claim is simply substituted for sickness or sin, without the metaphysical insight which deprives it of any sense of actuality, it becomes, as she says, a dangerous admission. No doubt if a man's health, or his business, or any of those activities in which he is legitimately engaged, seem to suffer in any way, the claim is obviously being asserted by evil of its power to injure him or them. In such a case, then, it is his duty immediately to realize the truth of the situation, to prove the claim an illegitimate one, and so to destroy it. Such a claim can, of course, only be made illegitimately, for Truth makes no claim, but asserts itself as a fact. Now the way this claim of sickness is thrust upon the human consciousness is always through malicious mental suggestion, as no suggestion of evil could possibly come from divine Mind, which is conscious of nothing but good. If, consequently, such a claim, or such a suggestion, lodges in the human consciousness, it is because the individual has not protected himself against the belief that evil exists as a reality and a power. Mrs. Eddy clearly foresaw that there would be those who would neglect this protection, and so, in Article VIII, Section 6, of the Church Manual she wrote: "It shall be the duty of every member of this Church to defend himself daily against aggressive mental suggestion, and not be made to forget nor to neglect his duty to God, to his Leader, and to mankind. By his works he shall be judged, —and justified or condemned."

The final words of this adjuration contain a tremendous warning to the student who neglects them. In settling his account with Principle it will be quite futile for him to plead that he was led by others into a wrong course, or that he was induced by his faith in those he considered better able to judge than himself into doing something not in accordance with Principle. The mere fact that he has listened to the suggestion of evil, no matter what human excuses he may be able to argue for his own satisfaction, Mrs. Eddy makes it quite clear, will be of no avail. He is to be judged, not by his excuses but by his works, and to be justified or condemned by them.

Now it is perfectly obvious that the individual cannot find time to protect himself specifically every day against every possible suggestion which evil can pour into his consciousness. Evil pretends to counterfeit infinity, and because every suggestion of evil is a lie, the suggestion of infinity is just one of its lies. Therefore, the protection of the individual consists in his realization of the nothingness and powerlessness of evil, and in accordance as this realization is complete, so is his protection complete. So long, however, as matter is accepted as real, it is clear that the reality and power of evil cannot be successfully denied. Therefore the individual's protection must find expression not only in the theoretical denial of the reality and power of evil, but in the practical demonstration of this denial, manifested through the daily and hourly effort to deny the evidence of the senses and to walk in the footsteps of the Christ. Now it is possible to walk in the footsteps of the Christ for precisely one reason, and that is that there are really no other footsteps to walk in, just as there is no other Mind than the divine Mind, and so no mind to suggest evil. On page 419 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy writes: "Mind produces all action. If the action proceeds from Truth, from immortal Mind, there is harmony; but mortal mind is liable to any phase of belief. A relapse cannot in reality occur in mortals or so-called mortal minds, for there is but one Mind, one God."

Since, then, there is only one Mind, and this Mind is conscious of nothing but good, it is manifest that God's thoughts, passing from Mind to man, must blot out the counterfeit material ideas which form the suggestions of mortal mind. So long as a child has not been taught any mathematics, he may accept the suggestion that two and two are five, but the moment it has once been made clear to him that two and two are four, the false belief of anything to the contrary is wiped out and destroyed. Now it is just like this with respect to any false beliefs a man may entertain concerning his health, his business, or his activities. The suggestion of mortal mind may claim that any of these is sick, but the declaration of the truth must annihilate this false claim, and once annihilated it can never be revived to do any further damage. It has not, indeed, as Mrs. Eddy points out, a chance of a relapse even in so-called mortal minds, for the all-sufficient reason that there is only one Mind, Principle, or God.

Should, then, this claim of relapse be suggested to the human consciousness, it will be necessary to destroy not the belief of sickness or inharmony, which has already been utterly destroyed by the acceptance of Christ, Truth, but that other claim of the human mind that there is such a thing as relapse. In other words, if a man has been sick, or if he has been in business difficulties, and this sickness or these difficulties have been overcome by Truth, then neither his body nor his business can suffer from the belief which has been already destroyed, but only from an entirely separate claim, that the one or the other is subject to relapse. But this belief of relapse is every bit as much a false claim as the original belief of sickness or inharmony, and has to be met by the knowledge of the fact that the human mind can never reach the end at which it is aiming by merely presenting the suggestion in a changed form. Consequently, when the belief of relapse is impressed upon the human consciousness, it can be routed just as easily as the original lie of sickness or inharmony was routed, by a knowledge that there is only one Mind, and that that Mind is Spirit.

FREDERICK DIXON.

Going Forward

WHAT is real progress? In the very midst of a process of turning and overturning, it may seem hard to estimate the good that is unfolding. At many a point in the war, for instance, only those who truly understood the irresistible power of Principle were sure of what was rightly going on. And now, when the treaty of peace has been ratified by only a part of the nations and has not, of course, automatically solved all the difficulties of the world, it is even more necessary to consider with the utmost consecration what activity in accord with Principle is. Any seeming doubt as to this is, after all, merely a seeming. There is the truth here and now to depend on with perfect certainty. In the presence of this truth understood and demonstrated, any illusion of limitation or complexity is really nothing whatever. Indeed, nothingness never has succeeded in constituting itself something to be dealt with.

In order to see clearly one's progress in relying on Principle, one must first of all know the essence and nature of Principle as the source of all intelligent action. On page 2 of the Message for 1901 Mrs. Eddy says, "Absolute certainty in the practice of divine metaphysics constitutes its utility, since it has a divine and demonstrable Principle and rule—if some fall short of Truth, others will attain it, and these are they who will adhere to it." When one reasons surely and joyously that the divine Mind is the only possible source for genuine living, one has to that extent turned forever away from any belief that matter could be actual. Once a man catches even a glimpse of the all-inclusive reality of the divine Mind and idea, there is no going backward. That insight, being eternal, must endure through no matter what seeming trials. It is always available for practical use.

To rejoice in this, is to experience what going forward is. If one looks back, for the moment, and compares the goodness of this sure knowing with the vacuity that there would be without it, one is glad just to be alive, to be feeling the true divine Life, which expresses itself in all that may rightly be termed activity. There is no getting away from this one basic fact. It is of no use to ask one's self or any one else, "Why have I not gone forward faster?" or "Why can I not be healed?" Such questions are a waste of time, since there is no answer whatever for them. There is the answer, however, for the questions, "Why am I going forward?" and "Why can I be healed right now?" This answer is simply that, here and now, the one infinite Mind is the cause for all the action there is, ceaselessly unfolds, and absolutely requires the whole substantiality which is veritable health, in every meaning of that broad term. As each one asks himself the question as to what positively is, he remains undisturbed through any seeming, whether of so-called physical body or of world conditions. "So," as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 281 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "whatever we meet that is hard in the Christian warfare we must count as nothing, and must think instead, of our poverty and helplessness without this understanding, and count ourselves always as debtors to Christ, Truth." It is ever a joy to do what may seem the hard things.

The fact is that, desiring to live in accord with Principle, one can be satisfied with no halfway positions. Only the complete truth will ever suffice. Through Christian Science, the world must sooner or later learn what the whole truth is, in its application to every circumstance of living. A part of Christian Science is not enough. Those who have misunderstood and misjudged Christian Science, have seen, at the best, only a part of its infinite meaning. To go forward and demonstrate it completely in every detail of experience, each one must set to work exactly in the way that Mrs. Eddy has so clearly shown. For the benefit of the earnest student, she has arranged a thorough variety of means. One who is determined to know and use all of Christian Science must avail himself of the entire way that she has discovered. No smattering can be permanently satisfactory. On page 449 of Science and Health she declares, "A grain of Christian Science does wonders for mortals, so omnipotent is Truth, but more of Christian Science must be gained in order to continue in well doing." If one is merely emotionally overjoyed at some first few proofs, he may find himself standing still until he realizes that the infinity of Principle manifest requires constant unfoldment. This unfoldment is inexhaustibly going on, however, in spite of any seeming standstill. The instant one awakens to its actuality, one finds it at hand with all its blessing. To be alert is, therefore, the only satisfying joy. Actually to be alert is wholly to be experiencing the infinity of spiritual Life, which alone is health, holiness, and continual progress. Nothing can really hinder the thorough demonstration of Principle.

Lead Thy Captivity Captive

E. B. SARGANT

NOT in the paths of human peace
Doth Love proclaim the captive free;
Nor where exultant crowds increase
Hath Christ his hidden embassy.
Oh, when the many speak of might,
Kneel thou to Love; hunger and thirst for right.

Thine eyes shall see the legions led
By Michael to thine inward war;
Thine heart shall know that sin is fled,
As Gabriel doth peace restore.
Until the breaking of the day,
Michael shall fight and Gabriel ever pray.

Christian, thou art alone with God,
And other gods thou shalt not serve;
True Scientist, thy Leader trod
The path from which thou mayst not swerve.
Thy brother's face as God's then see,
And captive lead thine own captivity.

FULLERTON, CALIF.—Fullerton's newest house of worship, the edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, constructed on a tract of ground bounded by Chapman, Pomona, and Whiting Avenues, was opened to the public for the first time this week [March 9] with a lecture on Christian Science by Frank H. Leonard. The seating capacity of the church is seven hundred and fifty. The church and furnishings, exclusive of the lot, will cost over $30,000.

PEORIA, ILL.—The latest addition to Peoria's churches, Second Church of Christ, Scientist, 129 Barker Avenue, will open wide its doors and welcome the public to its dedication service to be held in its auditorium this morning [March 7].

The church is an outgrowth of First Church of Christ, Scientist, on Hamilton Boulevard, its congregation several years ago having reached a point where the accommodations were found insufficient. With the idea of relieving the congestion, the members living on the West Bluff withdrew from the parent organization, with the result that Second Church of Christ, Scientist, was formed. Soon after this a lot 100 by 132 feet was purchased on Barker Avenue, plans were drawn for the proposed structure, and in October, 1915, the corner stone was laid. In August of the following year the congregation occupied the Sunday school room of the new building, and have continued to worship there throughout the progressive stages toward its final completion.

The seating capacity of the auditorium is six hundred and fifty. Contracts that were made at the inception of the building program have permitted the entire cost to be kept down to $65,000.—Peoria Star.

The Lectures

STATEN ISLAND, N. Y. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Soren A. Thorensen, who said in part:—

In Matthew we read, "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease," and also, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils." The message which we shall hear this evening accords with these instructions and sayings of the Master, who knew that true happiness, peace, and health are a direct result of the understanding of his words and works. Christian Science has come to this age as a practical, demonstrable religion, as the law of good, whose mission is to fulfill the Master's promises to his disciples, and thereby to comfort, bless, and heal all men.

COVINA, CALIF. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Mme. Ellen Beach Yaw, who said in part:—

Is it not true that the one great desire of humanity to-day is to find perfect peace and harmony? Christ Jesus came to show us the way. He demonstrated his knowledge of the truth, healing sin and sickness and raising the dead. He understood and practiced the Science of Christianity.

After many years' study of the Bible and the life and works of our Master, Mary Baker Eddy attained the spirituality which gave her the clear vision of the truth as taught and demonstrated by Jesus, and she, too, was able to heal all manner of sin and sickness. Her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has opened the door of understanding to many thousands of suffering humanity and, through the spiritual interpretation of the Bible which it teaches, they have been healed.—Covina Citizen.

PORTSMOUTH, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Eric Carr, who said in part:—

It is interesting to record that at the recent church congress held at Leicester, the president, the Bishop of Peterborough, in his opening address said: "The need of the church and the need of the nation is a living theology. Our people at large do not know what God is like or what God can do. If we do not take pains to explain God, other people will. Everywhere in these days there are men and women who desire to approach God. Naturally enough they will accept guidance from those who offer it most speedily and simply." Those of us who have been studying Christian Science, have had abundant proof in the healing we have experienced and the increased harmony which has come into our lives, that Christian Science is indeed showing the way to God most speedily and simply.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by W. Taylor Stone, who said in part:—

Jesus was the most wonderful, the most forceful, the most scientific man that has ever lived. No scientist was ever more loyal to Principle; no demonstrator ever adhered more closely or obeyed more implicitly the rules for demonstration; no man ever attained the understanding of spiritual law that he attained; no one ever proved the unreality of evil and matter as did he; no one ever demonstrated the omnipotence of good to the extent that he did; no one ever achieved such results as Jesus achieved; no man was ever so patient, so kind, so tender as he; and no one ever healed the sick and alleviated the suffering and brought peace and hope to the sinning as did Jesus. Why? Because of his wonderful unselfed love. For him to live was to love. His Life-principle was Love; he acknowledged no power but Love; he recognized no law but the law of Love; he admitted the existence of no substance but the substance of Mind, the Mind that is Love; hence his wonderful power over all discordant human conditions.

Over fifty years ago the most scientific woman that has ever graced this world's history discovered the glorious Principle of Jesus' teaching and the rules for its demonstration, and gave her discovery to a waiting, weary, sin sick world, and called it Christian Science. We are wonderfully privileged to have with us this afternoon a messenger, a member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship, who will tell something of this glorious teaching and of the one who discovered it.

HACKENSACK, N. J. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. C. F. Dewey, who said in part:—

Last April, in New York city, in a Christian Science church, one which seated two thousand people, the usual Wednesday or mid-week service was held. It was a cold, stormy night, but every seat was filled. Twenty-four hours later; a visitor who had been present at this service entertained the clergyman of a prominent Fifth Avenue orthodox church of the same city. On the previous evening their Wednesday or mid-week service had also been held.

The hostess asked her guest how many had attended this service. He answered, "Seven." She then related to him her experience in attending the Christian Science church on this same stormy night and finding a congregation of two thousand people, and asked his opinion of the reason for this great difference in attendance. He was unable to account for it, but his wife exclaimed: "I will tell you the reason. It is because the Christian Science church is giving the people something that they want."

It is true. Christian Science is revealing and demonstrating to the people of to-day the "Comforter" or Christ, Truth, which Jesus promised to us when he said, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever."

LAKE CHARLES, LA. (Society).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by C. A. Clark, who said in part:—

In his ministry on earth to establish a spiritual, practical, everyday religion, Jesus healed the sick, cast out devils, and raised the dead. Through the prayers of the righteous, like healings continued for about three hundred years after the crucifixion. Then materialism had so far supplanted spirituality that the element of healing was lost.

In 1866 Mary Baker Eddy reestablished the primitive religion of the Master and restored Christian healing. She named her discovery Christian Science.

BUTTE, MONT. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by William D. Fenner, who said in part:—

Christian Science has been called the science of praying, of praying aright, and the members of the denomination throughout the civilized world are living witnesses to the truth of this statement; for they are manifesting the results of the power of prayer to heal the sick and the sinful, to bring health, harmony, happiness, peace, and plenty to the children of God. Through the study of this subject men are learning that God is a God at hand, ready and able to meet every human need, and Christian Science is daily enabling hundreds of thousands to avail themselves of His great bounty.

ATTICA, N. Y. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Elmore S. Vickery, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new religion, but is the same as that taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus. Christian Science declares that the teachings of the Bible are as true and applicable to human needs as they were in the time of Jesus. It is a religion of love, peace, and joy, as well as of power, and one that is delivering the children of men from every ill that flesh is heir to, and making them realize what it means to be made in the image and likeness of God.

PITTSBURGH, PA. (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Walter L. Anderson, who said in part:—

The apostle Paul in the admonition to the Corinthian brethren regarding their lack of spiritual apprehension in not discerning "the Lord's body," and their failure to realize that the "kingdom of God is within," said to them, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."

This mighty, infinite faculty of spiritual apprehension of the power of divine Mind alone to heal and govern the body has never been understood by either a material religion or a material medicine. Mankind, clinging tenaciously to these human beliefs, have through many generations concentrated their whole effort upon ministering to their purely material needs, utterly ignoring and willfully refusing to realize those larger claims which are purely spiritual.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Seventh Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. May Barris, who said in part:—

The aim of any Christian Science church in giving a lecture is simply to share with others the good they themselves have already received and proved to be true. We have proved that the understanding of God as given in Christian Science has brought us more joy, more peace, more harmony, and, best of all, more love for our fellow man than we have ever known before. It heals us of all our diseases, as the Bible teaches. Christian Science, rightly understood, so fills our hearts with love for God and man that we are compelled to find an outlet for this love not only to those who approve of our religion but also to those who do not.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK. (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Anna Robinson, who said in part:—

Jesus the Christ revealed God to humanity as Life, Truth, and Love. In the gospel of John we read, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." If a true and scientific knowledge of God is life, then it must follow that all sin, disease, and death are the result of ignorance or a lack of this understanding. Christian Science is here to-day demonstrating this understanding as ever present and ever operative to heal and to save.

Testimonies of Healing

I write this testimony with deep gratitude to God and to Mrs. Eddy for the loving help I have received. About five years ago an entire stranger brought Christian Science to my house. For years I had studied the Bible and led a good life, but when this truth was revealed to me I became a different woman. I had been a martyr to rheumatism for years, and the doctors pronounced it chronic and said I could never get any better, but after studying "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy I was entirely healed of this trouble; also bad headaches, dyspepsia and other ills have been overcome.

A few months after I received this truth I was gas poisoned and lay unconscious for some hours. My husband not knowing any Scientist to appeal to for help, called in a doctor, who prescribed for me, but as soon as I became conscious I applied the truth, knowing that God is all-powerful and an ever present help. I was quite recovered and about my household duties in three days, which much astonished the doctor. Since that time I have seen the power of Truth overcome very many forms of error in my home, and I am very grateful indeed to the one who first brought this truth to me. My husband, one son, three daughters, and one son-in-law have also received the truth, for which I am very thankful to God. I am also very thankful to all who have helped me in the study of this teaching, also for the Christian Science publications, which are very helpful, for the understanding I have of this truth and the many blessings received through the teaching of this God-sent Science.

(Mrs.) Jessie Alice Grant, London, England.

I can truthfully verify the statements of my wife's testimony. Christian Science has indeed been a blessing in our home and I have had very many proofs of the power of the truth. I am truly thankful for all the blessings and spiritual uplift which we have all enjoyed through the teachings of this blessed truth.—G. H. Grant.

I have many reasons for gratitude to Christian Science. My first healing, which occurred in 1905, was a wonderful experience to me. I had been ill for a number of days with serious trouble with my right ear, and feared if a physician were called he might find it necessary to operate. I was asked to try Christian Science treatment, which I consented to do, receiving immediate help. The fever, which was very high, was quickly overcome, leaving the flesh cool and normal. The ear trouble was also overcome with the second treatment, for which I am most grateful to Truth, to Mrs. Eddy, and the loving work of the practitioner.

I did not come into Christian Science for myself, but for a dear one. I had all the reading to do, so got the benefit. I was healed of many ailments through the reading of Science and Health. We were visiting in Concord, New Hampshire, my husband's native home, where I began to read this beautiful truth, more than twenty years ago. I had been an invalid all my life up to this time. I have been healed of stomach trouble, severe headaches, hemorrhoids, a broken wrist, and many other discordant conditions. Recently, while visiting a friend I met with an accident, and through God's protection I was saved. On going down a steep pair of stairs, I lost my balance and went head first down thirteen steps, striking my head with great force against a door at the bottom of the stairs. I was stunned for a time, but there were no broken bones, only a badly bruised and discolored face, which soon cleared up. I was able to be up and in the reading room all next day, until nine in the evening. I am grateful for class instruction, am a member of The Mother Church, also of a branch church. I am thankful to God for many blessings, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us how to apply the truth.

(Mrs.) Kate A. French, Evansville, Ind.

Christian Science has been my ever present help for a number of years. While reading Science and Health by Mary Baker Eddy I have been cured of bowel difficulty of many years' standing. Indigestion has also been overcome by the power of this truth. My husband was healed overnight from the mumps by the help of a loving practitioner.

I am indeed grateful to God, Christ Jesus the Wayshower, and to Mary Baker Eddy, who has enabled us to be living witnesses of the truth. I am grateful for the privilege of being a member of The Mother Church, also of a branch church, for the Christian Science literature, and for every channel which is helping to awaken me from the dream of material sense.

Christian Science came to me, as it does to many others, in time of discouragement, when many doctors had failed to give me any permanent help, and I had given up hope that I should ever be well again; but all troubles have left me one by one until life seems bright and harmonious once more. What I had suffered from leakage of the heart and high blood pressure and extreme nervousness no one knows. For the light and peace, joy and health it has brought into my life I can never be thankful enough. I want to devote my whole life to doing what I can for the cause of Christian Science, it has been such a help to me in my daily life. Our Lessons every morning are a great help to me. I wish every one could be made to see and know the wonderful good we get from this ever present help. I feel very grateful for the help I have received and to Mrs. Eddy, who has done so much for the suffering world.

(Mrs.) J. H. Ranger, Greene, Me.

A few years ago my daughter became interested in Christian Science and sent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, asking me to read it. I had been in poor health for a number of years, troubled with gastritis, and materia medica could not meet my need. My daughter came home in August and found me trying to overcome an attack of whooping cough. She called a practitioner for me. After one treatment my cough was less severe, and with a few more treatments it entirely left me. I found I could eat many things that I had not been able to eat for years and my health seems to be normal. I had not been able to walk a block for lack of strength; after treatment in Christian Science I was able to walk with ease.

For this healing I am very grateful. I am also grateful in finding the truth which makes us free, and teaches us that "God is All."—(Mrs.) Ida J. Morss, Medford, Mass.

In the spring of the year 1914 I was so ill that I felt compelled to give up my position. At that time I did not know anything of Christian Science, so felt that this was my only recourse, as my main ailment seemed to be a dyspeptic condition. I was continually dieting, and had lost nearly thirty pounds in a few months. I also had a continual cough which I was told to be very careful of, as it might lead to further complications in the condition I was in. Together with this I was always melancholy and brooded continually, fearing that I was going into consumption. Such was the condition I was in when I decided that the only thing for me to do was to seek an outdoor position; which I did, securing one on a farm. This I did in the face of all warnings, as every one I met told me I would be foolish to give up a good position and go to work on a farm, as that was the year the war began, and all firms were laying off help. The farm life seemed to agree with me, but I was never really well. I had not been there long before Christian Science was brought to my attention, and I grasped at it as a drowning man would a straw, and inside of a month I was completely healed. From just reading Christian Science literature that I was able to procure, I not only regained my former weight, but also could eat whatever I desired and the cough very soon disappeared. Whereas before I had doctored for more than four years to get well, I had then not taken a drop of medicine in more than two months, and had not seen a doctor, and, just through my reading of the literature had also dispensed with an electrical apparatus which I had been using for a nervous condition.

While on the farm an extension ladder which I was assisting in raising fell down, pinning my arm beneath the last rung on the extension part and the rung on which I was steadying the ladder. The two men who were with me released my arm as I was unable to draw it away, and immediately wanted to drive me to the nearest town to a doctor, but I told them it was not necessary as I was all right. All that could be noticed from this incident was a slight bruise, but I feel sure that had I not applied the little I then knew of Christian Science, I would not have fared so well. Upon coming back to the city I felt compelled to seek another position as I had my mother to support, and while I did not at first get what I thought I should have, I continually held to the thought that there was a right place for me. In about a month the way opened to a position such as I was seeking. I have now been here four years, being continuously employed indoors, and I have not had any recurrence of those ailments. During that time Christian Science has been my only physician, and words fail to express my gratitude for what Mrs. Eddy gave to the world and the benefits that I have received from it.

I would like to add my testimony to the many grateful messages of love. I am grateful first to God our creator, to Christ Jesus the Way-shower, and to Mrs. Eddy the Discoverer and Founder of this beautiful religion of love and the dear practitioners and friends who have helped me to see and know this wonderful truth. I love and thank them all. In October of 1911 after suffering for two years with rheumatism in my ankles, I was discouraged with doctors and medicine and threw away the medicine, saying, "It does me no good; I do not want it," when a friend advised me to try Christian Science. I went to a practitioner and a treatment was lovingly given, and for three days I rested between hope and doubt. On the fourth day, however, my attention was called to the needs of another, so I entirely forgot self, and on the fifth day when I thought of my ankles they were entirely well. What joy the practitioner and I felt at this release from bondage. In two more treatments I was healed of heart trouble, chronic stomach and bowel trouble, and of the need for wearing glasses that the oculist had said I should never leave off, only when asleep.

One thought that bothered me when giving up the old religion for the new was, Could I trust Christian Science in time of pneumonia if I should have another attack, as the doctors had said I would never pull through again. But even this was met and overcome in three treatments in the spring of 1917. Now all fear and distrust have cleared away and I can lovingly say I find Christian Science the law of God that can truly meet every need.

(Miss) EVA M. BOSTON, Oak Park, Ill.

I gratefully add my testimony to the multitude already sent. Nearly five years ago I first learned what Christian Science is, and after reading Mrs. Eddy's book, Science and Health, about two weeks, was healed of indigestion from which I had suffered for several years. Since then I have been healed of extreme nervousness, of a great deal of fear, jealousy, resentment, and worry about the future, and as these things have gone my health has proportionately improved. My five children and I have not taken any kind of medicine in those years. At different times my children have been in close contact with whooping cough, measles, and chicken pox, without any bad results. For this protection, and for healings too numerous to mention, I am deeply grateful, but I am more grateful for the understanding I am gaining of God's ever presence, and of man's indissoluble union with Him. I am grateful for the periodicals, including The Christian Science Monitor, which was so instructive and comforting during the war, to the practitioners for help so lovingly given, and to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful courage in standing alone to give this wonderful truth to a weary world.—(Mrs.) A. H. TOWNSEND, Victoria, British Columbia, Canada.

I wish to express my gratitude for all the many, many blessings which have come to me in the eighteen years I have been studying Christian Science. One blessing which I seem to be most grateful for is the overcoming of hate and the realization that hate is not the master of love; we are free from the effects of hate when we get it out of our own thoughts and see man as God's own child. I have been healed of bladder trouble after all medical help had failed. I have also been healed of severe sick headaches.

But although we are all so thankful for the physical healing, it does not compare with my great joy in knowing that we are beginning to know God aright and that we know we are right because we can prove it by solving all problems, as they come up each day.

I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us a rule to work by. I hope so to live that I may be worthy of the name Christian Scientist.—(Mrs.) PEARL WARD, Fort Worth, Tex.

For some time I have felt a desire to write and try to express my gratitude in a small way for what Christian Science has done for me. The testimonies have been such a help to me.

Science and Health was always in my home, but not until I was in my teens did I begin to read and understand it for myself. It has made the last three years happy and contented although my husband is not a Scientist. The past year would have been almost unbearable if it had not been for my understanding of Science. My husband was drafted July 22. We stored our furniture, rented our house, and I went home to my folks. How I was comforted knowing God governs all and there was nothing to fear for either of us. On October 4 our baby girl was born under Science treatment. Four hours later, after a hearty breakfast, I got up and walked down and upstairs twice, dressed the next day, and was downstairs all day as usual. Before baby's birth my health was perfect.

Words cannot express what Christian Science means to me. To say I am thankful to God for my many blessings does not begin to express my gratitude.

I had only been interested in Christian Science about two years when I was given the opportunity to demonstrate God's allness. I was playing basket ball in another town when my little finger was broken. I had to drive home—about twelve miles—and the pain was intense, and by the time I got there my hand was swollen and black. The pain was so intense I could not stand still long enough to talk, so asked a friend to telephone for help. I had one treatment that night and one the next day. The pain stopped after the first treatment and the swelling began to go down. Although the doctor told me that the knuckle was badly fractured, I never lost one night's sleep and had no material help of any kind touch my finger. Christian Science taught me to rely absolutely on God. I am unable to express my gratitude, remembering at all times that "with God all things are possible."

My little girl fell on the ice one day and the doctor told us as far as he could see she had a broken shoulder. I helped her, as we are taught in Christian Science, as far as I understood, and having proved God's power many times before, I had no fear, until the sixth day when the suggestion came that I should have the shoulder set, and so I saw the doctor. He said that union had started and she would have to go to the city and have it broken and reset. The first three words of that sentence gave me far more courage than he realized,—union had started; in fact, union was always complete, only I had not realized it. So I left him still the best of friends, but more convinced than ever that God's way is best. In two weeks the child went to school again, and in less than a month her arm was in use like the other. Whooping cough, jaundice, toothache, and other ills have also been healed through Christian Science.

(Mrs.) Ellen Smart, Watson, Saskatchewan, Canada.

I wish to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. Nine years ago I was healed of stomach and bowel trouble, tumor, colds, and other ailments, through the study of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. The past year I was healed of typhoid fever, pneumonia, pleurisy, and throat trouble through the loving help of practitioners. While I am more than grateful for these healings and for the spiritual uplift, I am also grateful for class instruction and the Christian Science literature, which is a great help to me in every way. I feel it indeed a privilege to be a member of The Mother Church; I am also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving to the world this understanding of God.—(Mrs.) Kathryn Merchant, Mineral City, Ohio.

Words fail to express my gratitude for the many beautiful demonstrations we have had in our home since beginning the study and practice of Christian Science. It is three years ago that it was first applied, when our daughter, aged three years, had been sick for six weeks with whooping cough, during which time she had had very little sleep. Having lost our infant daughter with the same disease, under medical care, we decided to give Christian Science a trial. A practitioner was called upon for help and within two days the claim was perfectly met. Since then we have had many healings.

While stationed at an Army camp in southern Illinois, I awoke one morning and found I could not raise myself from my cot. Lumbago had manifested itself so strongly that it became necessary to ask for help. I had a telegram sent to my wife, who immediately got in touch with a practitioner, and within four hours' time the disease was beautifully overcome. This and many other demonstrations have proved to me that "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."

I am grateful for the Sunday school, for it has taught our daughter to know what God is. I am also grateful for the periodicals that our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, has provided for us, and for the revelation of this great truth which has done and is doing so much for all mankind.

Harold I. Farr, Chicago, Ill.

I give this testimony in the hope that it will help some one as I have been helped by reading the testimonies given in our periodicals. Although I have been healed of kidney disease, I did not accept Christian Science expressly for healing, but because it seemed more satisfying than the so-called orthodox religion. To me Christian Science fills a daily need. There is no problem, large or small, but one may turn to divine Love with the assurance that it will be rightly solved. Words fail to express my deep gratitude for Christian Science and all its activities.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science. I have been healed of many discordant conditions. When first coming into Christian Science I was healed of car sickness, chilblains, and stomach disorder. I have also been healed of appendicitis; this was a perfect healing. Our baby was healed of a ringworm as large as a dollar in one absent treatment; within three days it had disappeared into its native nothingness.

I am so grateful for the privilege of subscribing to all our Christian Science literature, and for membership in The Mother Church as well as in one of our branch churches, and for being able to help in the distribution work. Hoping this testimony will be of help to some one hungering for a little of what the truth can do, I give thanks to God and express my gratitude for what Mrs. Eddy has done for mankind.

(Mrs.) Oma F. Kline, Auburn, Wash.

In the year 1917 I was physically ill and was made whole. To mortal sense, I was suffering with neuritis, and had lost the use of my limbs. When the practitioner was called, I was in bed unable to help myself. In a few days after Christian Science treatment was begun, I could raise myself in bed. A few days following that, with help, I got into a rocking-chair and was pulled out into the dining room. In two weeks, I was able to walk, by holding to the furniture, and within a month I could walk alone in my home and to my sister's home, which was in the same yard, and called up the practitioner. I then made calls at the practitioner's office a few times for another month, and am now healthy and robust.

At that time, I was laboring with the belief of financial loss, my husband and I having sold our home and invested our all in a project which brought us no returns. After I related my story to the practitioner, her first statement was,

"God's child never lost anything," and, as I awakened to this fact, it proved true in my experience, for my seemingly lost health, strength, and locomotion returned. But greatest of all, the understanding of God came to light and my material thinking is being supplanted by spiritual thinking.

I am especially grateful for joy and happiness, knowing, as Jesus said, "Your joy no man taketh from you."

(Mrs.) LIZZIE VOLLMAN, Erie, Pa.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science and for the many blessings that have come to us through its application. We have had many physical healings in our family, such as scarlet fever, whooping cough, measles, Spanish influenza, and many others. While I am grateful for the physical healings I am more grateful for the peace and happiness it has brought to our home. It has been such a help in caring for the children, as they grasp the truth so readily.

I am grateful for the literature, and especially so since living where there is no Christian Science church. No matter what the problem seems to be, there are always just the right articles to help solve them. I am thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving to the world this blessed truth which makes free.—(Mrs.) EMMA E. LEE, Peabody, Kan.

Christian Science has brought such an abundance of good to my life that I cannot find words to express my thankfulness. Once a sick, suffering, miserable, unhappy wreck, I am now a healthy, happy, useful woman. I am so thankful to God for giving Mrs. Eddy the understanding of Truth and the ability to give this understanding to the world. In gratitude for all of this I am trying every day to live according to Christian Science, as set forth in all our Leader's books and our literature.

(Mrs.) BESSIE HENRICHS, Virginia City, Nev.

Many times, as I have feasted upon these messages of loving gratitude to God for His great goodness, as they go forth to help some hungering heart, wandering in the desert of human hopes, I have longed to add a word that might also go forth and not return void.

Christian Science came to me four years ago, when the darkness seemed impenetrable. Two years and a half previous to this time, my husband had passed on, leaving me in the throes of deepest grief, with a baby boy eleven months old. I had always longed to know God. Though in the blackness, while I did not understand, I did not believe this separation was the work of God and, day after day, week after week, I prayed only these words, "O God, show me the way." I could not have had a more perfect answer to my prayer than the guidance which brought to me the light as revealed in Christian Science.

Struggling along as best I could, a severe illness seemed to fasten itself upon me, and at this point a prominent physician of our city made the declaration that one of my lungs was seriously affected and that I would not live six months unless I had a change of climate and perfect rest, as I was in dire need. I fully realized the dire need, but, having given my husband all that medical skill and human help could possibly give, I had lost all faith in human aid and had no desire to follow his treatment. At this point, through the loving help of two faithful friends who saw my need and presented the Christ, Truth, to me, I also soon knew that I did not need what the physician could do. I needed God and turned to Him completely and unreservedly and once again proved that "man's extremity is God's opportunity." I was quickly and perfectly healed and was truly grateful, but that was only the beginning of countless blessings in store for me.

I wanted to know more of this great and good God, who had delivered me out of my distress, and an earnest search was begun. It is just the new-old story. My son and I have found a loving Father-Mother God, upon whom we can absolutely rely in every time of need, and we know that He never fails nor forsakes His children who call upon Him in truth. My gratitude is profound to the noble woman, Mrs. Eddy, who so lovingly and untiringly labored that man might understand his true relationship to God. The fruits of her toil are clearly set forth in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which, when studied and applied, we find to be truly a key to our beloved Bible, unfolding God's love and the teachings of Jesus the Christ, as we have never before understood. My earnest prayer is for growth in grace, which can best be expressed in love and good deeds.—(Mrs.) GERTRUDE P. PHELPS, Detroit, Mich.

Seven years ago I was led to see the great good to be derived from a better understanding of God as found in Christian Science. During this time there has been a most remarkable change in my consciousness. Having had an inclination to see the faults in others, and myself too, I am now affirming good and denying evil, almost unconsciously. Having a family of six children, we have given Christian Science a fair test, proving all along that it meets all our needs. My husband, though not a Scientist, has been relieved of chills and other discordant physical conditions through Christian Science treatment. Our demonstrations have been more than I can tell, but for my own healing I am most grateful. Being very fearful of the law of heredity I was its victim, and had not Christian Science come into my life, I feel that I could not have been healed.

Any one who may be seeking peace, happiness, and health, I would urge to make an effort to get a better understanding of God by making a study of Christian Science, which includes the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy. I am very thankful for this better understanding of God, for I know it is the "pearl of great price" that Jesus spoke of in one of his parables.—(Mrs.) EVIE PEARSON BAIRD, Rossville, Tenn.

Life, Truth, Love

ANNIE ADAMS

O WONDROUS Life
That knows no death or sin,
Thy gates are open wide,
That all may enter in.

O blessed Truth
That comes to heal and cheer
Earth's heavy-laden ones
And cast out fear—

O tender Love,
Thine everlasting arms
Will shield each child of God
From all that harms.

O Life and Truth and Love,
All praise to Thee!
Our joy, our strength, our own,
Through all eternity!

Signs of the Times

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald]

Christianity—what is it? The answer to this great question has often been attempted by theologians of all sorts, and sectarians have quarreled and fought over it. Still the world does not seem to be saved from its sins; and the principles revealed in the life and teachings of Jesus are a long way from full realization in the lives of most of his followers, and are still entirely foreign to the great mass of humanity.

Is Christianity merely a matter of intellectual belief, or is it something more? Is it a formal adherence to a certain sect and a more or less conscientious conformity to its requirements, or is it something above and larger than any sect or denomination or all of them combined? Is it a belief in the reality of the truths recorded in the New Testament and an acceptance of Christ as there revealed as one's personal Savior and leader? Or is it something outside of, above, and beyond intellectual belief or conception, outward form, profession, or observance?

Do not the life and teachings of Jesus sufficiently define Christianity? Even this is not an adequate and sufficient definition. A suffering and sin oppressed world is unconsciously waiting for some one to show it that Christianity is a practical code of living ethics, and not a belief in something that is past, or any other intellectual process whatever; that it is nothing less than the spirit of Christ dominating the individual life, bringing something of his power, love, and helpfulness. And this needs to be shown, not by words and preaching alone, but by demonstrations in human lives.

The mind and the body work together. The mind has a strong effect on the health of the body. A fit of anger, or a spell of worry, or envy, or hate, or jealousy may make one more tired than a hard day's work. It should be every one's effort to replace the thoughts that make unhappy by thoughts that make happy. Forget your worries. The secret of life and of happiness seems to be in taking one's life and work cheerfully. Almost any one can assume this attitude, if the proper desire is present.

[Zion's Herald]

What America needs is more religion. Selfishness, which is always an antisocial force, is but too prevalent, among both rich and poor. Our only hope is the unifying influence of Christianity. Get the gospel into men, and in that very act and process they become brothers and helpers one of another. Any citizenship is a farce that is not a Christian citizenship. When politicians and reformers see this there will be more hope of a unified, that is, a pacified and prosperous America.

[David H. Fouse in Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

The electricians are wiser in their sphere than are the churchmen. When men discovered that electricity was an available force, they began intense investigations and innumerable experiments. To-day they are transfixed, not by what the pioneers discovered, nor yet by present achievements, but by the greater things they hope to do to-morrow. Instead of spending fifty years singing the praises of Franklin, Faraday, and Siemens, they built new and better dynamos, and have succeeded in doing greater works than the discoverers.

That same scientific spirit in the realm of Christianity would make Christ more than a name with which to conjure. It would make him the supremest power, recognized by all men. We are still looking back nineteen hundred years, worshiping the power manifest in Jesus, telling our love for him, but unable to reproduce his mighty works. The force he discovered to us we have not been able to apply to practical living with any certainty.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is a benefit in every way. It is such a blessing when one newspaper prints what it thinks is right and true and another prints what it thinks is right and true although exactly opposite in view, to be able to read and know that the MONITOR does print the truth; so instead of wasting time in reading other papers and trying to find out which has the correct view of events we just read the MONITOR and certainly are more than grateful for the privilege. The children at High School also get facts that help them, and we know what is taking place all over the world as well as on this side of the world; and no matter what a person is interested in there is always something in the MONITOR of interest, and we surely would consider it a great loss to be deprived of it. The editorials are a source of education themselves, and knowing they are true, unbiased, and unprejudiced are worth more than most of us realize until we think how much we would lose if we did not have them.

FOR a long time I have been interested in the course and character of your paper, which I have been able to see irregularly in my travels. In tone, breadth, accuracy, and mechanism it is a heartening model of daily journalism and, I hope, a prophecy of what the American Press is to be and to do in the better days farther on.

I WOULD love to express my appreciation for the Christian Science literature. I love all the works on Christian Science but could never find words to express my sincere gratitude for the MONITOR. It means very much to me and is like a spring in a desert, and I am rejoicing for the privilege of studying Christian Science.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JUNE 12, 1920 NUMBER 41

Love's Sufficiency

JOHN B. WILLIS

THERE are few passages in Mrs. Eddy's writings which have awakened more interest or begotten more inquiring thought than that which affirms that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health, p. 494). The questioning referred to has grown, for the most part, out of the failure of those who, though sincere and earnest in their attempted demonstration of health, or the supply of other needs, have not effectively related this sentence to the succeeding and correlated words of the paragraph in which it is found. Mrs. Eddy goes right on to say, "It is not well to imagine that Jesus demonstrated the divine power to heal only for a select number or for a limited period of time, since to all mankind and in every hour, divine Love supplies all good."

Reading the statement as a whole, it is to be seen that Love, as here used, includes very much more than mere kindly disposition. As commonly used, the word love often stands simply for the selfish, monopolistic impulses of kinship. Upon a higher plane it conveys the thought of affectionate good will, of all those noble impulses in which human brotherhood is grounded. It speaks for genuine unselfishness, for true devotion. Upon a yet higher plane it stands for glad and obedient response to divine Truth. The word when capitalized, however, surely embraces very much more than all these nobler meanings. It signifies not only quality but substance, the spiritually creative and corrective energy and efficiency; it is the God who is Love and is the "divine power to heal" which "supplies all good;" and the relations of this understanding of the term in Christian Science to human life are at once recognized as of vital significance. That Love can and does measure up to the demand of every human need, is now clearly seen.

Christ Jesus demonstrated God as Love, and in many sayings sought to convey the thought of His brooding nearness. The sense of personal relationship, that of a parent to a child, has thus obtained in all Christian teaching about God. Nevertheless, the greater part of the Christian world has not got beyond the thought of love as expressing good disposition, unselfish impulsion, compassionate regard. Christian Science deepens and solidifies the thought into that of entity, the heart of being. Love and power are thus identified as one and the same, and the far-reaching significance of this fact is found in the realization that it has immediately to do with the solution of our every problem. The moment one begins to think of spiritual love as reflecting divine power, that moment, as never before, he can but recognize his own ability to do, to bring right things about, since consciousness always gives such definite and unquestionable testimony as to our ability to love nobly, if we will. In the fourth chapter of I John this awareness is constantly assumed, and the knowing that we love God is affirmed to be the proof of our right knowledge of God. The apostle further declares that the question of our love for and our at-one-ment with God, is to be determined by the sincerity of our love for our brother man, concerning which we can be entirely sure, so that our relation to God may be correspondingly free from all uncertainty. "Every one that loveth," says John, "is born of God, and knoweth God. . . . If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us." The relation of love for our fellow man to love for God, so that His love is "perfected in us,"—grows more and more wonderful as one thinks of it, and the possible sequences of the fact are simply stupendous.

With John's logical and lucid statement of the case in mind, let one begin to think of Love as power, and at once his sense of capacity can but begin to assume dimensions which crowd all his past false humility out of existence, and Paul's words, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," become not only intelligible, but impellingly inspiring. The self-depreciation which has formerly been so ready to excuse small and superficial achievements, is erasingly rebuked. The obeying of the Master's demand, "The works that I do shall he do also," no longer seems unattemptable, and a great sense of relief comes over one respecting the possibility of the world's redemption. How pertinent to every spiritually minded man now seem the words from Isaiah, which heretofore, perchance, have been associated in thought with Christ Jesus alone,—"The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach glad tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." This inspiring commission is now recognized as the call to those who have ears to hear, to the true "me," and the vision of one's privilege and duty is suddenly enlarged and illumined a thousandfold. The most vital thing of experience has now become the most simple, since we know that we can know our own states of consciousness perfectly well. We can test out and verify them beyond a peradventure, and, having settled this question of our attitude toward our fellow men and hence our attitude toward God, our receptivity to divine Love, the fact of the availability of the Christ-power is no longer debatable.

In every true Christian Scientist the sense of inefficiency must naturally and inevitably give place to an ever growing, ever more gladdening consciousness of rightful dominion. He has come to understand that "Love giveth to the least spiritual idea might, immortality, and goodness, which shine through all as the blossom shines through the bud" (Science and Health, p. 518). In receiving from God and imparting to men, he reveals the divine supply to meet his brother's need; and his thought of his true self, of his place and power in God's plan, is unfolded. Consciously claiming God's help in an undertaking that is both simple and scientific, and, as consciously, embracing his needy fellow man in a love that is good Samaritanlike, he is capable of an inspired, intelligent, and successful endeavor to save the human situation. His business is therefore the most important of all occupations. This was the Master's unequivocal teaching, and it unequivocally rebukes the individual and collective inertia of those professed Christians who deny their Lord by dishonoring his assuring words, "Behold, I give unto you power . . . over all the power of the enemy," and who in their tacit consent to the asserted inefficiency of spiritual law to meet the world's great need, have become one of the greatest menaces to the success of that supreme intent which was expressed in Jesus' words, "I am come that they might have life."

This efficiency and adequacy of Love reflected is interestingly matched to-day by a world-wide call for brotherliness and cooperation, a call such, indeed, as history has never before chronicled. Men of every state, caste, and degree are pleading, vocally or otherwise, for the love which will insure justice and a fair chance, the healing and happiness which the human heart instinctively demands. So insistent and imperative is this call, and so ignorant are the many of the rule of righteousness, of Love, that they fain would force the issue and compel the coming and reign of right and goodness and truth! In such an hour happy, surely, is he who knows the Principle and rule which demonstrate the availability of the divine power; who in every relation of life and in every word and act is mindful of others, and helps them to see and concede, though they may not understand, the world transforming fact of Love's sufficiency.

Light

ROSE N. SUTRO

JUST as the flowers and all nature turn to the light and sunshine, sometimes through the stoniest crevices, so does a man seek good. Sometimes through the greatest tribulations, sorrow, or sickness he seeks God, good, in whose light he, as image and likeness, lives and moves and has his being. Throughout the Scriptures light has been used as the symbol of spiritual understanding, just as its supposititious opposite, darkness, has always typified ignorance and materiality. Beginning with Genesis 1:3, "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light," we find that wherever the light appears it is the end of the darkness. Whenever a truth is apprehended it is through understanding, which is an end to ignorance. That is just as true of metaphysics as it is of light and darkness or of mathematics. When we have learned that twice two is four, we are not concerned as to what has become of the error in our mathematical problem where twice two may have been admitted to be five or three; nor when our room is flooded with sunshine are we disturbed to discover what has become of the darkness that seemed to envelop us before the shades were drawn up. In like manner, when we learn that man in the image and likeness of God is all the man there is, there need be no concern as to what becomes of the material or mortal sense of man that we have hitherto admitted to be man.

On page 485 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mary Baker Eddy says, "Emerge gently from matter into Spirit." Can one go from the darkness of night to the full radiance of noontide glory without going through the transitional period of dawn and rising sun? We soon learn in the study of Christian Science that patience must have "her perfect work," and Mrs. Eddy says on page 407 of Science and Health: "Let the perfect model be present in your thoughts instead of its demoralized opposite. This spiritualization of thought lets in the light, and brings the divine Mind, Life not death, into your consciousness."

When a problem presents itself to a Christian Scientist for solution, what does he do? He does not inquire as to where the error or darkness comes from; he knows that wherever a false or mortal sense of things presents itself to his thought, "Science reverses the false testimony of the physical senses, and by this reversal mortals arrive at the fundamental facts of being" (Science and Health, p. 120). Thus, right where the lie appears to be, right there actually is the truth that the lie is lying about. Instead of darkness there is light, instead of death there is Life, instead of inharmony there is harmony, and so on and on; always there is a spiritual fact instead of a material counterfeit.

In Proverbs there is reiterated counsel to get wisdom, to get understanding. In I Kings we read that when Solomon became king he prayed for an understanding heart that he might judge the people, and as he put it, that he might "discern between good and bad." The answer that came to him was that since he asked not for long life nor riches nor revenge upon his enemies, but for wisdom and understanding, he should have what he asked, and all those things which he had not asked. All earnest seekers after Truth learn that in proportion as they seek good, the so-called opposite goes out of their experience. There is no room for darkness in light; no more is there room for evil in good, or sickness in health. It therefore behooves the student of Christian Science to "emerge gently," but to be very sure that he is emerging, from the darkness of ignorance into the effulgence of light, where it will be as Jeremiah prophesied, "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."

The Interpreter

MARTIN WACHS

DIVINE Mind is ever in direct communication with His idea, the real man. He therefore never has need of an intermediary by which to make His presence, power, and intelligence fully and demonstrably known and felt. Mortals, the product of the false, fleshly, supposititious, carnal, or death mind, do, however, seem to be in constant need of something which will remind them that God, divine Mind, is uninterruptedly making known to man, His idea, just exactly what it is right for man to know,—what man needs to know and must know. The human race supposes that it needs an interpreter for these divine messages, and it is for this reason that some of the world's most noted men and women have been so regarded, simply because they had the clear vision and ability to interpret for humanity the import of vital, spiritual truths. When all men correctly interpret the truths which emanate from the one infinite Mind, or consciousness, the reign of universal harmony will be conceded to be a present and demonstrable fact.

"We can have but one Mind, if that one is infinite," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 469 of Science and Health. A realization that this one and only good Mind, or Mind of good, is omnipresence, omnipotence, and omniscience, when steadfastly adhered to inevitably prevents men from differing from each other. They, then, must of necessity be able to understand each other thoroughly, and for that reason to be always in perfect agreement. It is because the truth about God, the one and only Mind, is not properly interpreted, that they utterly fail to understand each other as they should. It is, then, this interpretation of what properly constitutes the facts of creation which must be gained in order that that Mind may be in us, "which was also in Christ Jesus." The universe of divine Mind must always be inseparable from and coexistent with Him, for cause is always one with the effect which expresses it.

In that remarkable second chapter of Acts, we find that "when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. . . . And they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." We are further told, in this same chapter, that all that were there gathered together heard what the disciples said in the tongue or language of their own country, and yet that each and all perfectly understood Peter as he delivered that memorable sermon which explains so beautifully and simply the truth about God and His Christ. Here was no disorder, no confusion, no doubt, no misunderstanding. Peter was interpreting to them and for them the message given him by divine Mind. Furthermore, he was telling it in a language which must ever be common to all climes and peoples—the language of Spirit.

What Peter was telling them has always been ready for all who have attained to sufficient spiritual understanding. What is true about anything has always been true and always will be true, for Truth is God, and He is always the same. Must not, then, that which proceeds from Him be like Him—changeless? Peter was telling them nothing new, for everything that was made, is made. He was, however, interpreting for them what God had made, so that which was demonstrably evident to him, could become just as apparent to them. He was translating what had been revealed to him,—just what must eventually be revealed to all men.

Perhaps more than at any other time in the world's history, we have need for the true interpreter which will deliver the message of Mind to men,—the message which divine Love is ever imparting and unfolding to man. Christ Jesus exemplified for us, as well as for all time, just what this interpreter is. He interpreted and demonstrated God aright. It is for us to follow in the footsteps of the master Metaphysician if we would truly realize that "we are members one of another." It was Christian Science which Jesus practiced over nineteen hundred years ago,—the Science which was later revealed to the inspired vision of Mary Baker Eddy. This Science it is which fulfills the lofty and holy purpose for man of teaching him to know God, good, as All-in-all, and evil as nothing. It reveals man as the offspring of Spirit, not of matter. Of this Science, Mrs. Eddy writes in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 127): "Science is an emanation of divine Mind, and is alone able to interpret God aright. It has a spiritual, and not a material origin. It is a divine utterance,—the Comforter which leadeth into all truth."

According to the erroneous evidence of the physical senses, we are many and divided peoples with many languages and hence without that common means of imparting our thoughts one to another which most assuredly will sometime and in some way be realized. "And the whole earth was of one language;" that is to say, all men at one time had a common language or medium of expression. Then fear, the besetting sin, fell upon them. Becoming alarmed lest they should in some way become separated, they undertook to reach a material sense of heaven, or harmony, by means of a tower, matter. The ensuing results were, of course, confusion, misunderstanding, discord—in which such futile methods must always result.

Since that time men have tried to discover a means that would release them from this mesmeric state of fear and confusion. The prophets, including Moses, pointed out this way to them many, many times and in innumerable ways, by interpreting God and His idea according to the light given them. Disobedience kept the Israelites from doing what they were so often shown how to do, and so it is that to-day there appears the same need for a way which will enable each and every one to attain to that clarity of vision which will make possible and practical the present demonstration of the reign of perpetual, universal harmony.

Christian Science exactly fulfills this need. It interprets God and all that He made, so that even a little child may easily understand. It is because of this. that sooner or later all must come to know the mission and message which Christian Science has for them. In no other way can God's kingdom be demonstrated on earth. Jesus was able to heal because the true interpretation of creation was the only one which he would accept. It was because of the correct interpretation of Scripture, that Mary Baker Eddy was able to be instantly healed. The cause of Christian Science rests entirely upon the scientific interpretation of this much loved Book. If Christian Science did nothing else for the world than to make its followers eager students of the Bible, it would be doing inestimable good, for it enables them to recognize the fact that what they there read is spiritually inspired, hence only to be interpreted spiritually.

Facts

DORA A. DILLON

ON page 479 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "In the vast forever, in the Science and truth of being, the only facts are Spirit and its innumerable creations." How great a change of outlook is necessary before we are ready to receive and act upon this statement. Facts, to the human being, are those things to which his human senses testify, and undeterred by the fact that he is continually proving these human senses to be unreliable, he accepts their evidence and credulously builds up from that evidence a mass of false opinions about everybody and everything in the universe. He is quite satisfied as to the reality of these false opinions, and just so long as he holds them they block his view of the real facts. All physical ailments, all lack, all sorrow, all sin are the result of a man's mental vision of fact being blocked by false opinion. Remove the false opinion and the true facts will appear,—the facts of health, harmony, abundance, purity, sinlessness, which were obscured.

It is most important to realize that the facts are there all the time, just as the sun is there all the time when we are groping in a fog. Christian Science treatment does not change or alter any fact. It removes the fog of false opinion that prevents us from seeing God's facts in the sunshine of His love. What we need to do for healing is to see from God's point of view, since only from the standpoint of absolute Truth can facts be viewed aright. Consider for a moment the relation of thoughts—ideas—to the mind which forms them. As Mind is, so is its idea. The thoughts of Love are loving—the ideas of the pure truth are pure, the thoughts of vigorous divine intelligence manifest vigor. This then must be the nature of the thoughts, the ideas, in the Mind which is God—absolute, infinite, eternal good. Think of the purity of these ideas, their power, their freedom, their joy in action, the perfection with which they express all that is in the Mind which is Love. True individuality is such an idea. What hinders us from realizing this? Nothing but false opinion of what constitutes a man and a woman, derived from what the material senses tell us. They report weakness, confusion, inability, sickness, lack, et cetera. They make a picture of a self not in the image and likeness of God, good, but in the image and likeness of matter; not under the law of Life, but under the law of death. But what these senses show us are not facts. Only what God knows about man is true. Which point of view are we taking, God's standpoint or that offered us by the material senses?

Let any one honestly strive for the divine point of view. Let him know it to be the true one, order thought and action in accord with this understanding, and he will soon prove for himself that it brings harmonious and eternal facts to light. He will find false opinion dissolving as a mist dissolves, and God's real creation, God's real sons and daughters beginning to appear to him instead of the counterfeit presentments which have been cheating him of love and health and joy. On page 584 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has written: "The objects of time and sense disappear in the illumination of spiritual understanding, and Mind measures time according to the good that is unfolded. This unfolding is God's day, and 'there shall be no night there.'"

One Government

JACOB A. REID

ON page 73 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, states: "The belief that one man, as spirit, can control another man, as matter, upsets both the individuality and the Science of man, for man is image. God controls man, and God is the only Spirit. Any other control or attraction of so-called spirit is a mortal belief, which ought to be known by its fruit,—the repetition of evil." It is only reasonable to suppose that like must necessarily come from like; in fact, anything to the contrary could not appear reasonable, for it is against all that is intelligently known. The fact that one is alive and conscious proves that true living can come only from a source of like substance and that all must naturally come from the same source, the same Life or consciousness. This line of reasoning must of itself denote the fact that, coming from the one Mind, all must of necessity be governed and controlled by the one infinite source. This at once relieves us of any false responsibility in governing our fellow man. Jesus made this plain in many ways and has told us very plainly to deny ourselves and follow him. This means of course to deny the belief that human beings are of themselves an entity, since all true experience is governed, supported, and controlled by one loving Parent.

Both Science and Health and the Bible in many places continually remind us that God is Spirit and also that God is Love, and it naturally and necessarily follows that God's government or way of governing can be through only one method—that of love. Any attempt at governing, therefore, in our daily intercourse with our fellow man, upon any other basis than that of the law of Love, indicates a lack of understanding or disregard of both law and order, and must naturally result in discord and inharmony. Man, being God's expression, is under the divine law of Love—Love being the only creator.

Ever to think of man as a material being is to deny Truth, for mortal man was never really created, does not exist, and never can exist, for the simple reason that God, the first cause and creator, was and is All, and being purely Spirit, had nothing whatever to create from except Mind or Spirit. The false belief that there is such a thing as a material man comes from the general belief that there is such a thing as a mortal or carnal mind. God is the one and only Mind. Any deviation from this fact naturally shows to us plainly that the error is in seeming lack of understanding and not the fault of our brother man.

Christian Science gives us dominion, but that dominion is purely through the power of Love, the only substance there is, for it is the creative substance of our very being. The demonstration of God, or Love, which is man's natural and only expression, is the tie which shall bind us in one harmonious and happy family. The Christ, or expression of Love or God made manifest, is harmonious and infinite being, proving heaven here and now. We must all do our best in extending the good news of the effectiveness of Christian Science, and if at any time our foot should slip and we should be anxious to make amends, let us remember that our heavenly Father is always ready to strengthen us with sufficient courage, and that He rewards us doubly for our efforts at right doing.

Human beings are admittedly far from perfect; so let us extend the hand of friendship to our brother and not forget Christ's Sermon on the Mount, and understand as best we may that true government is strictly impersonal and wholly and eternally in the hands of our Father-Mother God, "with whom," as the apostle James assures us, "is no variableness, neither shadow of turning;" as Isaiah expresses it, "For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king."

The Unity of the Faith

E. CAROLINE DUTTON

"THE Lord our God is one Lord," we read in Deuteronomy. Because God is one, therefore cause is one, and that one is Spirit, infinite, All, the Alpha and the Omega. In God there are no degrees of comparison. God is not more to-day than yesterday, nor will there be more of God in time to come. This one only God is Mind, and right here and now is this one infinite intelligence, called God, operative uniformly and without limitation.

Despite any seeming confusion, the reaching out of to-day is for democracy, for the oneness of Mind, Principle, and the oneness of its idea, with its sequence—direct and inevitable government of the oneness of infinite idea by the oneness of Principle, which alone constitutes true democracy. This reaching out is seen on all sides, in what are called the religious, social, political, or other walks of life. It is obvious that there can be no right conclusion without a correct premise. For example, we cannot begin with matter and end with Spirit, or vice versa, nor can effect differ from its cause. On page 126 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read: "The point at issue between Christian Science on the one hand and popular theology on the other is this: Shall Science explain cause and effect as being both natural and spiritual? Or shall all that is beyond the cognizance of the material senses be called supernatural, and be left to the mercy of speculative hypotheses?" That which truly is, must ever have been, and ever will be. So if the "I" of man is mortal to-day, it will be mortal to-morrow and forever. To human sense only does mortality even appear to be evolving toward spirituality.

Genuine spirituality understands, and is proved by present demonstration. On page 242 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," Mrs. Eddy says: "You can never demonstrate spirituality until you declare yourself to be immortal and understand that you are so. Christian Science is absolute; it is neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it; it is at this point and must be practised therefrom. Unless you fully perceive that you are the child of God, hence perfect, you have no Principle to demonstrate and no rule for its demonstration." Unless one understands and maintains this absolute fact, one is, at best, only a believer in Christian Science. Now a believer in mathematics would never constitute a mathematician. If one desires to be a mathematician, one must cease merely believing in mathematics and become one with the rule of mathematics; for it is this oneness of actual understanding which constitutes a mathematician. So it is in Christian Science; the single point at issue in any problem is the true unity of Mind, the oneness of God and His idea, man. This is the unity of true faith, which must mean, in the last analysis, true spiritual understanding and not mere human belief.

There is and ever will be but one God, supreme over all. The very reaching out for the understanding of this supremely governing Principle is conclusive evidence that true democracy already is, as the idea of this Principle; for if it were not, it could not be demonstrated or even sought for. It is already established in Mind. It cannot be stepped into humanly, for only as the human is replaced by the divine can true democracy appear. It is to human sense alone that it can even seem to be acquired, to be gained through accretion, just as to human sense it may appear that spirituality is acquired, or gained through accretion, instead of demonstration.

The true democracy of spiritual understanding, which is of Principle, Mind, is the only real unity of the faith. The daring to stand for the unity of the faith is the standard and watchword of the faithful. Fidelity to that which is, is the "open sesame" to the kingdom of heaven here and now. Mrs. Eddy says on page 253 of Miscellany: "Dare to be faithful to God and man. Let the creature become one with his creator, and mysticism departs, heaven opens, right reigns, and you have begun to be a Christian Scientist." Turning to Principle and unreservedly relying on Principle, individuals and nations, hand in hand as allies, will prove cooperation to be the very essence of democracy, until, in the words of Paul, "we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

SARAH A. WILLIAMS

WHAT though I sleep not nor slumber,
Who shall be able to number
The blessings that come in the hush of the night?
Though darkness surround me
It cannot confound me,
Since God is all presence, all Life, and all light.

In Him I am dwelling;
His angels are telling
The story my longing heart hungers to hear,
Of goodness and beauty
Which come when our duty
Is done; and we realize God is so near.

His presence brings gladness,
His love destroys sadness,
His light dispels darkness and doubting and fear.
He is Father and Mother,
We seek not another;
We trust Him to guide us; our pathway is clear.

["Compromise"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., March 12, 1920]

The English word, compromise, is found, upon reference to its sources, to come from a Latin verb, promitto (to promise), and a prefix, com (together); while promitto itself is compounded of mitto (to send) and pro (forth). Structurally at least, then, the English word seems to mean to promise together, or to send forth together. Only so far will dissection take the inquirer, and definition is of little further assistance. To find revealed the truth about compromise, one must seek beyond the material word in language to the spiritual fact of which any and all language can be but the crudest expression.

To guide the searcher for the truth about words, Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has written on page 338 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "The dissection and definition of words, aside from their metaphysical derivation, is not scientific." Therefore the student of Christian Science, who is learning to seek first "the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," often finds inspiration in renovating old words by applying his understanding of spiritual fact to their worn-out definitions. The Old Testament from Genesis to Malachi is full of the promise of unfoldment of God, good, and His idea, man and the universe—and the New Testament is that unfoldment. To Abraham is promised the increase of those who live by faith; to Moses the sight of the promised land; to the psalmist the joy and companionship of awaking "with thy likeness;" to Isaiah the "Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace;" to Malachi the "messenger of the covenant;" while in the New Testament the Christ is revealed. The student of Christian Science sees that the seeming time separation between the Old and New Testaments, between promise and unfoldment, is but an illusion of the so-called human mind, to be overcome in his own experience by increased understanding of God's omnipresence and omnipotence in the eternal now. Thus he sees that the reality of creation is the first and one great promising together—the sending forth together of His idea by the creative Principle, Mind, God.

The false view of creation given in Genesis from the sixth verse of the second chapter onward, which enters into the narrative only as the supposititious opposite of the true, is the immediate entrance of false compromise. Following "mutual concessions" between the serpent with his inherent dishonesty and Eve with her disobedience, the forbidden fruit is eaten, with the consequent results to humanity: the flood, the forty years in the wilderness, the sufferings of Job, the lamentations of Jeremiah, the slaughter of the innocents, the bondage of the "woman whom Satan hath bound," the Dark Ages, the fears that beset modern society; from which gloomy summary it must be clear to the alert thinker and seeker for Truth, that, as Jesus said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." If, in other words, a man makes promises together with evil, he cannot share the promise of good; if he yields one iota from his understanding of Principle, he cannot stand with Principle and cannot expect the absolute perfection of result that follows at-one-ment with Principle.

This standing with Principle is quite a different thing from the stubborn resistance of the human mind to changing its own outline of what a result shall be. Departing from the mandates of this so-called mind is in reality simply recognizing their nothingness, their lack of power to influence right result, which is above influence, since it is the direct effect of the divine intelligence, God, good. It is just here that the "metaphysical derivation" of words, of which Mrs. Eddy wrote as quoted above, will avail all who care to avail themselves of it. The student of Christian Science knows that to cease to stand with Principle is not only to compromise falsely but is verily to go over into the enemy's camp, since "omnipotence has all-power, and to acknowledge any other power is to dishonor God" (Science and Health, p. 228).

True compromise, then (and such there is, since Truth's very opposite, however expressed, presupposes Truth), must be the unfoldment, the sending forth of the perfect adjustment or settlement. It was such adjustment that Jesus made manifest when the Pharisees and the Herodians took to him the question, "Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?" Him who, more than all others, had acknowledged God to be the supreme governor, they hoped to trap—to make yield to the sum total of materialism as expressed to that age, typified by Cæsar's image on the coin. But he blasted their false hopes by unmasking the issue thus: "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's." The same narrative goes on to say that those who had come to chide him "marvelled at him," as the false, cowardly lie must inevitably do when it is unmasked by fearless statement of the truth of which it is only the suppositional opposite.

To him who looks out from the vantage point of real definition it becomes clear that to concede the inability of the so-called human mind as a factor in righteous government, whether of individual or of nation, is to achieve the expression of oneness of Principle and its idea, and so truly to compromise. For him, any apparent clouding of the issue in his business relations or any seeming indecision in the conduct of international politics holds no element of dread. He stands and works and watches, as that height of emotional idealism, reached by so great a portion of the world's population during the heat of battle, now comes in the quiet of armistice, conference, and possible peace, to its practical test. He knows that this test will be met according as the results arrived at are based on Principle. He is not moved by the bold or the subtle argument of evil, that not to yield some ground may jeopardize the whole structure. In Christian Science he has learned that "the right way wins the right of way, even the way of Truth and Love whereby all our debts are paid, mankind blessed, and God glorified" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, p. 232). Knowing that the very raging of the powers of darkness is but his opportunity to glorify God, he is supported in this privilege by the statement on page 448 of Science and Health, "It is Christian Science to do right, and nothing short of right-doing has any claim to the name." Thus he will go on, "from strength to strength," in the words of an old hymn; he will stand always with Principle, fearless of the whispered consequences of refusing to concede ground to expediency, his consciousness filled with the great com-promise, the oneness of Principle and its idea.

[James M. Stevens in The Tribune, Thief River Falls, Minn.]

I have read with much interest the article, "Calmness Brings Health," in a recent issue. The doctor's position is a very commendable one, but it does not necessarily approach the teachings of Christian Science. For while it is true that equanimity is necessarily an outcome of the study and practice of Christian Science, equanimity, under the generally accepted meaning of the word, may be the resultant of conditions diametrically opposite to Christian Science. For example, stoicism or passivity—either of these states of consciousness may manifest equanimity, but neither of them can be considered as in any way related to Christian Science.

Equanimity, according to the doctor, if I understand his viewpoint correctly, would be acquired by material education or the cultivation and exercise of human will power, perhaps carried to the point where imperturbability would become habitual or involuntary. On the other hand, equanimity achieved through Christian Science comes from the understanding of God, good, as the one creative and governing power, always present and ever available. This correct understanding of God and of man created in his "image and likeness" inculcated upon the consciousness of any child, will give to it the true basis of equanimity.

The equanimity which Jesus displayed was the result of his understanding of God and of his knowledge of his true self. He knew that there was no power inherent in himself to make him do or not do anything. He said, "I can of mine own self do nothing" and "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works," thus showing that he recognized the power which directed and controlled his being to be other than himself, and he knew that this power was unerring, unchanging, ever present Love, and that in this ever present, all-inclusive Love he lived and moved and had his being. He knew as a positive, demonstrable fact what every loyal Christian Scientist is trying to demonstrate, namely, that God is Love, unchanging, ever present, all-inclusive, eternal; and this understanding lifted him above the human sense.

Christian Science agrees that worry and insomnia may be "an outgrowth of a lack of emotional control" and that "the best cure for them is equanimity," but it maintains that this equanimity must be an equanimity acquired by an understanding of God and of man as His image and likeness, and not through any education of the human will to control the thoughts of the individual. Christian Science further maintains that not only the "minor ills to which the human flesh is heir" but that all of its ills, both functional and organic, are due to a lack of true equanimity, and that the equanimity which will heal them is the equanimity which can be achieved only by the understanding and demonstration of God.

[Lee White in The Herald, Decatur, Ill.]

In recent issues of your paper appeared summaries of addresses given by a clergyman on the "Life of Mary Baker Eddy" and "Truth and Error of Christian Science."

The clergyman said, "There is much in her system which she got from Dr. Quimby." For him so to assert, makes apparent that he probably knows as little of what Dr. Quimby taught as he knows about what Mrs. Eddy taught. It is surprising that he should present that story; for there is no more relation or connection between the teaching of Dr. Quimby and that of Christian Science than there is between his teachings and that of Methodism. The Quimby falsity has been refuted and disproved all through the years, and it is a pity that the clergyman should fall a victim to it and be made to state it from a public platform.

The clergyman observed, "The future of Christian Science will depend on whether the Christian Science church will be able to eliminate the crude and really unscientific elements from the movement." If such elements had actually existed in the Christian Science movement it would have fallen to pieces long ago. On the other hand, it has been false concepts of Christian Science that have come to naught.

No religious teaching presented in modern times has received such a merciless onslaught of scorn and rejection from material scientists, physicians, and theologians as has Christian Science. Yet, strange as it may appear, the Christian Science church includes within its membership thousands of men and women who formerly had a place in the ranks of science, theology, and medicine.

Our friend, the clergyman, need not be discouraged; for the light of understanding of what Christian Science actually does teach may appear unto him some day. He is entitled to his individual view as to Mrs. Eddy being an inspired religious writer. The fact remains that her interpretation of the inspired word of the Bible has made possible such a practical application of the teachings thereof that a multitude of people throughout the world have been rescued from sin and delivered from sickness. It is proper to observe that people do not accept the teachings of Christian Science except through a solid conviction of their worth and truth, wherein the cravings of faith and the demands of reason, regarding God and His creation, are abundantly satisfied with "signs following."

The clergyman portrays a rather kindly spirit in his effort to explain the teachings of Christian Science and in several places actually admits there is some good in it. His attempt to explain the Christian Science system of healing was absurdly incorrect, therefore unjust to Christian Science and unfair to his audience.

Any effort to heal the sick and liberate the sinner, based upon the explanation he made, would certainly meet with ignominious failure; and yet the healing of sickness and the overcoming of sin, as demonstrated through a correct understanding of the teachings of Christian Science, go on hourly all over the world and explain its wonderful growth during the half century now past.

Trying to explain the cures made in Christian Science, the clergyman said, "For the most part the cures are explained by suggestion to the conscious self, in large part to the subconscious self." One wonders why he should put forth so complacently such a so-called explanation. Nowhere in Mrs. Eddy's writings can be found any basis for the assertion that Christian Science heals through mental suggestion.

Mental suggestion is altogether a thing of the carnal mind. It is the old, old story repeated. When through faith and understanding an effort is made to follow in the footsteps of the Master, and prove that his teachings result in salvation from sickness as well as from sin, it is met with the scornful accusation, "This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils."

Mental suggestion no more enters the practice and work of Christian Science than it does into the practice and work of mathematics, where only a revealed knowledge of the principles, ideas, and unalterable rules of numbers will produce correct answers and results. Likewise in Christian Science, only a spiritual understanding and a scientific knowledge of God as the infinite, creative, divine Principle, will heal the sick and overcome sin. God is divine Principle, and His unalterable rule is the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." That Principle understood and that rule obeyed, by rejecting the evidences of the five physical senses, which are the only witnesses of sin, sickness, and discord, is what enables the Christian Scientist to prove the teachings of the great Master.

Our friend, according to the published statements in your paper, plainly evidences that he could have made only a very cursory examination of the teachings of Christian Science, and then considered himself competent to explain that subject in public to an audience. Again it is proper to say that to present such incorrect statements about Christian Science was not fair to those who heard him, for they were entitled to have a correct statement of Christian Science instead of a misrepresentation of it. It was also an injustice to himself, because it was not in accordance with the Golden Rule. Those in his audience who in the course of time investigate for themselves will learn what an unjustifiable attack was made on Christian Science and its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy.

As a matter of fact, Christian Science needs no defense. In every community where there are Christian Scientists, their lives and their works sufficiently attest the value of the teachings of Christian Science. Invariably they are good citizens, very law-abiding, very much given to minding their own business and not that of others, fully minded to worship God supremely and love their neighbors as themselves, and deeply consecrated to the Christian duty of lessening evil in the world.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Aberdeen (Scotland) Journal]

In a recent issue there appears the following statement, "The Christian Scientist can cure his own seasickness, but he cannot drive out organic heart disease, if that is his complaint."

Heart disease of every form has been completely healed through Christian Science treatment. A careful examination of the testimonies given in the Christian Science monthly and weekly publications will reveal this. Christian Science heals both organic and functional diseases, for they are both derived from the same source, namely, fear, ignorance, or sin. From this it will be seen that all disease has a mental origin, and can only be eradicated by exorcising from the human consciousness the offending errors and replacing them with the spiritual truth of being as revealed in Christian Science. It takes the Mind of Christ to do this, and the healing is, therefore, moral, physical, and spiritual.

One of the most remarkable effects of Christian Science healing is the earnest desire it awakens in the patient to study the Bible in order to know more about God. It is the only form of healing in the world to-day which has this effect. Our Master, when answering the Jews who accused him of casting out devils by Beelzebub, said, "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." This is the Christ, or Christian Science method.

City of God

MARY E. COBB

THERE came to me once as I pondered,
A vision of beauty and light;
I saw, with the eyes of the spirit,
The city that has no night.

There sorrow and sin do not enter,
But only reflections of Love;
All darkness and shadows are banished,
For God is the light thereof.

It is not a place in the distance
One must pass through death to win,
But a state of harmonious being—
The kingdom of heaven within.

There earth with its cares and confusions
Is seen to have passed away;
While Spirit omnipotent reigneth,
In everlasting day.

Law and Its Counterfeit

LAW, scientifically understood, is that in which no variation is possible. The moment any variation is perceived, that which has hitherto been regarded as law passes into the limbo of supposititious law and ceases to be of interest in Science, except as some stage in an experimental investigation. It was by a neglect of so simple a definition as this that Hume laid himself open to being unhorsed by the lance of Huxley. Hume had defined the miracle as a violation of a law of nature,—a thing impossible, as Huxley was prompt to point out. A violated law, ipso facto, never was a law at all. Thus, as Huxley showed, either the miracles were the proof of unsuspected law, or else the Maker of the universe was involved in the impossible, that is to say, in the violation of His own law. This, surely, is why Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 134 of Science and Health, "The true Logos is demonstrably Christian Science, the natural law of harmony which overcomes discord,—not because this Science is supernatural or preternatural, nor because it is an infraction of divine law, but because it is the immutable law of God, good."

The operation, then, of law is perceptible throughout even the material creation. If it were not for the existence of absolute spiritual law, the counterfeit of law in physical nature could not have been conceived. Consequently, as the so-called physical law can be and is perpetually being proved to be lawless, it is obvious that it is the existence of true law which alone protects the physical counterfeit from immediate destruction. In other words, it is only the fact that physical law counterfeits the spiritual that made it possible for the writer of Job to demand, "Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?" The human mind, in other words, intensely lawless in itself, finds it necessary to counterfeit true law sufficiently closely to prevent the immediate destruction of its own counterfeit.

This being so, it becomes at once evident why natural science has kept changing with the advancing centuries. As the human mind has been more and more riddled by Truth, it has found it necessary to change its own law, thus proving it never to have been law, and to shift its scientific standpoint, thus showing that standpoint to have been always unscientific. Between natural science, as expounded by Aristotle, and natural science, as taught to-day, there is a great gulf fixed; but this gulf is really in the nature of a mirage, the laws of this supposititious natural science having been altered solely because of the exposure of their lawlessness, the human mind being necessarily unable to shift its basis from a material and suppositional to a spiritual and actual basis. "Mortal mind," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 86 of Science and Health, "sees what it believes as certainly as it believes what it sees." The profundity of that statement has not yet been grasped by the world. Once upon a time humanity saw the world as flat, and, believing it to be flat, naturally never sailed round it. Then came the era of the circumnavigator, when the human mind, believing the world to be round, sailed round it, proving it to be round. But inasmuch as the world is only a mental concept, externalizing human thought, it was just as possible for the geographers of patristic theology to proclaim a flat earth, with the sky stretched from the summits of the mountains circling it, as it was for the later geographers to model the world as a sphere, and for the circumnavigators to sail round it.

What, of course, Jesus of Nazareth saw was that the physical law expounded by the natural scientists of Greece and Rome was not law at all, but was a mere counterfeit of law. The true law he preached by the wayside, just as Plato and Aristotle had taught, walking in the gardens of their academies. But whereas Plato and Aristotle satisfied themselves by launching tremendous theories, Christ Jesus made the simplest statements, and demonstrated them before the eyes of those about him. Thus he demonstrated the fact that sickness was nothing but a human belief in the absence of health; thus he showed that death was nothing but an unsuspected form of sleep; thus he proved, in feeding the multitude, that substance was spiritual and mental, and not material; thus he made it plain, in crossing the lake, that there was no time in eternity; and thus, by walking on the water, he made clear the unreality of matter, centuries before the falling apple convinced Newton of the law of gravity and of the mechanical theory of creation. Thus Christ Jesus, as Huxley pointed out, could no more violate law than Principle could violate law; and thus Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 442 of Science and Health, "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake."

This mental malpractitioner is simply the belief of the law of evil in the human mind: the evil which claims to operate through a law of sickness, through a law of relapse, through a law of malpractice, even through a law of death. Now the only true thing that can be said about any lie is that there is something true to lie about, since it is obvious that you cannot tell a lie about nothing. Ultimately, of course, all the laws of evil combine in the law of death, and it is in this supposititious law of death that material law comes nearer to the imitation of law than in anything else, and it does this naturally because in its supposititious law of death it reaches its greatest contradiction of the law of Truth, of the law of eternal Life. Every physical thing, the human mind insists, comes to an end, from a planet to a blade of grass. But the simple fact is that nothing ever dies, as Jesus so clearly demonstrated. Consequently, with the exposure of the lie of the so-called law of death, all supposititious law vanishes, and nothing but spiritual law remains to govern man. This is why the human being is no less safe against the efforts of the malpractitioner than against the so-called law of disease, and this is why the so-called law of relapse is of no greater power than the so-called law of sickness. In order to be law, law must be eternal, and in order to be eternal, eternity must be harmonious.

A man, then, in proportion to his understanding of Principle, has nothing to fear from all the combined evidence of evil. No manifestation of Truth in the world can ever be injured or destroyed by so-called physical law or human malpractice. That is what Gamaliel tried to impress upon the Sanhedrin, but it is a lesson which mortal mind struggles to prevent its victims learning. "But if it be of God," Gamaliel warned the embittered malpractitioners of the Sanhedrin, speaking of the demonstration of the Christian church, "ye cannot overthrow it." In order to overthrow or destroy anything, that thing must itself be outside Principle, but no demonstration of Principle is outside Principle, and therefore all that those who attack Principle are doing is proclaiming themselves in the ranks of those who fight against Principle.

FREDERICK DIXON.

Convergence

THE true meeting is never really of persons. That spiritual activity which makes up man in the image and likeness of God is forever present with its cause, with divine intelligence. In other words, Mind and its idea are always together. This is the eternal meeting. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 131 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," "Where God is we can meet, and where God is we can never part." By looking wholly to Principle manifest, one finds himself in unity with all that really is, since whatever is not of Principle is nothing. The only being together, therefore, consists in the infinite oneness of the divine Mind in all the variety of its manifestation. To know this is a constant inspiration.

At a time of political conventions, for instance, it is well for each participant, indeed for each citizen or onlooker even, to rejoice that he is dealing wholly with intelligence expressed, no matter what may seem to be. In the midst of the crowd, the one who is sure that Principle alone is governing has plenty to do. Any seeming mortal turmoil is an amusing illusion. All the while that it is supposed to be so intense, the one divine consciousness righteously active is the reality. Infinite Mind is all that has power to act. So whatever action may be apparent must be taken as an opportunity for seeing what God truly does know. Certainly the divine Love which is Principle produces only continuous unfoldment, with no least element of destruction. For the citizen of the spiritual democracy, which is the reliance of all together on Principle, the whole of experience must be found as happy activity in infinite Mind, quite apart from any supposition of matter.

When a crowd is thought of as a mass of physical bodies each with a small mind that is more or less out of harmony with every other small mind, there may indeed seem small prospect that it will prove to have any effective unity of purpose. That is why so many political conventions have seemed excited in their attempt at nominations and compromises. The very belief in matter as animated is the error in premise that leads to error in every conclusion. Why should a crowd be supposed capable of doing hysterically, in many instances, what no individual reasoning alone and soberly would think of doing? Such a belief is the delusion that there may be an accumulation of nothingness with a constant accretion of force. Nothing, however, can never be more than nothing. The fact is that divine intelligence is the only really animating power. What infinite Mind animates is always idea, never matter. Knowing this, one is calm and sure of Principle in the midst of any seeming.

The way of progress in the true democracy is not a mere attempt at some sort of a convergence of human theories and policies. To reconcile wrong with right or even wrong with wrong is impossible. Only as error subsides before Truth manifest is harmonious unfoldment demonstrated. The true idea is already present without limit in the one divine consciousness. Right activity converges only toward perfect intelligence, is inseparable from intelligence. On page 10 of "Unity of Good" Mrs. Eddy says: "Spiritual phenomena never converge toward aught but infinite Deity. Their gradations are spiritual and divine; they cannot collapse, or lapse into their opposites, for God is their divine Principle. They live, because He lives; and they are eternally perfect, because He is perfect, and governs them in the Truth of divine Science, whereof God is the Alpha and Omega, the centre and circumference." The true course is the phenomenon of spiritual good, of which any human ways and means at the best are but the suppositional counterfeit. As the counterfeit gives way before the genuine, the whole majesty of spiritual government stands forth intact.

In a political convention or campaign, therefore, it behooves each alert citizen or observer to know that the only real platform must be activity in strict accord with Principle. What really is constructive and true is and always has been eternal. The so-called mesmerism of the crowd has no power to affect in the slightest the actual operation of Principle. No supposed personal magnetism could possibly sway infinite Mind and its idea or swerve true unfoldment from its inevitable course. Determined to do only what divine intelligence does, one is firm on the platform of righteousness. With all patience and charity, however, each one can rejoice that this way of doing is infinite.

The real point of convergence in political or governmental as in church activity must be the understanding that the will of Principle must be done. On page 22 of "Pulpit and Press" Mrs. Eddy says: "All Christian churches have one bond of unity, one nucleus or point of convergence, one prayer,—the Lord's Prayer. It is matter for rejoicing that we unite in love, and in this sacred petition with every praying assembly on earth,—'Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.'" In proportion as all together know that there is one Principle to be expressed in all experience, it is proved that the true treaty of peace is consummated, industry continues in boundless unfoldment, spiritual prosperity is realized, and success of all sorts is insured. This is the healing which each one must demonstrate for himself by depending wholly upon the divine Mind, and not on any material sense of things. In the one infinite consciousness, it is indeed true that "mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps."

The Lectures

BOSTON, MASS. (The Mother Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

Some years ago while walking in the city of Paris one day with a friend, we met a friend of his who said that he had just been assisting at a concert, which he praised in the highest terms. After we parted from him I expressed some surprise that a performer should be so frankly enthusiastic about a performance in which he had taken part; whereupon my friend, with only partially concealed amusement, informed me that the gentleman, using the word assist in a sense frequently employed in French, meant that he had assisted at the concert as one of the audience, not as a performer. In this beautiful and true sense we all assist at a Christian Science lecture. It matters not whether one is led by curiosity to come, or because of the interest aroused by having heard or observed that Christian Science is a cheering doctrine, or whether one comes hoping that religious faith may be strengthened, or whether one comes because, already immeasurably blessed by Christian Science, he finds in the restatement of its divine facts recurring inspiration, or whether one comes because he has turned to Christian Science for healing after having sounded the depths of suffering and wrung them out—one and all come, at any rate, in an expectant attitude, consciously or otherwise seeking the one God and His ever compassionate and available Christ as taught in Christian Science. In these times, when the whole material world seems shaken, it is a privilege to hear a lecture by one who speaks of those things which, the apostle says, cannot be shaken, from the standpoint of great experience in healing the sick, redeeming the sinful, and in teaching the pure metaphysics of Christian Science.

The Christian Science Monitor.

PORTLAND, ME. (joint lecture).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Hon. Ralph O. Brewster, who said in part:—

There has probably never been a time in history when men were so generally asking whither are we going or where will civilization end its march. To speak of change to-day conjures up concepts of radical and revolutionary activities which are so generally deplored, and there is often a human tendency to cling to the past and to that which we have known as the only certain security in a sea of change; and yet it is an axiom that no living organism or institution is ever long preserved by merely standing still.

The rampant materialism of the last century in science and economics was succeeded by a devotion to social service in both church and state by the better elements in human nature. Repelled by the selfishness of individualistic theories carried to their logical extreme, men everywhere turned from so-called rationalism to altruistic endeavor.

But the kaleidoscopic changes of the last five years have taught us that material conditions, whether good or bad, do not determine happiness or virtue. Social service without more has not met the need of either the worker or the beneficiary. Out of the welter of conflicting theories of social reform and social betterment there seems gradually to be emerging among thoughtful men and women everywhere a common conception that what is needed to-day is not social reconstruction but individual regeneration.

And so humanity has turned again to consider the precepts of the Bible and the claims of religion as the necessary and sufficient guide for our daily life, and we hear from many sides the call for applied Christianity. As man turns to consider the things of the spirit after feeding on the husks of materialism, he comes naturally to investigate Christian Science, since it is a religion which in a brief half century has spread with astonishing rapidity to every quarter of the world.

And so, I take it, you gather here to-day from the varying distractions of this life to contemplate the things of the spirit and to hear an authorized exposition of Christian Science,—its teachings and its practice.—Portland Press.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Seventh Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Miss Christine Paulson, who said in part:—

Humanity's great need to-day is to find the way out of bondage to material laws of sin, sickness, sorrow, and strife, and Christian Science furnishes the key which unlocks and opens wide the door of consciousness. Through this door we enter upon a practical and demonstrable Christianity. The message of Christian Science is one of hope, joy, peace, and good will for all mankind.

MONTCLAIR, N. J. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Jerome B. Burbank, who said in part:—

The Christian Science religion is one of hope, of expectation, of joy,—the joy of realization,—a religion of words and works. Mary Baker Eddy, its Discoverer and Founder, in her wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" says (p. 342): "Christian Science awakens the sinner, reclaims the infidel, and raises from the couch of pain the helpless invalid. It speaks to the dumb the words of Truth, and they answer with rejoicing. It causes the deaf to hear, the lame to walk, and the blind to see." And it offers peace to a world of restless thought. It is explaining to a waiting world what is meant by "the secret place of the most High," and is showing the way there,—the way to health, happiness, and peace through a spiritual understanding of the Christ, Truth.

BURLINGTON, VT. (Society).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Charles F. Southworth, who said in part:—

This is the season when people throughout the world commemorate the birth of the man whom Christian Scientists have come to know as the master Metaphysician of all time, Jesus of Nazareth. Visualize for a moment that scene in Capernaum when the chosen seventy, gathered around the Master, received these instructions: "And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you . . . heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Interpreting these words of Jesus as applying to all time and to all who would follow in his footsteps, Christian Scientists are endeavoring, in humble measure, to obey.

LAKEWOOD, OHIO (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Laurene Hook, who said in part:—

A close study of the life of Jesus shows unmistakably his grief over the world's unreadiness and unwillingness to accept the truth he came to teach. He did not ask his disciples to accept as true an undemonstrable philosophy, but gave abundant proof at every step of the way throughout his entire ministry that what he taught he was willing to live and was able to demonstrate; for no one knew better than he that "faith without works is dead."

Under the banner of Christian Science many of those works are being duplicated in our midst to-day; for the sick are being healed, the sinner reformed, the sorrowing comforted, and those who are upholding this banner invite investigation as to the truth of their claims. What Christian Scientists are proving by their works is the goodness of God, and because of their love for humanity they are perpetually extending to all mankind the Scriptural invitation, "O taste and see that the Lord is good."

MONTGOMERY, ALA. (First Church).—Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Ben Fitzpatrick, who said in part:—

President Hadley of Yale University, in a recent address on religion and its relation to our modern society said: "This kind of religion," referring not to any particular religion but to the highest ideals in our Christian religions, "which demands independent thought of its disciples and which finds its justification in results rather than traditions, constitutes the one secure basis for our civil liberties." Christian Science cannot boast itself of traditions, for the traditions which surround that particular religion called Christian Science, are limited to a period of fifty-three years since its discovery and founding. But Christian Science is rich in results. The results which justify the existence of Christian Science here to-day and its spread throughout the world are limitless. They link themselves back through the ages to the time of Jesus and before. And just as it was then that results—practical proofs and demonstrations—turned the people's attention toward Christianity, so it is to-day that results are turning attention to Christian Science.

OAK PARK, ILL. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Miss Willietta McCraken, who said in part:—

In 1866 a revelation came to Mary Baker Eddy, a revelation fulfilling the Scripture, "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." This revelation was presented by her to the world in 1875 in a book which she named "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." It reveals the spiritual idea of God and man and their relation to each other; it gives a spiritual unfoldment of the Scriptures. An honest perusal of the book brings healing to the sick and sorrowing, salvation to the sinning, and life to the dying.

SOUTH BEND, WASH. (Society).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by J. H. Henderson, who said in part:—

Nineteen hundred years ago Pilate asked of Jesus, "What is truth?" And all down the ages from that time to the present men have been asking, and in varying degrees of interest and earnestness have sought, for a satisfying answer. To-day a greater number of people are more earnestly and insistently seeking to know the truth than at any other time in the history of the world. Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Truth is spiritual and must be spiritually perceived and understood. It is apparent, then, that the apostle Paul's admonition to the Philippians, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus," is of paramount importance to the world to-day. This pure, spiritual enlightenment or understanding is mankind's greatest need, for in the exact degree that we are in possession of that Mind, of that spiritual understanding, we shall be able to know the truth that makes men free.

CHICAGO, ILL. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Bessie Turner Allen, who said in part:—

In the dark hours preceding the crucifixion, Jesus communed with his disciples and sought to comfort them, saying, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. . . . I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever."

The world for nearly nineteen centuries had pondered over these words of Jesus. Groping in the darkness of materiality, they saw only the promise of the coming of a human Messiah, a material man who should guide them. In their tribulations, like David they lamented, "I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none."

It remained for Mary Baker Eddy, a New England woman who had passed through the whole gamut of human affliction, to awaken to the spiritual import of Jesus' words and to make them plain to all mankind. On page 127 of her God-inspired book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she wrote: "Science is an emanation of divine Mind . . . It has a spiritual, and not a material origin. It is a divine utterance,—the Comforter which leadeth into all truth." Through Mrs. Eddy's discovery of the Christ Science, many thousands have been healed of sorrow, sickness, and sin, and every other form of mortal discord. Through it the promises of Scripture are being fulfilled.

Testimonies of Healing

We read in Deuteronomy, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Mrs. Eddy realized the full significance of these words when she opened the Preface to Science and Health with the statement, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." The truth of these words has been proved to me many times during the past ten years, and I am especially grateful for the help I received from them while in the Army.

In September, 1918, I was taken to an army hospital in France and underwent an operation for acute appendicitis, peritonitis, and a ruptured bladder. One of the attending surgeons was heard to say that I had one chance in about two hundred to live, and the other surgeon told me that I was lucky that I was not with the angels. Had he known that one of the definitions of angels in Christian Science is "God's thoughts passing to man" (Science and Health, p. 581) he might have said I was lucky that I was with the angels.

When I recovered from this sickness my records were marked "class D to be returned to the U. S. for discharge," that being the classification given to men who were supposed to be physically unfit for further service. I was given this classification because the doctors said I had a weak stomach and would have to be on a diet and should never do any lifting. With the loving help and care of a Christian Science practitioner in Paris I was able to prove the falsity of these statements and within less than two months after this diagnosis was made I was eating anything I cared for, and since my discharge from the service I have started to work in a factory and am now doing as heavy work as I have ever done. After arriving in the United States I had tonsillitis and pneumonia, and was discharged from the Army with a thirty per cent disability due to a supposed chronic inflammation of the tissues of the heart. I am very grateful to say that this has also been overcome through Christian Science. I had the loving care of the Christian Science Camp Welfare and War Relief committee workers to help me in all my seeming difficulties and found the rooms furnished by the committee to be ports in which we could safely outride any storm that was encountered.

My sister was healed of curvature of the spine about ten years ago. Words cannot express my gratitude to Christian Science, and my only desire is to prove it by a sincere effort to live its teachings.

Arthur W. Walter, West Park, Ohio.

Since coming into Christian Science nearly ten years ago I have enjoyed reading the literature, and the testimonies in the Journal and Sentinel have been of special interest. At first I read them with a degree of doubt as many of them seemed impossible in their wonderful and quick healing, but having reached a little fuller understanding of the truth that makes us free I wish to give my testimony, hoping those who read may not doubt its truth.

Christian Science was first brought to my notice while I was taking treatment at a sanatorium for tuberculosis; some literature was sent me by a friend with the request that I get a copy of Science and Health and read it. I read some of the literature and looked over a copy of Science and Health, lent me by one of the patients, but could not understand it. I read, and being prejudiced against Mrs. Eddy and all that she had written I laid it aside, not wanting to understand this supposedly new doctrine got up by a woman. I returned home after six months' stay at the sanatorium, and while taking the cure at home I was again offered the loan of a copy of Science and Health. As I did little else but read I thought I would look over the book to see what it was about. To my surprise it was deeply interesting to me from cover to cover, and I read it through several times before I reluctantly returned it to the owner. This book contained the most beautiful and wonderful healing truth, and though I had received benefit and was doing things, without fear, that I had been taught should not be done by a tubercular patient, yet I was not ready to give up material remedies and depend entirely upon Christian Science for healing.

In a few months I was taken with grippe and pneumonia and was ill for several weeks, and when I fully regained consciousness I found that the supposed healing, by material means, of nearly two years seemed to be undone and I was worse off than I had ever been. Completely discouraged and heartsick I turned to Christian Science as my only hope. I was treated by a practitioner for three months and at the end of that time I felt so well and strong I decided I had gained sufficient understanding to continue the work myself, for like all who have been healed in Christian Science I had learned all power belongeth unto God and He made only that which is good, so I did not longer fear the power of disease to destroy Life, which is God. For this healing I am grateful, but far more for the overcoming of fear and nervous weakness that seemed to beset me and from which I felt there was no power that could free me, though I took rest, all kinds of medicines, and consulted and was treated by several physicians.

Christian Science is a wonderful revelation given to this darkened, sin-trodden world, and for what I have gained of its truth there is absolutely nothing I would give in exchange, for it has taught me of a Father of love instead of a God of vengeance, and has made clear many problems I thought could not be answered. I hope as the years go by to learn more of this healing truth that frees us from all material bondage.

(Miss) A. L. Stuart, Coast, King George Co., Va.

I should like to express in some measure my gratitude for Christian Science and all that it has done for me and mine. I do not know where or how to begin to recount the blessings that have come into my life in the four years that I have been studying Christian Science; but I can say with the greatest sincerity and joy that when our understanding of the Principle of Christian Science is honestly applied it never fails, and when an erroneous condition is not quickly met I know that it is only because the error in thought has not been entirely destroyed.

We in our little family have been able to prove for ourselves the truth contained in these wonderful words, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings," the opening sentence of the Preface to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. Whenever we have leaned on the "sustaining infinite" our need has been met, whether it involved the overcoming of a physical claim or a lack of supply.

Though at times the road seems dark and rough we go on, and each experience proves to be a wonderful lesson. I have been healed of indigestion, headaches in severe form, backache, including fatigue at the slightest exertion, despondency, and many other ailments, among them the fear of ivy poisoning, which used to last for weeks in a most violent form. My little son, aged six, does not know what it is to taste medicine. At the slightest approach of any indisposition he asks for the ninety-first psalm, and I can sincerely say that almost always the claim has been met in reading aloud to him from Science and Health and the ninety-first psalm. When four years old, he was healed of croup in a few minutes, through Christian Science treatment, and the trouble never returned. I am more grateful than words can convey that he is learning the truth now and that he knows it is the truth, and that he will never have to unlearn the material laws, which are so many stumblingblocks in our way.

My only prayer is that I may be able to look more steadfastly to God, and that as I journey on I may learn to see more and more clearly the Christ.

It is now four years since I began the study of Christian Science. I was suffering from valvular heart trouble in its last stages, liver trouble, and other complications. The best doctors had said cure was impossible, and thought three months the longest I could stand the struggle, for struggle it was, through the most intense suffering. I am grateful to these good physicians for their attendance during those years. Then I found the way of Truth, for which I had been searching all my life, and by just studying our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and with the light it gave me as I studied the Bible to get the understanding of spiritual truth from it, and prayed earnestly, I became perfectly well and was able to take up my regular routine of duties and my professional work, which I had thought was laid aside for all time.

Far more than the physical healing is the wonderful spiritual uplift that comes to us as we learn to dwell in "the secret place of the most High," as our helpful ninety-first psalm expresses it. Words cannot express what it means to me. I am just learning how to live, and my heart is filled with gratitude to God, who revealed to Mary Baker Eddy the new-old truth of the Christ-presence, here and now, that makes free, and supplies every need so fully. The Monitor, Sentinel, and Journal all bring their helpful messages to our home regularly, showing us better how to solve our problems. I have been healed of inflammatory rheumatism, measles, influenza, and other diseases, and am very grateful to practitioners and friends who so lovingly extend helping hands to those who are still young in the understanding of the truth. I am happy to be a member of The Mother Church and of a branch church, and to have found the truth of real living as Christ Jesus meant us to know and live it.

It is with deepest gratitude that I wish to relate my experience of the regenerating and sustaining power of Christian Science. For many years I had been a great sufferer, and had undergone many painful operations; indeed it seemed that I no sooner recovered from one than I was compelled to face another, until at last I became utterly weary of it all, and was not only getting into the habit of wondering what form the next attack would take, but found myself getting daily more wretched and irritable, discontented with myself and with every one around me.

It was after undergoing an operation for appendicitis that I received a letter from a friend in the north of England, whose husband had been cured of a very serious illness through Christian Science. The letter contained what was to me, at that time, a very remarkable statement, to the effect that if I had but known what she knew I need not have suffered at all. Some four months later, when I was well advancing toward convalescence, I paid her a visit and then learned that this wonderful remedy to which she had alluded was Christian Science. Although I had never heard of it before I became intensely interested and took up the study of it then and there, and am thankful to say that I found it all that my friend had stated. I have since proved that the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, is in very truth what its inspired author claimed for it, a veritable key to the Scriptures; for it unlocked truths in the Bible for me which had always been obscure, and with a clearer understanding of God as divine Love came improved health, and instead of always having a doctor in the house and relying on materia medica as formerly, I am happy to say that from the first day of taking up Christian Science, now more than six years ago, not a drop of medicine of any kind has passed my lips; neither has it been necessary to call in a doctor, nor, as a professional musician, have I missed a single engagement.

My profession takes me into all kinds of heated and vitiated atmospheres, and as a consequence I was always suffering from severe colds and headaches; these have been entirely overcome, and glasses, which in the old days were necessary, have been laid aside, and for over three years I have been able to read the smallest print without assistance. For all these physical healings I am deeply grateful, but above all I desire to express my thanks for the deep peace and understanding that have entered my consciousness.

Our beloved Master said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." I am thankful to say that since taking up the study of Christian Science I have proved that saying to be true, for I have not only been freed from bodily ailments but also from all mental discords, worries, and business perplexities, and I am determined to hold on and follow the light of divine Truth, which is daily leading me into a clearer and fuller understanding, and I continually pray for that Mind to be in me which was also in Christ Jesus.

JOSEPH H. ADAMS, Birmingham, England.

It is nine years this summer since I first became a member of a Christian Science Sunday school. I had never attended any Sunday school before, as there was no Jewish temple in the town in which I then lived, so I was especially delighted when my family began to attend the Christian Science church, and I asked if I might join the Sunday school. From my first Sunday there until my twentieth birthday, which was just seven years, I was a regular attendant. I am very grateful for this opportunity—this privilege. I sometimes wonder if people who have never had the chance to attend a Christian Science Sunday school realize what a wonderful privilege it is.

I have always had good health, so I have not had any so-called big physical problems to meet, but the many so-called small physical demonstrations that I have had have seemed big to me, and I am very grateful for them. Last spring I was unable to attend school for a week, the first time in nine years that I have been in bed in the daytime, but that week of treatments and reading on my part, brought such wonderful results that I felt entirely made over, and had more strength than I had had in a long time, and I am very grateful for the experience. Later some friends insisted that I had had influenza, which made me all the more grateful for my quick and complete recovery.

Christian Science has been a wonderful help to me in my school work. The biggest problems that have been met, through my own understanding of the operation of God's law, are the demonstration over a seeming inability to understand geometry, which was corrected by changing a thought of hate to one of love for my teacher, thereby raising me from the foot to the head of the class in three months; the demonstration which enabled me to receive more than just a passing mark in history; and the crowning one, which enabled me to get through a course in psychology with a very good mark, in spite of the fact that I learned practically nothing. The latter sounds like an impossibility, and would be, from a material standpoint, but in Science we know that nothing that is right is impossible. Being a required subject, I had to take and pass an examination in psychology, but as its laws are contrary to God's law, I did not have to learn them. I studied my psychology textbook, but could not seem to remember anything I read. At the time of an examination I relied on God's law: the understanding that I reflect God, the only Mind and intelligence; that nothing right can be required of man that he cannot do; that "Love never faileth," as one of our solos says; also I found the tenth verse of the forty-first chapter of Isaiah a wonderful help, together with many other declarations of Truth. This reliance on God enabled me to pass each examination as it came, with a good mark, without seeming to know the required answers before starting to write. The more I think of it, the more wonderful this demonstration seems, and I am truly grateful for it.

My understanding of Christian Science has not only enabled me to get through whole courses, but has also helped me wonderfully in little everyday problems, such as daily recitations, lessons to be prepared, papers to be written, examinations, et cetera. Another great help that Christian Science has been to me is in overcoming fear. Ever since I can remember I have been afraid of almost everything. Since becoming interested in Christian Science a great many of my former fears have disappeared, and the rest are gradually losing their foothold, I am grateful to say.

Before coming into Christian Science I knew nothing about God. Christian Science has taught me to understand Him as ever present Love, and, as such, I have found Him a very present help in every conceivable kind of a situation. I am very grateful for the little understanding that I have of Christian Science, and I hope that I may express my gratitude by living this wonderful truth.

For many months the Christian Science Sentinel has been such a comfort to me, and a weekly inspirer of hope, that I should like to give my first testimony through its columns. For two years I was a great sufferer from acute and chronic indigestion, not being able to eat or sleep. After treating me for a year, without success, our family physician advised me to consult a specialist for stomach trouble, which I did, going to the hospital, having X-ray photographs taken, and resorting to the stomach pump, but with no better result. Finding there was no improvement in my condition, I determined to give up medicine and try what Christian Science could do for me, so I began to read Science and Health, and by being obedient to Mrs. Eddy's recommendation, "In seeking a cure for dyspepsia consult matter not at all, and eat what is set before you, 'asking no question for conscience sake'" (Science and Health, p. 222), I overcame the fear of food and began to improve at once, soon gaining about thirty pounds. Reading one of the testimonies in the Sentinel, I decided to write to the one who could make such a clear statement of her delivery from bondage; and as I had suffered from constipation for fifteen years, I wrote to her for treatment, which was most lovingly given, and in a short time my bowels became normal, and I know that the condition was healed owing to her clearer understanding, as I could not help myself.

I am most grateful for these two demonstrations, showing me the power of Truth to reconstruct the body; and still more for the knowledge that I have gained through Christian Science of God as Love. The truth about God's spiritual creation has been a great revelation to me. To know that God made all, and saw that it was good, has lifted a great weight from my consciousness, for now I have hope of being freed from every false claim and belief, knowing as I do that God did not make them, for He is too pure to behold iniquity.—(Mrs.) Sarah K. Johnson, Ellicott City, Md.

Since the birth of my now ten-year-old son I suffered from an internal trouble and severe backache. I was under the doctor's care a great deal of the time, also underwent two operations, but unfortunately without any health-giving results. Through a dear neighbor I learned of Christian Science, and felt greatly attracted to the meetings, which I attended frequently. I then put myself in the care of a practitioner, who lovingly treated me, and I was perfectly healed of the intense pain. Seven months later I became suddenly ill with bowel trouble and cramps, having two spasms of the heart, from which I had suffered in former years. This was followed by intense weakness. I then asked for help through the Christian Science practitioner, who again lovingly aided me, and in a short time was completely freed from all my troubles. For these blessings which our heavenly Father has bestowed upon me, I feel very grateful, and wish to express my thanks to all who have shown me the way, and to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who did so much for mankind.—(Mrs.) Agnes Schuster, Berlin, Germany.

Five years have elapsed since my healing in Christian Science and I feel that it is my duty to acknowledge publicly a few of the blessings received. Owing to my ignorance of God I was tossed about by the waves of error, until an accident awakened me. Waking up in a hospital after many hours of unconsciousness, I found myself upon a bed of suffering and in dire distress. An operation was performed, as I had sustained a compound fracture of the kneecap and a fracture at the base of the skull. In due time I was taken home and was cared for, meanwhile enduring agony of mind and body. The result was that when I finally arose from my bed I had a stiff limb, was greatly emaciated, and seemed without hope or God in the world. My relatives had offered me the truth, but I had scoffed at and refused what I thought Christian Science to be.

At this stage I was so despondent I thought I must do something, as my condition was desperate. I sought out a practitioner and her loving encouragement and reassurance of my true birthright lifted a great burden from my heart. As I left this dear woman I actually felt happy. I improved steadily and I could walk freely again. Many phases of error presented themselves after this healing, but by continually turning to Christian Science I regained health and peace of mind. I wish to mention also the overcoming of asphyxia, and of grief at the passing on of a loved one.

As our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, says on page 3 of Science and Health, "Gratitude is much more than a verbal expression of thanks." I try day by day so to live that I may prove my gratitude in deeds. I am grateful for class instruction, and for the privilege of serving in church work—for our literature, the church service, and every activity of Truth.—(Mrs.) HELEN SAYRE, Chicago, Ill.

I wish to express my gratitude for a knowledge of Christian Science, and for all it has done for us in our home. At a time of great mental and physical darkness, this clearer understanding of our Father-Mother God came as a glimpse of heaven. Since that time no material remedies of any kind have been used in our little family, and influenza and whooping cough have been overcome in a few hours. The birth of our little daughter was experienced under very harmonious conditions. Through the help of a practitioner, over two thousand miles distant, the months previous were free from all pain and discord. Although I was alone when the little one was born, no ill effects were felt and recovery was rapid. This was a wonderful experience and brought to me more clearly than ever before the omnipresence of divine Love. A few days before, our eldest child was kicked in the face by a horse. When I went to her, upon hearing her screams, nothing of her face could be seen for blood, but the one thought uppermost was, that one expression of Life could not possibly harm another. The child stopped crying. I bathed her face, and together we talked of God and the unreality of anything unlike Him. In less than a week her face was completely healed, not even a scar remaining.

For all these blessings and many others we are indeed thankful. Through the daily study of the Lesson-Sermons and the Christian Science literature, my husband and I are learning to overcome each difficulty as it presents itself, looking upon these experiences as testing times. I am grateful to the kind practitioner and loving friends who have so often helped me over a bit of rough road, and grateful also to our Leader, who did so much to enable us rightly to understand the teachings of Jesus. Above all, I am humbly thankful to the Giver of all good, and my greatest desire is so to live that I may be worthy of the name Christian Scientist.

MRS. W. COLIN SMITH, Wildmere, Alberta, Canada.

I gladly verify the above statement by my wife. Before coming to Christian Science she was a semi-invalid, but now she is well and strong, a living witness to the truth. Through this study, financial difficulties have been met and mastered, and we are learning every day to prove our God-given dominion over all error.—W. COLIN SMITH.

In the year 1914 we adopted a baby boy three weeks old. The physician who told us of the baby failed to tell us of its physical condition. Soon I found the child was suffering from malnutrition. When I asked the physician about the child, he said if I could raise him until he was nine months old I might save him. I then called another physician, who did all he could by his words of encouragement as well as his medical skill. Whenever I called him he would come lovingly, even after he had told me he had done all he could.

The baby was then five months old and weighed less than at birth. One day at noon I could see the end indeed seemed near, and being afraid I put the baby in his carriage and went to the home of a neighbor. While talking to her on a subject far from Christian Science the thought came to me, "I wonder what Christian Science could do for the baby," and immediately voiced my thought. She looked at me in amazement and said, "I don't know, I am sure, but the lady next door might help you, as she is a Scientist." Only those who have experienced such a blessing can know how I felt when the words of comfort and assurance came to me that my baby could be healed.

The Scientist gave me the address of a practitioner and I went home and wrote him a letter asking for help. When I look back I can see there was more than a sick baby to be healed, as the letter was full of fear. After I had received a reply from the practitioner telling me he would gladly help us I told my husband what I had done. At first he resented it and said that it was all foolishness, but later decided we would try it anyway; with the result that in one month the baby was healed and had gained five and one-half pounds and was drinking two and one-half quarts of milk in twenty-four hours. The boy is now a robust and healthy child. Every day when I think of the presence of this dear child in our home, who gladdens our hearts, the Bible saying comes to me, "And a little child shall lead them."

Through this healing the wonderful study of Christian Science has been brought into our home and changed our lives into lives of peace and happiness. We have experienced many other wonderful physical healings, but the spiritual awakening has far outweighed the physical benefits. I am very grateful for the wonderful opportunity of class instruction, also for membership in The Mother Church and in the Christian Science Society here.

(Mrs.) LINA L. RATHBUN, Green Bay, Wis.

It is with a heart full of gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and thankfulness for all that Science has done for me, that I send this testimony. Christian Science was first brought to my notice thirteen years ago, by a cousin who was visiting me. Three years later I bought a copy of Science and Health and had treatments for my little girl for ringworm, and the healing was wonderful. A little later I had treatment for her for stomach trouble. All this time I only read or studied while having treatments for her, but six years ago I had rheumatism, and not receiving any help from material remedies, I turned unreservedly to Science and was healed. The healing came slowly, for which I am now thankful, as I was thus compelled to study and search all the harder to find what I wanted.

I was a member of a denominational church and no one could ever make me believe that I would give up that church for Christian Science. For a year I struggled between the two, but Truth won, and I am so happy to be able to say that I am now a member of The Mother Church and have the privilege of being First Reader for a little group who are studying the Lesson-Sermons.

My husband is a druggist, but does not oppose Christian Science, and it has been the only physician that I have had either for my children or myself for the past six years. During the influenza epidemic last year we came under the disease for a few days but we were wonderfully helped in Science. We have had innumerable healings since coming into Science but I am more thankful for the spiritual help than anything else. It has helped me to see man as the idea of God and to love my neighbor as myself. I am also grateful for all our literature.

(Mrs.) ALBERTA R. MITCHELL, Waterville, Wash.

Signs of the Times

[Delta, Visalia, Calif.]

The unrest of the world to-day is not so much social and economical as it is spiritual. While it manifests itself in social and economic conditions, yet the real cause is deeper—it is spiritual. The great mass of humanity is striving for freedom from the galling conditions that have long oppressed it. The world has plenty of bread—but is not satisfied. Man is seeking for happiness, which is the right of every one. Slavery and suffering has been the heritage of too many of the world's people, and there is a spirit that is stirring the heart of humanity, and a spirit that will never rest until autocracy is stripped of its pernicious principles and democracy comes to set the captives free! We may just as well begin to adjust ourselves to this changed spirit. It is permeating the earth to its remotest bounds.

The old world is dead. A new age is upon us,—an age in which righteousness is to be the supreme power, and principles of democracy hold sway.

[Rev. Robert Hopkin in Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

All the differences and divisions in the church to-day have their source, not in religion, which is simply right living, but in the creeds and doctrines which men have manufactured out of their opinions about religion. No creed, nor doctrine, nor statement of belief is religion, no matter how many times it may contain the name of God. These are only the opinions of men concerning religion—men with no more right to express an opinion on this subject than we have. Christendom can never be united on a creed, for the prime purpose of every creed is to divide.

[Evansville (Ind.) Journal-News]

Those who are pessimistic ask the question, "Is Christianity failing?" and they point to the world war and its resulting chaos. They argue that good Samaritans are few and far between and that Dives has a plentiful number of descendants. They point to the profiteers and the tax-dodgers, to the poorly paid ministers preaching to empty pews, and to highly paid motion picture artists appearing to standing room only. And from these and other premises they draw the conclusion that Christianity is not fulfilling its mission. But they are wholly wrong. Christianity is not failing or likely to fail. Christianity cannot fail, because no truth ever fails.

Christianity is as valueless and unfruitful as the worship of the moon, unless its principles are made a part of the relationship of men. The trouble is not with Christianity but with individuals. If we choose not to apply the Golden Rule; if we prefer to pillage and rifle and kill and maim our fellow beings; if we encourage envy and greed and stimulate malice and hatred, the world will continue to advance but slowly toward the ideal of Christianity, but that will not be Christianity's fault. Too many people look upon Christianity as an emotion. It is less that than anything else. Jesus frequently used the words, "He that believeth on me." And the Christianity of to-day is a failure only so far as we fail or refuse to accept and apply its principles to daily life and our relations one with the other. What the world needs is a convincing argument that it would be better off if right were the determining factor in all human relations. The minute a man concludes that justice and decency are profitable, so soon will he be just and decent. The thing to do then is to make justice and decency profitable. That cannot be done with war. It cannot be done by bowing down to and worshiping the individual who has grown rich on the want or suffering of others. It cannot be done by applauding and elevating greed, which never loves its neighbor as itself. Christianity is a state of mind. It is an attitude of soul. That one chooses not to adopt and apply it—if the whole world chooses to ignore it and its teachings—does not and cannot affect either its reality or its potency.

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I AM taking this opportunity to thank you for the good THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR has done and is doing for me and mine. It has taken me out of the narrow confines that a woman of a home gets into, and has enlarged my viewpoint so that I am interested in world events as well as those close at home. In renewing my subscription I consider it a wonderful privilege to read the MONITOR.

ALTHOUGH not a Christian Scientist, I cannot get along without THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I take it to be one of the best informed papers of America, reliable, instructive, and interesting. The foreign news is most invaluable to me.

NEVER before in the seven years that I have been interested in Christian Science have I so enjoyed all of the splendid Christian Science literature as I do at this present time. I have the privilege of distributing one hundred and twenty MONITORS once a week to eighteen different factories. That there is much healing work is evidenced when the men wait specially to step up and tell of their healing, or to ask for more literature, or again to state they have subscribed for the MONITOR for themselves. It is glorious work.

I THANK you for the copy of your daily paper dated the 28th of February last in which there appears an article on "Racing for America's Cup." I take this opportunity to express my gratification that a paper such as yours is bringing to the front the importance of clean sport; for the cleaner the paper the cleaner the sport must be.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JUNE 19, 1920 NUMBER 42

Annual Meeting of The Mother Church

THE meeting was opened with the singing of Hymn 196, "Shepherd, Show Me How to Go," the words of which were written by Mary Baker Eddy. This was followed by the reading of selections from the Bible and from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:

Bible: Revelation 12:1–5, 7, 8, 10, 13. 15, 16.
Science and Health: 570:14–25; 567:18–28; 568:1–5; 566:1–24.

After the readings the congregation joined in silent prayer, followed by the audible repetition of the Lord's Prayer. Hymn 157, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," was then sung, and after this the names of the officers for the ensuing year were read by the retiring President, John W. Doorly. In addition to the election of Willard P. Emery as President, it was announced that Edward L. Ripley, Treasurer, and Charles E. Jarvis, Clerk, had been reelected. John Randall Dunn, of St. Louis, Missouri, was announced as the new First Reader, and Miss Margaret Glenn, of New York City, as the new Second Reader, of The Mother Church.

The retiring President, John W. Doorly, before introducing the new President, said:—

It is my privilege, as retiring President, to welcome you to our Annual Meeting. On page 279 of "Miscellaneous Writings" our Leader says, "We, to-day, in this class-room, are enough to convert the world if we are of one Mind; for then the whole world will feel the influence of this Mind; as when the earth was without form, and Mind spake and form appeared." In the same way, we as Christian Scientists know that if we at this Annual Meeting are of one Mind, there should and must go out to humanity a great healing and saving afflatus as a result of this meeting.

This church, during the past year, has been called upon to recognize as never before that Mary Baker Eddy is God's messenger to this age, and that her revelation is final and absolute. This meeting sees the clouds which have threatened our cause during the past year steadily rolling away. It sees Christian Scientists one and all awakening to the great fact that Mrs. Eddy's revelation and demonstration can no more be altered or improved upon in any detail than can the Commandments of Moses or the Beatitudes of Christ Jesus. The members of this church are realizing more clearly than ever before that Mrs. Eddy has established for her church the purest form of government possible—a government based wholly on the demonstration of divine Principle, God, by the individual. In this government each member of The Mother Church is privileged to partake to the fullest extent, through his unlimited demonstration of God's infinite presence and power. It was through the demonstration of divine law and government, as revealed in the Manual of The Mother Church, that our Leader governed this church, and God is to-day, undoubtedly, forcing us to demonstrate this right idea of government in our individual lives, and in our church, that we may then be enabled to give it to humanity. It has been my privilege to serve for one year under the Board of Directors, as President of this church, and I wish on this occasion to record my appreciation of their unfailing courtesy, their loving fellowship, and their truly democratic and Christian attitude on every occasion when I have been privileged to deal with them.

It is now my duty and pleasure to introduce to you our President for the coming year.

The new President, Willard P. Emery, of Detroit, Michigan, spoke as follows:—

We have gathered here to listen to reports of church activities, to account for the past year's work, and gain an incentive for better efforts in the year to come.

Each church in this great movement is composed of earnest workers who are seeking to follow the teachings of Jesus as made practical for us by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. Could we not profitably take a mental inventory of ourselves individually? It would show us our worth in a way that would be most helpful. Who could give a truer or better analysis of our own development than we ourselves? We must know without a doubt just how nearly we measure up to the standard of membership in The Mother Church. Through bringing our demonstration of Christian Science higher we strengthen the individual church member, and thereby strengthen the church.

A question that seems to be paramount as we consider the experiences and growth which have come to us during the year is whether we have sufficient gratitude for the foundation work that has made our demonstration in Christian Science possible. Have we had sufficient appreciation of those who withstood the trials, the rebuffs, and the opposition that characterized the early growth of the Christian Science movement? Because we all may not have been fortunate enough to have been among those who stood in those testing times with courage, fortitude, and perseverance, it does not excuse us now. Rather does it add to our present obligation to realize the tremendous debt we owe to those faithful workers. As we give expression to our gratitude we cannot fail to see that there is one to whom we owe a debt which never can be canceled, one who was good enough and pure enough to receive the revelation of Truth, one who stood fast when the demonstration of this truth was tested time and again under the most trying conditions, one who was a constant inspiration to those around her in encouraging their faltering steps and showing the way to victory, one whom we will never cease to love—our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.

As we go forward in our demonstration of divine Principle we discover that there is a stage of progress which many of us had overlooked. In our effort to demonstrate spirituality many times we do not consider that between the total absence of spirituality and the realization of Spirit's allness there is a wide transitional stage. It is here that the mortal qualities are first manifested, then developed, and finally replaced with spiritual qualities. This is explained on page 115 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. As a result of the spiritual demand, we must often go back and retrace our steps. We must see that we are started anew along the right path to our goal,—full armor on, having added foresight, and the wisdom to understand the waymarks along the road of progress.

Often in our demonstration we think we have attained our goal while we are still in the process of reaching it. Many times, because we are so absorbed in our own progress, it is very difficult for us to help onward many who are just waiting for and needing a helping hand, if we would but offer it. We must be careful that, in our conscientious effort to reach the goal of spiritual reality, we do not crowd out human consideration and affection before we have gained spiritual love and understanding. We must know that we cannot gain the fullest demonstration of divine Principle simply by receiving, and that our giving assistance in word and in deed to others must be the measure and the test of our successful practice of our Leader's teaching.

Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 25 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "The divinity of the Christ was made manifest in the humanity of Jesus." In the expression of our humanity we must not forget the wayfarer who is struggling for spirituality, whether he be a stranger, a friend, or even one's own self. If asked to help some one in need we would do it gladly, and would not hesitate to counsel that he use wisdom and kindliness to himself, if we should see that by some unwise act he was adding a burden to his demonstration. This thought of universal responsibility, including the responsibility to ourselves, should never be far away from our thoughts. Let us not forget that we are all as little children seeking divine guidance in our progress from sense to Soul. Some of us take firmer steps than others. Some of us learn quickly. Some of us are traveling again the same ground that we have gone over before but not covered thoroughly. Let us be willing to give a helping hand, as we should ever be grateful for the helping hand that comes to aid us in our journey. Until we have reached the goal of Spirit we never know when we will have need for assistance to carry us over some troublesome place along the way.

In our demonstration of helpfulness we must not lose sight of the many activities of The Mother Church and its branches, as outlined by Mrs. Eddy in the Manual. Attention should be given particularly to Section 15 of Article VIII which says that "God requires our whole heart, and He supplies within the wide channels of The Mother Church dutiful and sufficient occupation for all its members." There are many opportunities for us to strengthen our demonstration of Church by our conscientious and unselfish efforts. There is one department which has much to do in making our growth sturdy and able to stand the test of progress, and that is the Sunday school. Our Sunday school is the hope of the future, with the joy of present fruitage. Could there be a more joyful or important work than to help bring out in the children the understanding of God which heals the sick and enables them to solve their own problems? Does it not give them a solid foundation in the understanding of divine Principle, on which they can build their demonstration of Christian Science?

We should recognize our responsibility to the children, and our opportunity for helpfulness, by serving in this wonderful channel. Is this not an activity that merits the loving service of our most consecrated workers, and should we not be most careful in the selection of our teachers? Let us make teaching in the Sunday schools of our churches an evidence of the successful demonstration of Christian Science. This will also be an expression of our gratitude for our knowledge of this glorious truth.

One of the greatest problems of the hour is the establishment of government in all our ways—right government of self as well as right government of all human affairs. Mrs. Eddy says on page 287 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "Divine Love reforms, regenerates, giving to human weakness strength, serving as admonition, instruction, and governing all that really is. Divine Love is the noumenon and phenomenon, the Principle and practice of divine metaphysics. Love talked and not lived is a poor shift for the weak and worldly. Love lived in a court or cot is God exemplified, governing governments, industries, human rights, liberty, life."

We have before us in every direction the spectacle of chaos. The world is fearful of the future. Supply and demand are out of balance. Greed is rampant. A new cure-all for this disturbance is advanced every day. Mortals do not know which way to turn. Each one seems to be afraid that he is not being compensated according to his merit, thus upsetting himself and those around him, and thereby bringing discord and strife. Many are trying to see how little they can do and how much they can get, by passing the responsibility to others. The temptation is to lose confidence in our fellow man. The problems that confront us seem to be formidable. The world is searching and groping for peace instead of turmoil, for confidence instead of fear, for generosity instead of selfishness, for trust instead of suspicion. Just here Christian Science with its teaching of God's omnipotent government enters in and shows us where to turn. It shows us that we must work out our own salvation, teaching that our responsibility does not cease with ourselves. We must all share in the establishment of right and peace. As we solve this problem individually we aid in solving it for the world. It is a glorious opportunity to maintain our heritage and establish for the world a government under the control of divine wisdom and Love.

Among the many priceless legacies which our Leader has left us is the Manual of The Mother Church. Our appreciation of it grows in proportion to our understanding of its utility. In this day when error is seeking to overthrow all government, it is with the greatest joy that we as Christian Scientists know that the ideal of government presented by the Manual does stand, and that nothing can interfere with its manifestation. The more we study the Manual, the more we recognize the far-reaching effect of Mrs. Eddy's demonstration in giving us this for our guidance and protection. In Section 9 of Article I, we read: "Law constitutes government, and disobedience to the laws of The Mother Church must ultimate in annulling its Tenets and By-Laws. Without a proper system of government and form of action, nations, individuals, and religion are unprotected." As Christian Scientists we know, without a shadow of doubt, that there is but one law and one government, and that is God's. The Christian Science Manual stands for the government of The Mother Church. Obedience to the Manual protects our human footsteps, and shows us the way to manifest this right government. We must demonstrate right government in ourselves before we can expect to aid in the establishment of God's government for the world. We must eliminate self, self-will, and self-opinions and put our whole trust in God's guidance. As we do this we are certain, and know, that human strife will have lost its foundation.

A step in this direction is to start with the right control of our motives. Mrs. Eddy tells us in Article VIII, Section 1, of the Manual: "Neither animosity nor mere personal attachment should impel the motives or acts of the members of The Mother Church. In Science, divine Love alone governs man; and a Christian Scientist reflects the sweet amenities of Love, in rebuking sin, in true brotherliness, charitableness, and forgiveness. The members of this Church should daily watch and pray to be delivered from all evil, from prophesying, judging, condemning, counseling, influencing or being influenced erroneously."

We must put our motives to the test, and see whether we are sincere in praying for God's guidance, and are honest in following it,—whether we are really free from the control of self-will. As this is done, there can be but one result from the right motive, and that is right action. Just as certainly we know that wrong action is not the result of right motive, a motive that has been spiritually purified. When the divine law of Love has control of our motives we must pray for wisdom in order to manifest them so clearly that they cannot be misunderstood. Help often comes from most unexpected sources, when our aims and motives are right. In learning to correct our own motives we also gain the understanding needed to discern the motive back of all action.

How many times have we turned to our textbook and realized that Jesus did not come to relieve us of a single responsibility in the working out of life's problems. He came to show us the way to work them out for ourselves. We are confronted with the most perplexing problems. We are uncertain as to what is the best course of action—when to act and how to act wisely. Never has the need been so great as to-day for the calmness and clear insight which are so necessary to meet these problems. Never has there been a time so rich in opportunity for the Christian Scientist to show the world that he has a practical, livable, usable, true understanding of Principle to apply in his everyday affairs. Many times we find Christian Scientists in business who accept their enhancement of mental powers and perception of character, acuteness, and comprehensiveness, but overlook the question of capacity, which includes right activity. They seem to expect that their business demonstrations will be made for them. They find that aggressiveness is wrong but this does not mean that progressive activity should be stopped. Should they not, through their understanding of God's government and right motives, analyze the activity which the world calls aggressiveness and replace its evil with good? We must eliminate greed, unfairness, lack of consideration for others, selfishness, the pride of power, and the pride of self. We will then have remaining the divine activity of Spirit expressed in the good quality of alertness, the good quality of untiring energy, the keenness to discern the wants and requirements of our fellow man. The results would be that we would be able to measure up to the fullest capacity of our opportunities.

Let us go to our homes with a more careful analysis of our own work, and a firmer resolution to make our demonstration of Christian Science larger, better, and higher. Let us make the fruitage of our demonstration, the proof of our gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy,—an expression of our gratitude that she was spiritually minded enough to make practical for us the teachings of Jesus, so that we can prove the truth of his saying: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." May we never cease to remember in our effort to follow her, that our Leader ever kept in view the teachings of the Master, Christ Jesus.

Report of the Clerk of The Mother Church

The report of the Clerk, Charles E. Jarvis, for the year ending May 31, 1920, was as follows:—

In accordance with Section 1 of Article XIII of the By-laws of The Mother Church, the Clerk takes pleasure in presenting this report. The year just ended has been an eventful one. It has been a year rich in its opportunities for growth. The problems which arise are being met and mastered with the aid of divine Love and the understanding that the Manual of The Mother Church, as given by our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, "will remain to guide [us] safely on."

The growth of the Christian Science movement continues consistently, and in a gratifying manner. The admission of members during the year just ended was only slightly exceeded during one year in the history of our movement. The healing, which is the keynote of Christian Science and without which our church would only represent a mere theological creed, is going on everywhere, thus proving that the Christ is with us always, "even unto the end of the world." This is the bond which is uniting the sons of men and through which our cause has not only maintained its stately progress, but which enables it to stand to-day with a united front against the powers of darkness. In the lines of one of our favorite hymns:—

We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity.

During the past year 2373 lectures on Christian Science have been delivered by the members of the Board of Lectureship of this Church to an approximate aggregate of 1,891,058 persons. These lectures have been given in the United States including Alaska, Hawaii, and the Panama Canal Zone, and also in Canada, the Yukon Territory, England, Ireland, Scotland, France, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippine Islands, China, and Japan. Without exception the lecturers report marked growth in attendance and interest in the subject of Christian Science, thus evidencing the increasing desire of all mankind to learn more about God. Six lectures have been delivered in The Mother Church to audiences aggregating 27,600 persons. Lectures have also been delivered under the auspices of The Mother Church at nine suburban points in Greater Boston where there are no branch organizations. In this connection it may be well to state that within a radius of twenty miles of The Mother Church there are seventeen branch churches and societies. Christian Science lectures have also been delivered under the auspices of The Mother Church at the Massachusetts State Prison at Charlestown and at the United States Naval Prison at Portsmouth, N. H., where services are regularly held by workers provided by The Mother Church. As a result of the work of a Christian Science chaplain appointed to the United States Navy during the late war, this church has been recognized by the Navy Department in the appointment of a Christian Scientist to regular duty in that branch of the service.

War Relief Work.—Although subscriptions to the War Relief fund have been discontinued for more than a year, aid is being rendered in countries where the need still seems great because of the ravages of war. The work in France, Switzerland, and Italy is now being carried on by the local branch churches and societies. Assistance from the War Relief fund is being extended under proper supervision in England, Australia, Holland, and Armenia. Some months ago quantities of foodstuffs were purchased in Denmark and Norway and shipped to Germany, where they were distributed to our Christian Science brethren in that country. Subsequently a shipment of cloth and wearing apparel was made from America to Berlin and from there distributed through the various branch churches and societies in Germany to their members and interested friends. Drafts on the American Food Warehouses in Danzig and Vienna have been forwarded to Christian Scientists in those cities.

The Christian Science Benevolent Association.—Since the last Annual Meeting of The Mother Church the annual reports of Clerk and Treasurer, a booklet and a brochure, and three circular letters have been issued by the Trustees of The Christian Science Benevolent Association. These communications have kept the field informed as to the development and needs of the Association. A statement as to the present condition of the Association's finances is covered in the Treasurer's supplemental report. The buildings were opened to guests on October 1, 1919. Since then 263 guests have been accommodated, nearly all of whom have left the sanatorium healed or greatly benefited as a result of their experience there. It is to be remembered that the Benevolent Association is not maintaining a hotel, a hospital, nor a permanent home. The primary object of the Association, as has been stated on many occasions, is to provide a place where the so-called sick may go for healing or to recruit. In other words, a place where those in need of Christian Science help may sojourn for a season and in an harmonious atmosphere regain quickly that sense of normality which is the birthright of every child of God. While the Benevolent Association as a corporation organized under the laws of Massachusetts is subject to the regulations of the State Board of Charities and has at all times accommodated a certain percentage of guests on a wholly charitable or part pay basis, it is also designed to meet the needs of those who are accustomed to comfortable home surroundings. Through the universality of its compassionate appeal, Christian Science comes to all, rich and poor alike. As a consequence, our movement represents all states and stages of human attainment, from those who have not yet made their demonstration over the false sense of lack to those who are looked upon as endowed more liberally with what the world calls wealth, and, as Mrs. Eddy so beautifully states it on page 518 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "The rich in spirit help the poor in one grand brotherhood, all having the same Principle, or Father; and blessed is that man who seeth his brother's need and supplieth it, seeking his own in another's good." So when we as Christian Scientists gain a better understanding of the true meaning of substance, not only will the healing be accomplished more quickly and spontaneously, but it will be possible to enlarge The Christian Science Benevolent Association and expand its scope of usefulness.

Many loving offers have been received from those wishing to endow beds or rooms. This does not seem practicable for the reason that at present there are only about 140 rooms as compared with more than 1800 branch churches and societies. If any branch church, society, or students' association wishes to contribute any portion or all of the expenses of one of its members or friends at the Benevolent Association, such an arrangement would be quite acceptable. Contributions to the Permanent Fund are in order at all times. The income from this fund is to be used for the benefit of those unable to pay the regular rates, and otherwise to be devoted to the maintenance of the Association.

The Benevolent Association is dependent upon the spiritual as well as the financial support of the field. The local management is serving the interests and administering the contributions from the field. As the field has made possible the erection of the buildings, it is made clear to those unable to pay all for the accommodation, that there is no charge for the room, and whatever they are able to pay will be applied toward the cost of meals and attendance.

The Christian Science Benevolent Association is a benevolence, and not a business enterprise. It is not the intention of the Trustees to charge such rates for rooms or service as will yield a profit or which will convey the idea that the Benevolent Association is simply a commercial undertaking. A cordial invitation is extended to all members of The Mother Church to visit the buildings of the Association, at Single Tree Hill, Brookline.

Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy.—During the year ending May 31, 1920, the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy have expended "for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by" our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, the sum of $351,953.75. This amount has been dispensed as follows:—

Eight thousand five hundred dollars was given as assistance to eighty-five churches and societies in paying the expenses incident to their first lectures, and to Christian Science organizations at universities and colleges in paying the expenses of annual lectures, and $24,996.12 was given to assist in paying the traveling expenses of lecturers to and from foreign fields. The sum of $18,401.05 was spent in assisting branch organizations in the purchase of 551,577 books and periodicals presented to public and other lending libraries; $63,933.72 was contributed to 1078 churches and societies whose reports for the year ending October 31, 1919, indicated that they were entitled to assistance in the free distribution of authorized Christian Science literature; $236,122.86 was paid to forty-five branch churches and societies to assist them in erecting, purchasing, and remodeling church edifices, which were acquired at a cost of more than one and a half million dollars.

Committee on Publication.—In this department, the most notable fact to be recorded is that during the past year most of the editors who have reported or commented on our apparent difficulties have shown an attitude of fairness toward The Mother Church, and many of them have given expression to their sympathy. They have done this not only by what they have printed, but especially by what they have refused to print. Even the majority of the editors of religious periodicals who have commented on our affairs during the past year have done so with an evident desire to be fair and to beware of exaggerating the importance of our troubles. Of course, there have been exceptions to this general rule, but they have been notable as exceptions. Taking the secular and the religious press as a whole, it can be said that the news agencies and the editors have recognized that Christian Science is a powerful influence for good; that its adherents are estimable people, remarkable for both their zeal and works; and that the interests of Christian Science are best to be subserved when The Mother Church has the ability to function in full accord with the plan and purpose of its Founder.

During the past year, no important restriction of medical or religious freedom has been enacted by any public body. On the other hand, numerous bills for acts have failed to pass, or have been amended, when their restrictive effect has been made the subject of reasonable protest. During the past year, another of the United States (South Carolina) put an affirmative recognition of Christian Science on her statute book, in the shape of a provision that the Medical Practice Act of that State should not apply to those who practice the religious tenets of their church without pretending a knowledge of medicine or surgery. In several states, also, the course of legislation has shown an increasingly distinct tendency to recognize the rights of parents to choose or decline medical instruction, examination, and treatment for their children.

The growth of our movement during the year just ended has been most gratifying. Through our experiences of the past, we have every reason to look forward in confident expectation to a glorious future. As so well stated by Mrs. Eddy on page 323 of Science and Health, "Through the wholesome chastisements of Love, we are helped onward in the march towards righteousness, peace, and purity, which are the landmarks of Science. Beholding the infinite tasks of truth, we pause,—wait on God. Then we push onward, until boundless thought walks enraptured, and conception unconfined is winged to reach the divine glory."

CHURCH WELFARE COMMITTEE

The final announcement from the Committee on General Welfare was as follows:—

The Annual Meeting of The Mother Church, June 7, 1920, being the date of the expiration of the term of service of the Committee on General Welfare fixed by the resolution of The Christian Science Board of Directors June 2, 1919, the members assembled at the closing session of the Committee desire to submit the following brief final announcement to the members of The Mother Church. The report of the Committee has been sent to all members of The Mother Church whose names and addresses are published in The Christian Science Journal. Also packages containing lots of varying quantities have been supplied to the clerks of all branch churches and societies with a request to distribute the same among those of their members who are at the same time members of The Mother Church.

In concluding its labors the Committee desires to thank The Christian Science Board of Directors, the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, the Trustees of The Christian Science Benevolent Association, and the several departments of the church for all the facilities, courtesies, and personal interviews accorded to it during its period of service. Thanks are also extended herewith to those members of the church who have corresponded with the Committee and to all clerks of branch churches who have kindly assisted in circulating the report.

A Correction.—In the Committee's report recently issued the quotation at the foot of page 56 which was attributed through a misunderstanding to Mrs. Eddy, has since been found not to have been written by her, although in the Christian Science Sentinel, Volume 17, page 825, in the Annual Report of the Clerk of The Mother Church of 1915 the same quotation was published with the following statement: "Our Leader, while editor of The Christian Science Journal, once caused to be published therein (see Vol. III, p. 41) these prophetic words, which never were more appropriate for our consideration than to-day:—

" 'Whether the people recognize the Presence or not, it is here, making for their freedom. And not the dominion of acknowledged kings and princes alone is threatened—but the dominion of man over man in any form must give way to the liberty, fraternity, and equality toward which the unseen law, spiritual and eternal, forces humanity.' C. S. Journal, Vol. III, page 41."

Respectfully submitted,

COMMITTEE ON GENERAL WELFARE of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Extracts from reports from the field were read by George Wendell Adams, C. S. B. Other reports, from the field abroad, were read by Virgil O. Strickler, C.S.B., as follows:—

From First Church of Christ, Scientist, London, England.—The board of directors and members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, London, are happy to be able to report that the year 1919 has been one of increasing activity and progress. A total of 1477 copies of Science and Health were sold. During the past year eleven lectures were arranged by this church, being the largest number given in any one year before. The financial needs of the church have been amply met during the year, enabling all the activities, involving expenditure, to be well maintained, and in addition the minimum sum of five thousand pounds sterling guaranteed by this church, under a resolution passed on January 15, 1917, in aid of the Benevolent Association and Real Estate funds of The Mother Church, was reached on June 16, 1919. A striking feature of the past year has been the large and overflowing congregations which have attended the Sunday morning and Wednesday evening meetings.

From Seventh Church of Christ, Scientist, London, England.—We rejoice to report the steady growth of this branch church. The decision taken last year to purchase a site close to a busy thoroughfare, in the Borough of Kensington, and to erect on a portion of it a temporary church building which holds over four hundred people, has already proved a blessing. The larger congregations at our services, the gratitude expressed for the peace and healing received from them, the larger attendance at the Sunday school and lectures, and the increase of inquirers at our reading rooms, fill us all with deep thankfulness for the privilege of helping to spread the good tidings of Truth to a world so in need as it is to-day.

From First Church of Christ, Scientist, Durban, Natal, South Africa.—This church has made marked progress in all directions during the past year, and gratefully records that property was purchased recently in a very suitable part of Durban, for the sum of £2664. The members of First Church, Durban, hope to raise the total amount involved by the end of the present year.

From First Church of Christ, Scientist, Melbourne.—That the first load of bricks has been deposited on the land which we purchased some time ago, is a sign that our church building will be erected at no distant date. The plans for the church were accepted some months ago, and when erected the church will be a worthy tribute to the work which our beloved Leader has established all over the world. The lectures delivered last November did much to give a clearer understanding of the teachings of Christian Science to many inquirers. After the lectures there was a great increase in the demand for Science and Health at the lending library.

From First Church of Christ, Scientist, Dresden, Germany.—With a heart full of gratitude we send you the following account of the growth of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Dresden. In April, 1917, we reached the required number of church members to organize a church, after having been a Christian Science Society for six years. We had to work under most trying conditions, which reached their climax when we were forbidden by the government to hold public services; we then became a closed Society. With the change of government in 1918 we were allowed to hold again public services, also on account of the separation of State and Church we are enjoying much more freedom in our work for our beloved cause. We are now looking forward to the first lecture of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Dresden, to be held in May of this year, which will meet a very urgent need.

From First Church of Christ, Scientist, Hull, Yorkshire, England.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, Hull, Yorkshire, England, has much joy in reporting the greatest year of progress in its history. Our numbers have steadily increased so that our present building, which seats nearly two hundred people, is inadequate. Plans and a model of a building, capable of seating four hundred, have been prepared, tenders have been accepted, and actual building operations for a church edifice costing approximately forty-five thousand dollars have begun.

From First Church of Christ, Scientist, Berlin, Germany.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Berlin sends for this year's Annual Meeting of The Mother Church most cordial greetings. It is with much joy and heartfelt gratitude that we can speak of great growth in all the branches of our church activities. The halls, in which we are holding our church services and Wednesday evening meetings are hardly large enough any longer. The testimonies given at our Wednesday evening meetings are delivered joyfully and clearly according to the growing understanding of the visitors. The applications for membership were again more numerous than the previous year, and half of the new members of the past year are men. In closing we again desire to express our gratitude for the loving-kindness which has called into activity a relief work of such sublime magnitude for the benefit of all Christian Scientists and in the rich blessings of which our field has been privileged to share. There are no words to describe the wonderful help which thousands of adherents of Christian Science have received through it.

From Report of Christian Science War Relief Committee, Berlin, Germany.—On a Sunday morning I received a telegram from the Danish Red Cross that the carload of provisions had been sent to our address. On this day the room was provided. After about a week the provisions arrived and they were stored in the cellars of one of the adherents of our church. We were so grateful for this adjustment. The provisions were free of duty. Up to the present four hundred Christian Scientists have received their share. Dear friends, I wish you could have walked through the storerooms and seen this abundance; it was quite inspiring. I cannot describe how we felt after these long years of deprivation. We had all tried to forget these things, but when we saw them before us in such abundance we were reminded that we used to know and have these things. The joy and gratitude of the people surpasses all expectations—yet it is touching. They could not believe that all these things should be given to them. Many first inquired carefully how much they had to pay for it before they accepted their share. This work of love had the effect of liberation in its true sense. It was so plain that it was not the food that could do anything, that it was Love providing for all needs. All the bitterness which had accumulated during the past years,—the whole world hates us Germans,—it suddenly disappeared. The people felt again love, and this is the great blessing which will rest upon this work of love. The Committee furthermore desires to mention that besides the food provisions and the clothing, considerable amounts of money were received from The Mother Church for distribution among Christian Scientists in Germany. Christian Scientists in Germany are gratefully recognizing this work of brotherly love, finding its expression through the Directors of The Mother Church, the reflection of divine Love, which is above any sense of nationality, and the operation of which can be nothing but beneficial. The War Relief Committee desires to thank all Christian Scientists who have made this wonderful assistance for Germany possible.

After this there were short talks from the floor. The meeting terminated with the singing of the Doxology.

Selected Articles

[Louis A. Gregory in Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald]

"There is such a thing as real sickness in the world, despite what Christian Scientists, so called, allege to the contrary," asserts a contributor to the columns of the World-Herald. The Christian Science teaching concerning the unreality of sickness is a phase of spiritual truth, which Christ Jesus taught is not of this world; so it is apparent that the critic's statement entirely misses the mark. Concerning the evidence of the physical, or worldly, senses, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of this Science, writes, "Everything is as real as you make it, and no more so" (Unity of Good, p. 8). To the worldly senses evil may seem as real as good and disease as real as health. But Christian Science stresses the Bible teaching that man is the likeness of God; therefore it concludes logically that man has spiritual senses which accept good as real and reject evil as unreal. It is such spiritual capacity that Christ Jesus displayed in overcoming all disease and evil, and that Christian Science aids men to realize and utilize as he did.

The Master classed sickness as a work of the devil and said of him and his work, "He is a liar, and the father of it." The Savior's deeds confirmed his words, for he proved so clearly that health is real and disease is illusion that whole multitudes, to whom all manner of disease had seemed real, accepted the truth he taught; and this corrected the illusion, as shown by the fact that immediately they were healed. In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says on page 230: "If sickness is real, it belongs to immortality; if true, it is a part of Truth. Would you attempt with drugs, or without, to destroy a quality or condition of Truth? But if sickness and sin are illusions, the awakening from this mortal dream, or illusion, will bring us into health, holiness, and immortality. This awakening is the forever coming of Christ, the advanced appearing of Truth, which casts out error and heals the sick."

[B. F. Chandler in Virginian-Pilot, Norfolk, Va.]

Now that the local campaign of a revivalist has drawn to a close, I would like to offer a few brief comments on the gratuitous attacks upon Christian Science. It is indeed difficult to understand why the professional revivalist includes these attacks as a part of the regular program. They seem to forget they are addressing an intelligent audience, many of whom know by observation or from experience that the things said against Christian Science are not true, and who are thereby led to wonder if the balance of the discourse is equally unreliable. Judged from the newspaper reports, this revivalist has had less to say against Christian Science in Norfolk than he said in Richmond last year. Possibly he has awakened to the fact that he is defeating his own purpose, because the general experience is an increase in attendance at the Christian Science churches following the advertising thus furnished. Or possibly he has decided that the advice of Gamaliel, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone" is sound doctrine.

He says his quarrel is "with the doctrine of Christian Science." Maybe, but he has yet to offer something on the subject which would indicate that he knows what the doctrine of Christian Science is. It certainly does not teach the things he attributes to it, and his quotations, so called, from Mrs. Eddy's writings are always either incomplete or taken from the context in such a way as to present practically an opposite meaning. For instance, he said that Christian Science teaches that man is never sick. Any one who knows anything of Christian Science knows that it insists that to "heal the sick" is as much the business of a Christian as to "preach the gospel." And it is that very insistence that got Christian Science disliked. Christianity had for centuries been content to "preach the gospel," ignoring Jesus' equally emphatic command to "heal the sick," until Mary Baker Eddy startled the religious world not only by pointing out that it was the business of the church to obey both those commands but also by showing how it could be done.

The Christian Scientist is known as a student of the Bible, and it is in that rich and inexhaustible treasure house that he has found the health and happiness for which he is famed. The great promises of the Bible have always existed, but it took the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health, which is, as its name implies, a veritable Key to the Scriptures, to unlock the sacred Book and make those rich promises available to the here-and-now needs of humanity. It is for this the Christian Scientist is grateful to Mrs. Eddy. Jesus defined a Christian, a follower of the Christ, as, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Note the imperative "shall," which admits no evasion. The Christian Scientist is doing those works to-day in just the degree that he comprehends the Science taught by the Christ, and he will go smilingly and lovingly about the Father's business regardless of the "words" of his detractors, both in the pulpit and out, who misunderstand both him and his system, content to be judged by the Master's standard, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Principle or Person

It has been said that democracy has stifled personality. Very many hundreds of years ago Aristophanes set out to insist upon something of the same sort in a famous play, but history has hardly borne out his contention. The saying is epigrammatic, but like nearly all epigrams, it descends into a generalization which is unsound. What is meant, of course, is that the jealousies of the crowd prevent the individual from ever getting his shoulders above their heads; in plain English, that the mediocrity of the crowd is preferred to the brilliancy of the few. There would, it need hardly be said, be an element of safety as well as an element of danger in such a consummation. There might, that is to say, be less chance of public opinion being led by an Alcibiades than a town council, but then, on the other hand, a Cromwell or a Washington might never gain an opportunity. As a matter of fact when the "rotten boroughs" were disfranchised, in England, this was the very argument which was used for their retention, but in the years which have followed it has not proved that politics in England have been destitute of brilliant figures.

At the same time, if the world could only come to see it, it is never the person who is followed, though it is curiously true that it is the persona which exerts whatever domination there may be. Now the persona, the Latin word from which person is derived, was the mask worn by the actor to designate the character he was impersonating. Thus the physical personality of the Roman actor was hidden by his mask, and the audience was roused to laughter or to tears by a hidden personality distinguishable to them only by a painted face. Now it is not unlike that in actual everyday affairs. The audience cares very little for the statesman or the orator; it is swayed by the terms of his address, and the terms of his address are formulated either by the human mind, instinct with all the lusts of the flesh and the passions of materiality, or by the ideals given utterance to, which are the reflection, in a larger or a less degree, of the divine Mind, or Principle.

What, then, is really essential to the safety of mankind is that it should be able, as the founder of Christianity told it long ago, to judge righteous judgment. Only in the proportion in which it is able to separate truth from error, does it matter to it whether it is being addressed by an Alcibiades or a Washington, by a Cromwell or a town council. That, surely, is precisely what Mrs. Eddy meant when she wrote, in her article "Personal Contagion," on page 117 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "'What went ye out for to see?' A person, or a Principle? Whichever it be, determines the right or the wrong of this following." In other words, to mistake Principle for person is quite as dangerous as mistaking person for Principle. The Jewish hierarchy, hearing Jesus the Christ claim that his true self, the Christ, was the Son of God, was maddened and driven on to the committal of the worst crime in history, by mistaking the voice of Principle for the aggrandizement of person, whilst the mob, shouting to-day "Hosanna" and to-morrow "Crucify him," was quite unable to tell whether they were following person or Principle, and so were swayed one moment by the voice of Principle and the next by the mesmerism of evil.

Fortunately for the world, Mrs. Eddy has given it a compass by which it can steer, no matter how loud the storm of animal magnetism may shriek. It is a clear, metaphysical knowledge of the letter, supported by the demand of scientific demonstration. If the people of Jerusalem had really understood Jesus when he preached to them, they would never have followed the rabbis who led the attack upon him, in a blind respect for person. They would have measured the statements of the rabbis by their own metaphysical discernment, and they would have tested that metaphysical discernment by their own powers of demonstration. As it was, they had grown so used to accepting the decisions of the rabbis, as the decisions of men of superior spirituality and of superior understanding, that, when the voice of Truth spoke, though they had ears, they heard not. Indeed, the voice of Truth, they were told by the rabbis, came from a winebibber and a glutton, from a blasphemer and a charlatan.

Therein lies the proof of the vital necessity to the individual to judge for himself. Judas, who had listened to the crafty Caiaphas, realized too late what he had done. He had sold whatever understanding of Principle he had ever had to the chief priests, out of fear and greed. "The traitor's price," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 47 of Science and Health, "was thirty pieces of silver and the smiles of the Pharisees. He chose his time, when the people were in doubt concerning Jesus' teachings." It is just this state of doubt, brought about by the failure of the individual to protect himself against animal magnetism, which is defined by Mrs. Eddy on page 484 of Science and Health, in the words, "Animal magnetism is the voluntary or involuntary action of error in all its forms; it is the human antipode of divine Science," which makes him unable to judge righteous judgment, and so to be a law unto himself in forming his own conclusions. The conclusions he does form, under the influence of animal magnetism, are thrust upon him, without his knowledge, by the very influences which overthrew Judas. If Judas had really been preaching the gospel metaphysically, and healing the sick scientifically, he would never have been at the mercy of the high priests. As it was, through his neglect to understand and comply with the teaching of his Master, he laid himself open to the inrush of mental suggestion, which made him the tool of error.

Speaking absolutely, there is no such thing as a finite person. There is one Person, divine Mind, Principle. Every idea of this Mind is the reflection of absolute Truth and wisdom; and everything else which seems humanly to exist is nothing but the reflection of evil, the counterfeit of Truth and divine wisdom. Therefore, it is really ridiculous to speak of following personality. What every individual is doing is being guided by his own understanding or ignorance of Principle. It is absolutely useless to say that a person is good, because Christ Jesus long ago explained that there was none good but God, Principle; and it is absolutely futile to talk of people following personality to their own undoing, because what they are obeying is simply the mesmerism of evil, against which they have failed to protect themselves. Another individual may reflect good or evil, may respect Principle or person, but the question for the individual is not what another person is reflecting, but, as Mrs. Eddy says, "'What went ye out for to see?'" Frederick Dixon.

A Satisfactory Vacation

To do nothing is not a real vacation. All too often people are tempted to think that if they could be inactive for a season they would be happy. Indolence, however, is never satisfactory. Since laziness is not rest, it is bound to prove irksome. Even the seeking of some secluded spot may not result in the finding of genuine peace and freedom. Mere human solitude is, at the best, but counterfeit of that being alone with God which the real man always experiences. If mortal diversions tend to divert attention from true spiritual Life and its activity, they are not worth while. The constant change sought by worldly restlessness is a poor makeshift. As Mrs. Eddy says in Article XVII, Section 1, of the Manual, "Amusement or idleness is weariness. Truth and Love rest the weary and heavy laden."

By understanding the complete presence of the divine Mind, however, one is able to rejoice in any circumstances. Righteous joy is simply the daily knowing of how Truth operates. Isaiah tells us, "The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever." So, whether one be in the city or at the seashore, in the factory or among the mountains, one must first of all consider the glad wisdom that is sure. Right and orderly activity of Mind, quite apart from any belief in matter, alone can ever satisfy. The infinitely harmonious variety of the divine Life is the true vacation, simply because it demonstrates that the one Mind is full of good now even while the supposition of mortal mind, with all its seeming distresses and turmoils, is actually vacant. As the emptiness of the so-called mortal mind gives way to the entirety of divine intelligence manifest, it is proved that the true vacation is continuous. In spite of any seeming, the one infinite Mind produces and sustains true activity. This is the experience of good.

In connection with the common belief that one depends in part on personal friends for a pleasant time, it is interesting to study what Mrs. Eddy says on page 266 of Science and Health: "Would existence without personal friends be to you a blank? Then the time will come when you will be solitary, left without sympathy; but this seeming vacuum is already filled with divine Love. When this hour of development comes, even if you cling to a sense of personal joys, spiritual Love will force you to accept what best promotes your growth." Compare that passage with two sentences on page 346: "Disbelief in error destroys error, and leads to the discernment of Truth. There are no vacuums." Really to vacate mortal mind with all its illusions is to be wholly occupied with the divine Mind and what it knows. This is the only true happiness, and it depends upon no merely personal sense of things. Existence in the divine consciousness is by no means a blank; instead it is alert with all real good. Even where a seeming void would present itself, there intelligence knows the thorough sufficiency of spiritual action.

Right activity, indeed, is all that can make any experience worth while. Whether this activity be called work or anything else, it must be intelligent in order to be really pleasant. The conscious realization that Principle alone is causing anything actual is genuine satisfaction. Understanding Principle, one is sure to be happy in whatever one may be doing. This is what overcomes any sense of drudgery or mere mortal routine; for Principle is infinite and manifests itself as boundless spiritual variety. The quiet assurance forever of true existence does not require any material accompaniment. In fact, it must be altogether separate from any supposition of materiality. In proportion as doing is found in Mind and not as any material sense of things, is it proved enjoyable. Divine intelligence is constantly refreshing in its vigorous manifestation. As Isaiah declares, "This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing." What Peter called "the times of refreshing" do come solely "from the presence of the Lord," from the spiritually ever present consciousness of right activity.

A satisfactory vacation, then, must always be a time of right doing. It can never be mere indulgence in materiality. Regardless of any seeming pleasantness of matter in the past, now is the time to prove that alertness in accord with Principle is the only joy. This awakeness is limited to no human concept of awakeness. It unfolds in just the right way throughout all experience for the one who is determined to enjoy living in Mind. Its right time is eternal, for no earthly season can suffice to circumscribe it. Its place is Spirit, the one source of good, instead of any material spot. Health, strength, action, all this belongs to the real man here and now and endlessly. Knowing this, one must rejoice in the constant opportunity for all the vacation there truly can be—the turning away from mortal limitations to the infinity of immortal Life. Thus Christian Science takes nothing away from any one, but replaces the human seeming with the true idea.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

DURBAN, NATAL, SOUTH AFRICA.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, recently purchased property for £2664. The plot has a frontage of 115 feet on Russell Street and 146 feet on St. George's Street, and is very conveniently situated. A church hall to seat two hundred and fifty people is being built immediately, and a tender for £3126 has been accepted. Also a building on the property which will accommodate one hundred and eighty people has been altered and renovated at a cost of about £300, and is being used for services until September, when it is expected that the church hall will be completed. After that date the renovated building will be used by the Sunday school. The members hope to raise the total amount involved by the end of the present year.

The Lectures

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Abbie W. Farnsworth, who said in part:—

The great apostle Paul upon going into Athens found on an altar this inscription, "To THE UNKNOWN GOD," and he said to the Athenians, "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." So Christian Science is in the world to-day declaring unto us the God whom we have ignorantly worshiped, saying in the language of Jeremiah, "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off?"

In the writings of Mary Baker Eddy, our revered Leader, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, may be found these words (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 370): "In different ages the divine idea assumes different forms, according to humanity's needs. In this age it assumes, more intelligently than ever before, the form of Christian healing." Just so surely as the need of the age is that of healing, and that the age is crying out for deliverance from sorrow, strife, sin, sickness, and death, just so surely is God hearing that human cry, and through this divine idea of Him as revealed in Christian Science, is meeting that human need, scientifically proving that God is indeed "a God at hand . . . and not a God afar off."

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Second Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Charles E. Heitman, who said in part:—

It is unquestionably true that through the healing and regenerating agency of Christian Science almost countless lives that were once on the brink of discouragement and despair, have been rendered healthy, happy, and capable of high and valuable service to the world. Christian Science has been able to do this by giving mankind a better understanding of God and His Christ,—an understanding which manifests itself in better health, better morals, and better mental and physical conditions. In other words, Christian Science is preaching the gospel to mankind by giving them a practical and demonstrable understanding of God, rather than asking them to worship ignorantly an unknown and unknowable God on the basis of blind faith.

EL CENTRO, CALIF. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by C. M. Barton, who said in part:—

From time to time it is the custom of Christian Science churches to hold lectures. This is not a part of a plan of propaganda; for it is not the purpose of our denomination to persuade any one of anything, or to unsettle a person who is really happy in the faith he holds. But in times past the subject of Christian Science has often been roughly handled by those without information, and so these lectures are arranged to furnish a correct statement of what Christian Science really is. Also, we make grateful acknowledgment of many blessings which have come to us as a result of our study of Christian Science, and it is but an act of ordinary unselfishness to wish to make available to any who may have need thereof that which we have found is able to bring to us the blessed boon of health and happiness.

BALTIMORE, MD. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Frank Poe, who said in part:—

There is perhaps no one fact which stands out with greater prominence throughout the Scriptures than the fact that the recognition and understanding of spiritual law brought to those who possessed it an abundance of peace, comfort, health, harmony, and happiness. In Psalms we read, "Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them." And in his epistle to the Romans, Paul writes, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." It was most undoubtedly through his perfect understanding of spiritual law and its operation that Christ Jesus was enabled to perform his wonderful works; and in his Sermon on the Mount, recorded in Matthew, we find him saying, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." He thus pointed to the fulfillment of God's spiritual law as his real mission.

MANILA, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Capt. Edward Parfit, who said in part:—

Jesus established only one system of theology and healing. He taught a waiting world that the creator is quite capable of continuing the perfect harmony of His creation, but that in order for man to know this and to benefit thereby, it is essential that man should have no other gods; that is, he must not invest any form of matter with divine attributes, human will and human judgment must give place to divine wisdom, and divine Love must guide him in all things.

These teachings were so revolutionary, so at variance with the teachings of the theology and medicine of the time, that Jesus became the "despised and rejected of men." But as truth never dies, his teachings have survived the persecutions of the ages although at times hidden from human perception. In 1866 these great truths were again revealed, this time to a woman, Mary Baker Eddy. She named her discovery Christian Science, and has given this Science to the world through her writings and through her loyal students.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Thirteenth Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Josephine S. Goes, who said in part:—

Christian Science, the religion of love, is applicable to our daily needs, heals all our diseases, teaches us the truth about God and man, how to think and how to live. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 233): "Every day makes its demands upon us for higher proofs rather than professions of Christian power. These proofs consist solely in the destruction of sin, sickness, and death by the power of Spirit, as Jesus destroyed them."

NEW ORLEANS, LA. (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. J. E. Rhodes, who said in part:—

For nearly half a century Christian Science has healed the sick, comforted the sorrowing, and regenerated the sinful. Thousands of men and women bear grateful witness to the power of its teaching.

In the early centuries after Christ, when unlettered ignorance made the Bible a sealed Book to nearly all people and strife for temporal power had dimmed the spirituality of the church, men lost the power of spiritual healing. Now and then through the years some pure souls rose to such consciousness of the omnipotence of God and the power of Spirit that they received healing; but even they believed that such healing came only when God in His infinite mercy temporarily suspended some great material law.

It remained for Mary Baker Eddy, fitted by years of Scriptural study and spiritual understanding, to see that it is never God's law that is set aside, and that it is only our own belief in the power of man-made material laws which hinders us from exercising that dominion which was promised us of old. Mrs. Eddy embodied her discovery in a textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which is daily unlocking the spiritual treasures of the Bible to eager hundreds.

ST. LOUIS, MO. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by William J. Siegel, who said in part:—

Christian Science to-day is world wide, world known, world great. Founded on the Bible, it gives to man a clearer and more practical knowledge of God, a correct understanding of what God is, what man is, and his relation to God. In reading the Bible, the Christian Scientist reads the letter and imbibes the spirit of Truth, and thereby does he strive to demonstrate by application and daily living that the inspired word of the Bible is applicable to-day to all mankind; and truly can the Christian Scientist affirm the words of Malachi, "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

WILKES-BARRE, PA. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Mary C. Davis, who said in part:—

All true Science deals with fact, not supposition; with the operation of law, not the fluctuations of chance. The Hebrew seers recognized the law of nature as the law of God, and in the beginning religion and science walked hand in hand. But when the teaching of Jesus became submerged in the recital of miracle, science became divorced from religion, and they walked apart. The visible world was pronounced a cosmos governed by fixed laws, while the spiritual world was called the great exception—a chaos of facts beyond the reach of law.

Therefore, when Mary Baker Eddy discovered the source of all law to be divine Principle, known to theology as God and to Science as the great First Cause, she not only met the demand of Science that "all that concerned life and conduct should be placed on a scientific basis," but she made Science complete by "disclosing the naturalness of the supernatural."

STREATOR, ILL. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Cora May Bennett, who said in part:—

Christian Science is attracting much attention to-day because of the blessings it is bringing to those who live in accordance with its teachings,—blessings of peace, health, and happiness, which are not for Christian Scientists alone but for all who have the right idea of God. The Bible is their chart of life, its truths are present realities, giving healing, comfort, and protection in time of need.

BELLEVUE, OHIO (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. S. M. Lewis, who said in part:—

Human experiences are constantly teaching us that without a correct understanding of God there is no permanent joy or peace. Many of us have searched the Bible from cover to cover, and yet have failed to find the comfort sought therein; but through Christian Science we have found in the Bible the law of God, and we love and comprehend more fully the life of the master Christian, Jesus the Christ, and are inspired to live nearer his teachings and commands.—The Bellevue Gazette.

JACKSON, MISS. (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Emmett J. Hull, who said in part:—

Pilate's question to Jesus, "What is truth?" has found an echo in the heart of every thinking person since that time. In a greater or lesser degree, all are seekers for truth. Students of Christian Science have found in this new-old religion a most satisfying explanation of God and man's relation to God and, moreover, they have found it practical and have learned that obedience to spiritual law, which it reveals, does heal and regenerate,—mentally, morally, physically.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (Second Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Archibald W. Edes, who said in part:—

A noticeable sign of the times has been observed in this city during the past few weeks. An effort is being made to introduce the practice of spiritual healing into the so-called orthodox, evangelical churches, and to include it among the regular functions of Christian service. Although this seems like a very tardy and reluctant compliance with the command of Jesus, given nineteen centuries ago, to "heal the sick," Christian Scientists are grateful to observe this sign of spiritual awakening.

Healing by prayer has been practiced in the Christian Science church with undeniable success during the past fifty years. In order to learn how Jesus healed, as Christian Scientists are learning, it is not necessary to study books on hygiene, medication, mental suggestion, or other material subjects, for these hinder true spiritual understanding; but it is absolutely essential to study the Bible in the light which Christian Science throws upon it.

DAYTON, OHIO (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Miss Marie Hammer, who said in part:—

In our day Christian Science has become for many thousands a refuge against the delusions of materialism. As material opinions become more insistent, Christian Science will become more imperative. People will become more and more attracted to its teachings, because it is a demonstrable religion. Like every other really important achievement in life, the practice of Christian Science requires patience and perseverance; but unlike other callings it does not require extraordinary talents nor special gifts, other than the application of those higher qualities of good, which are possessed inherently by all, but which must be developed by the individual.

PORTLAND, ORE. (Third Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Holman G. Norton, who said in part:—

The design of Christian Science is to give man a more comprehensive, a more understandable, a more usable idea of God than he now has. In other words, it is to teach mankind that God is "a very present help in trouble," and is available not only for salvation from sin, but also for saving us from worry, want, and disease. Mary Baker Eddy in her book, "Unity of Good" (p. 4), says, "God has not forbidden man to know Him; on the contrary, the Father bids man have the same Mind 'which was also in Christ Jesus,'—which was certainly the divine Mind."

Testimonies of Healing

From childhood I had attended a denominational church, but could not believe or understand its teachings. When it came to trying to make my children understand God, as I had been taught, I was at a standstill. So when Christian Science came to me, I devoured it eagerly. During my first months of study some wonderful healings came, among them that of a so-called incurable disease from which a daughter had suffered for nine years. Later that year we became busy with the manifold duties that come with life on a farm, and this daughter seemingly relapsed into the old condition. It has taken three years of patient study and work to overcome it. Now she is a big, strong girl in high school and simply radiates health.

We have had many wonderful healings, but we are more grateful for the spiritual understanding that Christian Science gives than all else. My three daughters and I are members of a Christian Science Society, and I rejoice in being a member of The Mother Church. My husband is studying and making his demonstrations. It is so beautiful to see the far-reaching effect of Truth, when we really try to reflect it. We are so thankful and grateful to our dear Leader and especially grateful for the Lesson-Sermons. The Monitor is eagerly read every day, also the Journal and Sentinel are gladly read and passed on. We can only try to show our gratitude to those who pointed the way by becoming better Christian Scientists ourselves.

(Mrs.) Bess Bassett, Syracuse, Ind.

About three years ago I took up the study of Christian Science after many years of suffering. I had been under the care of the best physicians and had had a severe operation with the hope of regaining my health, but it seemed as if conditions became worse. The operation left me in a nervous state, and other complications set in—stomach, bowel, kidney, and bladder trouble; but the worst pain was due to adhesions, which the doctor said resulted from the operation. I became so nervous that I could not sleep unless under the influence of an opiate. Electrical treatments were then resorted to, but to no avail.

One day a friend stopped to see me and asked me if I would try Christian Science. After trying many physicians and surgeons I turned to God, for man's extremity is indeed God's opportunity. Needless to say, I was healed, and words cannot express my gratitude to God for this healing, and to our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for revealing this truth to us. We have had many healings in our family since, such as headaches, sore throat, fractured rib, and bruises from a fall, which were healed in a short time. For all this I am so thankful and hope this testimony will help some poor sufferer in his search for Truth.

(Mrs.) Anna Puls, Louisville, Ky.

Words cannot tell all the blessings that have come to me since I commenced the study of Christian Science. In our family of five our healings have been almost constant, there was so much to be healed both physically and mentally. The Bible when read (which was seldom) seemed so confusing that I could not understand it, much less put any of it into practice. But now it is my daily guide and I want to give Mrs. Eddy all the credit, for I have learned to read the Bible understandingly through the study of her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," for which I owe her endless gratitude.

A great revelation came to me when my daughter was healed of what would be called blood poisoning. For about a week her hand continued to swell in spite of all the truth she mentally declared. She was going to school every day, and when her hand and arm up to the elbow were about twice their normal size, people commenced to suggest that if she did not go to a doctor to have it lanced she would lose her arm and maybe her life. Until those suggestions were made she had had no pain or discomfort except that the arm was so heavy she had to carry it in a sling. As those suggestions were repeated a number of times, fear started to creep into her thought and the arm began to pain her. She then telephoned to a practitioner and asked for help. The practitioner lovingly told her to keep in mind what Mrs. Eddy says on page 463 of Science and Health, "A spiritual idea has not a single element of error, and this truth removes properly whatever is offensive." After that she was free from pain again, and after four treatments, when her hand looked worse than at any other time, she declared she was healed and asked the practitioner to discontinue treatments.

In a week's time her hand was normal, with the exception of the skin peeling off. At no time was there any discharge. That "truth removes properly whatever is offensive" was proved to be a true statement. During all this time she never missed a day of school or a night's sleep.

At one time when playing with a little wagon, she caught her finger and tore one of her nails off. With her own understanding, which she had gained in Sunday school, she was able to prove that matter has no sensation. That same evening she washed the dishes and practiced her music lesson as usual, and in a short time a perfect finger nail replaced the old one. A stomach trouble that had been present since infancy has been overcome for our son, also chronic constipation. Colds and measles have been healed instantly by realizing what the apostle Paul declared: "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Many other ailments too numerous to mention have yielded to the power of the truth. As I have grown in understanding my supply has been more abundant, and best of all I have gained the peace of mind "which passeth all understanding." My one desire is that I may be able to help my brother man as I have been helped.

Mrs. Dagny Rodgers, Bothell, Wash.

For several years I was a sufferer from insomnia and all sorts of nervous troubles. Of the different doctors whom I consulted during my illness, some treated me for heart disease which, they said, would develop until I would become completely paralyzed; others treated me for a nervous trouble so pronounced that it seemed impossible that I would ever be healed of it; still another treated me for the blood, which he said was too thick, and also for the heart, which was extremely weak. I was hardly allowed to move, could not bend, nor talk while walking, and could not eat after six o'clock in the evening. I was very much cast down and my fear was very great.

It was at this critical period of my life that I heard of Christian Science, and to me it was truly a revelation. After the first Wednesday evening meeting which I attended I felt that here was the way to deliverance, and after I returned home I put aside all the material remedies which I had thought were absolutely necessary to relieve the attacks of heart trouble. Then I called on a practitioner and my condition rapidly improved. After two months' treatment I was a new woman, transformed spiritually, morally, and physically, and had again taken up my work with courage, and had lost my fear of moving and of fatigue. But to me the mental healing is still more precious than the physical one.

It is therefore with deep gratitude to God, our Father, for all the blessings that I have received, that I give this testimony. Through Mrs. Eddy's writings I have been able to understand how to serve God in spirit and in truth. I am also grateful to the practitioner who has helped me to a better understanding of our Master's teachings and how to put them into practice, also grateful to all those who have encouraged me with their good thoughts. My healing has been permanent and I am studying Christian Science with joy and eagerness.

(Mrs.) PAULINE ISCH, Geneva, Switzerland.

It is with the deepest feeling of gratitude to God and to Mrs. Eddy that I pen this testimony. During the last year I have had three attacks of pneumonia and two of asthma. It was during my third attack of pneumonia that I was brought to Christian Science. I had been in bed three days, had eaten nothing, and was very weak. My doctor said that when I recovered from this attack and was able to be moved, I must go out West to live. My husband was about to make preparations for the selling of his business, when a kind friend advised him to call in a Christian Science practitioner. He did so on the fourth day, and I shall never forget the ray of sunshine which entered my room when this dear woman came. From that very hour I gained strength. The pain left my lungs, and the following day I was able to eat. My husband bought a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and I commenced to study it, refusing at the same time to take either medicine or pills. In two weeks I was well and strong and have been quite well since. I had also for a long period suffered from ovarian and other internal troubles, all of which have entirely disappeared. For ten years I had worn eyeglasses constantly and I have now been able to cast them aside.

I have indeed many things to be grateful for. The Bible, which had always seemed a mystery to me, is now a new book, after having read Science and Health. Besides being healed of sickness I have been able to overcome temper and pride, which of course are stumblingblocks to any one. My six-year-old boy loves to attend the Christian Science Sunday school and even now demonstrates for himself when he is bruised or feeling cross, and has already overcome his fear of darkness. I used to think it impossible to love my neighbor as myself, but Christian Science teaches us that nothing is impossible to God. I am indeed thankful that I suffered, because it was the means by which I was brought nearer to God. It proves the truth of Mrs. Eddy's saying on page 66 of Science and Health: "Sorrow is salutary. Through great tribulation we enter the kingdom. Trials are proofs of God's care." How good it is for us to know that God's people can live anywhere, in any climate, and to understand the reason why. I hope my testimony will help some one who is groping in the darkness for a glimpse of the light, to remember the words of Christ Jesus, "I am the way, the truth, and the life."—(Mrs.) B. MILLARD, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

I first heard of Christian Science when the new edifice of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, was dedicated in Boston. I attended one of the services and it impressed me as being harmonious. I had never been interested in religion and never wanted to read the Bible. Several months later I went to a Wednesday evening testimony meeting. Many told about this wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which I learned could be borrowed, read, or purchased at the Christian Science reading rooms. I immediately procured the book after the service and commenced reading. I was willing to give it a fair trial, and within two weeks was healed of intense suffering, both mental and physical. I had been taking several kinds of medicine, but these were disposed of at once, and there has not been any desire for them since. Headaches of long standing, neuralgia, sleeplessness, throat trouble, and bowel disorder were healed; also catarrh, dizzy spells, and nervous prostration. I had been in a hospital for four months for nervous trouble, but under Christian Science treatment it entirely disappeared and has never returned. Words cannot express my gratitude for the spiritual understanding of God, gained from studying the Lesson-Sermons. I have overcome a sense of anger, sensitiveness, sorrow, and a tendency to take offense readily. I am a healthy, active woman, now able to work for a living. I hope this may help some seeker for the truth.

I want to express my gratitude for Christian Science; to Jesus the Way-shower, and to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the vision which enabled them to lead mankind out of the deep depressions of mortal belief; also to the practitioner who gave me so much encouragement when I most needed it.

Christian Science made its gracious entry into our home a little less than four years ago, since which time I could recount endless blessings. While there have been many overcomings of discordant conditions, I am especially grateful for the wonderful spiritual uplift and sense of freedom and protection which a knowledge of man's relationship to the all-loving Father brings. To each one of us there is, perhaps, one demonstration that stands out above all others. In my own experience it was the overcoming of a claim of heart trouble. To be exact, perhaps it should be referred to as heart failure; for it came upon me suddenly when I was, as I then thought, in perfect physical condition. This overcoming was not the work of a moment, however; but for this I am very grateful, for the following months but proved to me again and again that the angels of His presence are ever with those who put their trust in Him; that, as the great Master taught, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living;" and "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."—G. F. HOLKER, Minneapolis, Minn.

With the greatest joy I offer this testimony to the goodness of God as revealed to me by Christian Science. When utterly wretched and without confidence in myself or hope in God, this glorious teaching proved to me that God is Love and there is none else besides Him. I was brought up in a denominational church, but early discarded its teachings as impractical. I had accepted the erroneous beliefs that the Bible promises were only to be realized in some future state of existence, in which I felt no interest, and that the good accomplished by Jesus, the prophets, and the apostles, was the result of the special gift of a partial God,—which closed for me this Book. The necessity of finding some satisfying reason for being, the nature of the creator, of the universe, and other important questions, turned me from one teaching to another in vain, until at length I said in my heart, "There is no God."

Digitized by Google

Not long after reaching this miserable condition I heard of Christian Science. I borrowed the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, to see what authority this teaching had for declaring disease unreal. At the time I had no thought of getting any help from it. I found the chapter on prayer the most reasonable and just conception of the subject I had ever heard, and the chapter entitled "Genesis" made a very strong appeal to me. This reading was profoundly interesting to me, but the remainder of the book seemed obscure and difficult to understand; nevertheless I could not put it down. It at once began to lift me out of my depression and as soon as I felt certain that there was such a thing as absolute truth I knew that to gain the understanding of it was sufficient reason for being.

My progress was very slow and errors of all kinds seemed rampant, but the memory of the emptiness of existence felt previously, impelled me to strive to understand Christian Science. My darkest hours were those when I was beset with the fear that this teaching was only another human theory and not the Science of being. Continued study and the effort to put into practice what I learned, slowly but surely proved this doubt to be absolutely without foundation. I have learned that God is just as present now and as able to heal disease as in time past. Troublesome ills of many years' standing have been completely eradicated and I have found it efficient in healing colds, influenza, and ptomaine poisoning, in a remarkably short time. Since first studying Christian Science I have used no material remedies in case of disease, and my health is now excellent. It has given me a practical religion and an understanding of the true nature of God, an intelligent appreciation of Christ Jesus as "the way" and the Savior of mankind.

I find God to be impartial Love giving only good gifts to all, and the Bible promises the inevitable good resulting from obedience to divine law, which law Christian Science is making known to me. For the book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and all the other writings of Mary Baker Eddy, for the Christian Science literature, church services, class instruction, Christian Science lectures, the loving help always generously extended by Christian Scientists in time of need, and other blessings, I am more grateful than I can tell. I can only say that in my experience Christian Science has not taken away anything good, while it has given to me a new lightness of heart to enjoy all rightful pleasures. To Mary Baker Eddy, for her selflessness, goodness, and purity, so essential to the discovery of Christian Science, I owe immeasurable gratitude.

(Miss) Olive G. Austin, Sutton Coldfield, England.

I have always derived great benefit from reading the testimonies in the Christian Science Sentinel. It is my desire that my testimony may help some one who is seeking the truth. About a year ago, I came into Christian Science to be healed of insomnia, gallstones, and nervousness. After reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy for one hour I was able to get up out of bed after having been confined to my room three weeks. One week later I called on a practitioner for help, and that night I slept through the entire night. Since that night my rest has been peaceful. I have also been healed of gallstones and nervousness.

Not long ago I had a demonstration which proved to me that divine Love is ever present. While having my hair shampooed the cold and hot water faucets were turned on to run through a spray. In some way the cold water faucet was cut off and the boiling hot water was sprayed over my head and forehead. Holding fast to the truth, in less than ten minutes I was free from all pain and not a sign of a burn was to be seen. For these physical healings and the spiritual uplift, I am truly grateful. I have come into some understanding of the words of Jesus, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—Mrs. M. M. Eiseman, Cleveland, Ohio.

I have been reading Christian Science for several years and so many blessings have come to me and mine that I wish to add this testimony to those I read each week. It seems impossible to begin with any special blessing, for there are so many. I believe my first desire was to know the true, living God. I had tried so hard in my church work to have a fuller realization of God and had not been satisfied. I never gave any consideration to Christian Science as I, like many others, without investigating it, considered it the devil's work. I had always taken a great deal of medicine, in fact felt that I must have something on hand to take constantly. I heard of a healing in Christian Science and inquired into it. Also a near relative who had been reading Science looked so well and happy that this also led me to read some of the literature. I have been reading it ever since.

It has not been necessary for me to take medicine for a number of years, I feel so strong and well. I have had instantaneous healings of constipation and an abscessed tooth, which usually took weeks of medical treatment. Nervousness has also been overcome. I had never been able to spend a night alone, being so afraid, and recently was alone several nights without a trace of fear. Fear of storms has likewise disappeared. I have had what seemed to be a slow healing and although I was treated by several loving practitioners the difficulty did not seem to yield. I was finally shown that the channel for my healing lay right in my own home through the work of my husband. I now know this is met. I am deeply grateful for our literature, and to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

(Mrs.) Cora B. Viquesney, Americus, Ga.

I am happy to vouch for the statements of my wife in reference to her many blessings and wish to say further that she has hardly touched on the blessings that have been poured out to us both through our study and work in Christian Science. It is hard to understand how any one can manage at all with no further knowledge of God, good, than is generally known, for we find it an ever present help in time of trouble. I have the help of membership in The Mother Church, and while we are located without any active church here we keep in touch with Christian Scientists in other places and hold our own services at home, following the Church Manual in detail. I am deeply grateful for demonstrations over supply, that have verily proved that divine Love will constantly lead us in green pastures and beside the still waters. Ernest M. Viquesney.

One Wednesday evening I attended a Christian Science service with a neighbor for the first time and was completely healed of a painful bunion on my foot, which had bothered me for years. I did not even know then that there was a textbook. I have felt that healing power since when attending the church services. Later my glasses were broken in an almost mysterious way and I was forced into the truth by my own decision that I would spend the amount of the cost of a new lens on Christian Science treatment. That was over four years ago. The visual defects have all disappeared and another difficulty with my eyes has been partly overcome. A baby girl was born under Christian Science treatment, with very little discomfort, and such an uplifted feeling was experienced all through the time previous to the birth. After her birth I began to do mental work for myself, and many problems have been met. Three times my little daughter has gone through different forms of contagious disease; treatment was asked for, and she was kept from other children until the disease was overcome, but her actions were not different then from any other time and she enjoys perfect health. I have been amazed at the readiness with which she declares, "God is Love; He takes care of me," when she is bumped or scratched even slightly, as she is only a little past two years.

I know I have much for which to thank God unceasingly, and am protected so many times from different phases of error that I feel I cannot comprehend the extent of this protection. Christian Science has been received into my mother's home and also the home of my husband's brother and that of my sister, proving to me Mrs. Eddy's words, "In the scientific relation of God to man, we find that whatever blesses one blesses all, as Jesus showed with the loaves and the fishes,—Spirit, not matter, being the source of supply."

(Mrs.) ADA F. BROWN, Los Angeles, Calif.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High." I am happy to be able to thank God for all the good which we have received through Christian Science. I was healed of a protracted inflammation of the eyes, of burns, and of chronic headaches. While receiving treatment from the practitioner for the inflammation of the eyes, a mental trouble, due to the passing away of my mother, was also overcome. I am most grateful for my growth in spiritual understanding, which has enabled me to meet all the demands of my profession. It has been proved to me that God is the inexhaustible source of supply of all good. I am now residing in a house of Christian Scientists, where no lack is felt, and all are endeavoring to let divine Love govern them. Whenever I had professional difficulties to battle with, help always came at the right time through clinging to the truth. I thank God for the many blessings received, and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her faithful, untiring work, which she did for all mankind.

(Miss) ANNA BECKER, Stade, Germany.

Through a deep sense of gratitude for the constant help of the Christian Science literature I send the following testimony. Having first been healed of an illness of long standing through a prayerful study of the Bible, I was very joyous and happy over it when a new neighbor gave me some Christian Science literature. Thinking, as I had been taught, that it was in teaching similar to spiritualism, hypnotism, and other beliefs of the carnal mind, or the belief in a power apart from the One spoken of all through the Bible, I laid it aside, saying, "Oh, if people could only know the Bible method of healing." I seemed guided by an unseen hand to make my every move. Taking down one of the Sentinels a week later, I prayerfully opened it, to find a beautiful poem describing my late experience; but I put the paper aside again, thinking of course it was designed, as I had been taught, to "deceive the very elect."

Again the prompting to read came, and again the truth was recognized, so I decided to read on and find the errors, if any, in this "new doctrine." I have now read and studied for ten years and am satisfied that it is primitive Christianity, revealed anew to this age by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who was spiritual enough to gain the heights of understanding. Healings are becoming the natural result of spiritualized thinking; error is retreating more and more into its native nothingness. I could not begin to enumerate the blessings in happiness, health, and wholeness this understanding brings to light and makes available.

I want to tell of my healing of blood poisoning, with the hope that it may help others. I was stricken suddenly one morning with a very severe headache, so severe I had to telephone to a friend asking her to come over immediately, if possible. She did so and put me to bed, also telephoned to a practitioner for help. The treatment was begun at once. The swelling, which began on my face, spread rapidly and the fever ran very high; I also had trouble with my bowels and kidneys. Through the faithful and efficient work of the practitioner the trouble was quickly overcome. Not an outward application was used nor anything taken internally. I suffered four days with my head, and when I awoke on the morning of the fifth day I found my headache had disappeared; I was hungry and ate a good breakfast. Just one week from the day I was stricken I was up perfectly well and attending to my household.

I am thankful to God for the truth and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for showing us how to seek it. My desire is to let my light so shine that it may help others.

After wearing a truss for over forty years I was healed last July in a few absent treatments. The truss was laid aside and has not been needed since. Seventeen years ago I was instantaneously cured of the tobacco habit while on night shift at the city light plant, and at that time was cured of rheumatism through absent treatment. I thank God, and am thankful to Mrs. Eddy for the help I have received through Christian Science.—F. B. EELLS, Gunnison, Colo.

Having read and enjoyed the testimonies in our periodicals I feel I can no longer wait to give mine, in the hope of bringing to some one a little of this glorious truth, which has been unfolded to me through the study of Christian Science. It was about two years ago that the truth first found me, and words fail to express the joy, comfort, and peace of mind which have come to me in that time. I was suffering from a number of things, among the worst being chronic sick headaches, which I had had from childhood, bowel trouble, nervousness, and a severe mental trouble from which I could find no relief. Thank God, all these discords have been entirely overcome, together with many others.

I have six children; and croup, earache, toothache, and whooping cough have been successfully overcome for them in a few hours. But what seems to me the greatest demonstration of all was an entirely painless childbirth. I had the help of a loving practitioner, and it has proved to me that matter has no law. It is impossible for me to express in words my gratitude to God and to the dear woman who made this healing truth available to the world, and to all the dear ones who have helped me on the upward path.

Signs of the Times

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald]

By this time Christians should have learned that the world is not to be saved—transformed into disciples of Christ—by words. It can only be done by men and women breathing, living, acting, the very spirit of Christ. Perpetual peace, industrial and every other kind, can only be made in the world by living epistles of his spiritual truth, power, and love.

But Christianity is something more even than the highest code of ethics ever given to the earth. It can only be perfectly defined by transformed, spiritualized human lives, by men and women who have given up the old law, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," for the new law which he gave unto us, to do good for evil. No matter how many definitions of Christianity are formulated in words, the great mass of mankind will never much understand them until their meaning is made plain by real flesh and blood men and women who have overcome the world—who have been "born again," as he says we must be. Neither will this great mass of humanity be turned from the path of sin in which most of them are walking, until some regenerated man or woman throws the mantle of charity over their frailties and loves them in spite of their faults; until some real disciple of Christ, blessed with God's own spiritual power, instead of harshly threatening them with hell fire, gently takes them by the hand and gives them the desire, the courage, and the strength to walk in the upward way.

[Manufacturers Record]

Primarily, the whole trouble with the United States is the lack of deep, whole-souled religion,—a religion that makes every man realize his responsibility to other men and to the world and to Almighty God; a religion that makes every man realize that until he has, in his own thought, put himself in the other man's place, and then treated the other man as he would, under like circumstances, wish to be treated, he has failed to follow divine leadership. Until all people accept the religion of Christ in this spirit, no universal panacea can be found for present conditions. There must come a widespread and almost universal revival of religion, pure and undefiled, or we cannot hope for the settlement of all the problems which now confront our country.

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

To make our point more clear we speak frankly, but with the utmost kindness, regarding our Methodist brethren. With a courage and faith becoming the spiritual descendants of John Wesley, they have led the way in the acquisition of a missionary fund of unprecedented size. They are already using a part of their new millions to build beautiful modern church edifices, not on the frontier only and in foreign lands, but in cities and towns all over this country. If in every case Protestantism as a whole will be strengthened in these communities by fortifying Methodists anew and if the members of other communions welcome such augmentation of their forces, no one should offer criticism.

But if this be not true, if some Methodist missionary administrators take the view that no community is properly churched unless it has a Methodist Church, just as some Episcopal bishops hold that Christ's Church is unrepresented in a community that has no Episcopal Church, then the basic idea of the Interchurch Movement is sadly discredited and its boasted cooperation becomes a farce. Certainly the laymen who have responded to the slogan, "The Whole Gospel for the Whole World by the Whole Church," will insist that never again shall the competitive, individualistic policy be reestablished in America. No denomination, after such cooperation as has already been effected, has a right to map out its territory at home or abroad alone. In every community the needs must be ascertained; responsibilities must be delegated; regular consultation and constant cooperation must take the place of independent action.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

I WISH to write you a few lines of grateful appreciation for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, which I have been taking during the past two years. It would seem impossible for me to tell you in a letter how much it means to our family. Others have told you in better form already, but I would like to mention that the advertising has served us as a real guide to buying. In some instances the advertisers have been patronized by mail, in others a personal call was made, all with the very best of satisfaction. We have had so much pleasure from our business relations with these advertisers that I feel like writing you a few words in grateful appreciation. We depend a lot on the national advertised lines also. The hotel guide, in fact the foreign advertisements, have been educational and interesting reading. Words certainly fail me when trying to express proper appreciation for the Monitor, but I shall always feel that it is doing what Mrs. Eddy said it would do, which she stated in these words: "The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind" (Miscellany, page 353). It is with great pleasure that I always pass my copy out, and also that I write these few lines.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JUNE 26, 1920 NUMBER 43

"Radical reliance"

ALDEN F. POTTER

IT is axiomatic that the statements of exact science are invariable, unyielding to opposition, and incapable of being twisted by personal manipulation. No matter what may be said to the contrary, Christian Science is pure and exact Science. It is capable of but one construction, but one result. It is a matter of daily proof that in the practice of genuine Christian Science, thinking is done constantly and eternally in but one way—the way that heals. In no other way can this Science be practiced, because of the fact that its premise is pure harmony, and the result thereof is a like product. In the presence of this scientific, conscious activity, whose Principle is God, nothing but harmonious truth exists as reality.

Every Christian Scientist knows that to justify his thinking he must be conscious that it heals. On no other basis has any individual a real right to think, and certainly every Christian Scientist desires to measure the rectitude and accuracy of his thinking by its power to heal. Scientific thought knows for a certainty that, as Mrs. Eddy has stated in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 71), "evil has no reality. It is neither person, place, nor thing, but is simply a belief, an illusion of material sense."

Between that consciousness of Life that is certain of ever present healing and is aware of its power to be expressed forever, and that sense that is ignorant of Principle and its fixed, eternal harmony, a great gulf exists. Nothing can ever unite or mingle these opposites; neither can ever know that the other exists. Between them there is no compromise; between them no peace can ever be patched up nor any alliance formed.

No student of Christian Science can long imagine that there is any such thing as a compromise ever found in the study or application of this Science. Since its teachings take away from evil all pretensions to personality, place, or power, and proclaim evil's nothingness, how then is it possible to compromise with nothing? A little reflection shows that it is absurd to think that a scientific fact could ever be forced to admit of a compromise. The fact about any given thing is all that really exists about the thing, and this fact admits of the existence of nothing else. No one would ever attempt to introduce a compromise into a statement of mathematics. Its scientific basis precludes the thought of a concession of any kind. In the same way a knowledge of spiritual reality on the part of any student annuls the claim of material sense to act as his mind and allows no compromise with human opinions or evil.

Christian Science may be rightly described as the law of God or Truth. For that law to concede the slightest power to its opposite, an absence of law, or for Truth to compromise, would mean that it gave up a part of itself and accepted something in lieu thereof which was unlike itself. Such reasoning attempts to adulterate and banish Truth, the nature of which could not deviate a hair's breadth from its being and still be Truth. A scientific thinker shuns "timid conservatism," of which Mrs. Eddy writes in Science and Health (p. 167): "There is but one way—namely, God and His idea—which leads to spiritual being. The scientific government of the body must be attained through the divine Mind. It is impossible to gain control over the body in any other way. On this fundamental point, timid conservatism is absolutely inadmissible. Only through radical reliance on Truth can scientific healing power be realized." Surely the antidote for the human consciousness and its fondness for compromise is in this radical reliance on Truth, the Life, Principle, and law of the universe. Mrs. Eddy further states (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 53), "You only weaken your power to heal through Mind, by any compromise with matter; which is virtually acknowledging that under difficulties the former is not equal to the latter."

When one accepts the assumption that matter exists as either person, place, or thing, one is forced to accept all that goes with it. To claim that matter is rejected in one instance and then to accept its pretended realism in another, either as a consideration affecting human policy or as a painful reality, is to accept the compromise whispered by Satan, that one which Jesus denounced in the sixth chapter of Matthew, where he said, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

Mankind has repeated for centuries that God is All and besides Him there is none else. The lips have given abundant acknowledgment of that fact; but the understanding based on Science has been lacking. This understanding knows that the allness of God eliminates even the possibility of anything else existing. To that which understands, it is impossible to think beyond this All, which from its very nature includes all. Every battle between Truth and error is fought in the consciousness of each individual, and nowhere else. It is useless for him to attempt to place the responsibility elsewhere. Mrs. Eddy placed the issue clearly up to each and every student when she stated in her Message for 1901 (p. 20), "The Christian Scientist is alone with his own being and with the reality of things." To pervert this truth is fatal to right practice; to understand it is the kingdom of heaven. In this infinite realm of Mind right now and forever all things exist as the phenomena of Spirit, governed by the only law there is, the law of good. In the universe as it exists in Truth, no compromise can maintain itself and raise its voice in opposition to Truth. Is this not the reason that Jesus announced, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you"? To ask with the same Mind that was and is forever the Christ, admits of no "variableness, neither shadow of turning." To place "radical reliance on Truth" is the need of to-day. Abiding in such a trust develops the activity of natural good and exemplifies the fruits of unity with the one consciousness of life that is founded on the rock of Principle, not on the shifting sands of human opinion or policy.

Correct Reasoning

J. MARGUERITE BROWN

THE question, "How do you know that there is a God?" was put to the writer when she was still a member of a denominational church. She knew these lines from the Bible, "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear," but she could not give a proof of her belief to the doubting one. The minister of the church was asked to hold private classes where all perplexing questions could be studied and answered, but each time his answer was evasive.

A prayer for understanding and guidance was offered to God. Then she recalled having been given a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. It was sought, found, and eagerly read. She knew that she had indeed found the "Key to the Scriptures," and she was content to wait for the unfolding of the answer to her question.

It was soon seen that because the material senses were illusory, God's presence could never be perceived in that way. She saw, just as Elijah had seen, that His presence was not in the wind, earthquake, or fire. His presence was indicated by "a still small voice." Nothing could destroy the true consciousness, of which man is always aware, and even if a man wished to deny this fact he would have to be conscious in order to make the denial. The proof that God exists, Christian Science shows to be as fixed as the knowing that the rules of mathematics exist.

The loving and living of Mind is expressed as infinite idea or man, entirely unlimited by matter and its seeming perplexities. This idea is one with Mind, just as Jesus implied when he said, "I and my Father are one." On page 4 of "Pulpit and Press" Mrs. Eddy says: "Is not a man metaphysically and mathematically number one, a unit, and therefore whole number, governed and protected by his divine Principle, God? You have simply to preserve a scientific, positive sense of unity with your divine source, and daily demonstrate this. Then you will find that one is as important a factor as duodecillions in being and doing right, and thus demonstrating deific Principle."

Right Idea

CLARA D. LONGLEY

EVERY right idea is blessed of God; maintained, supported, governed, controlled by the Mind which created it. No sense of lack can hinder a right idea, no sense of fear can retard it, no self-depreciation can stop it, no evil can rob it of unfoldment. Every right idea unfolds day by day, step by step. Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, says, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 258), "God expresses in man the infinite idea forever developing itself, broadening and rising higher and higher from a boundless basis." It is never separated from its divine Principle, Mind. Mind and idea are one. As Jesus explained it, "I and my Father are one." This "I" which he said was one with the Father is the Christ-idea, or the real nature or life of man.

On page 591 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy gives the following definition: "MAN. The compound idea of infinite Spirit; the spiritual image and likeness of God; the full representation of Mind." This "I," then, which is one with the Father or Mind, is made up of all right ideas, which combine to make the complete man of God's creating. Thus man has a right idea regarding health, home, position, supply, and all things that concern man. These things are the "all that I have is thine." No matter what the right idea concerning man may be, it cannot be discordant in any way or separated from its divine Principle, God, or Mind, which conceived it. All right ideas are conceived of Mind and maintained in perfection eternally.

It is the false human belief about things that concern man that is unstable, discordant, and subject to destruction. Take, for instance, the idea of education. Now education is really man's possession—it belongs to him by divine right; but the human belief about acquiring an education is often beset with many difficulties, such as lack of supply, or of health, or depreciation of one's ability. So many are the obstructions which human belief has placed in the way of those desiring education, a great many do not even try to obtain it. Many try and fail; many more succeed only after a hard struggle. Some acquire it and are never able to use it because the mere getting of it has completely broken their health. But all this discord is apparent only of the false concept of education—the human belief about it and man. Now the true or right idea about education is based on an entirely different mode of thinking. Indeed, it is so different that it is the direct opposite to the false human belief. The right idea in regard to education begins with the knowing that God as Mind is reflected or expressed by man, and right there is man's education already established. The unfoldment of education follows as a natural consequence, for Mind is constant and ceaseless activity unfolding through its idea, man. This is the command to multiply and replenish the earth. This is the divine or Christ-idea in regard to education.

Now Mrs. Eddy's definition of the Christ, on page 583 of Science and Health is this: "CHRIST. The divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error." And in the fourteenth chapter of John we have the statement that the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us. It is quite evident that the incarnate error is the false belief that so hinders mortal man in all his activities, and this is what the revelation of the Christ or right idea has come to destroy. Unless there is some way to bring into human experience this right or Christ-idea regarding education, health, home, supply, activity, it would be of little use to mortals merely as a theory. But Christian Science teaches us this way to destroy the false belief and shows us just how to do it. In other words, we can apply our knowledge of Truth to any human problem, by seeing, in each instance, not the human concept but the right or divine idea involved. When we deny the false human sense its claim to reality, we are just beginning to make our demonstration—just beginning to have dominion in our affairs—and to allow the right idea regarding the situation to appear. We are claiming our unity with harmony, or right activity. If we firmly and persistently maintain true spiritual understanding in accord with Mind's government, this right way of thinking destroys the erroneous belief that has been holding us in discord, and harmonious activity is manifest. In other words, the Christ-idea has destroyed the false belief—the Word has been made flesh for us in demonstration.

There is no human condition, be it ever so discordant, that spiritual understanding will not harmonize. The right idea regarding anything is the truth about it, and this is the only power there really is. When we see that Mind, or God, is the only power, and then recognize that this power is expressed in man as right idea about everything, we begin to have dominion or to use the power of God. No discordant condition can hold us in bondage when we see the right or spiritual idea in place of the false or discordant situation.

Now every right idea is spiritual—otherwise it is not right and really is not at all, for there is no Mind but God, or Spirit, to conceive ideas. Then the question arises, How are we to know right ideas from the false, since the false seem to be so real and ever present? Right here the student of Christian Science must become very humble. He must know that no matter how right an idea or plan may seem to him, that if it is not in accord with the highest good for all, including himself, he does not want it and cannot get it. Because all that can be demonstrated is the way of Principle, there can be no selfishness in this divine way of working; neither can there be any human will, or fear, or pride. If these, or any qualities of human mind hold sway, our problem will not be solved. We learn to accept an idea which looks right to us, in full knowledge that only if it is in accord with Principle can it come to pass. This humble way of working will gradually clear our thought of the human traits of character that blind us to right ideas, and eventually we see more clearly and quickly and are able to recognize and demonstrate the right idea. Thus education, home, position, health, or whatever we may desire is ours now, when seen as right idea. Thus God is seen to be Love, the kind Father-Mother God, who withholds no right idea from man.

On page 565 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "The impersonation of the spiritual idea had a brief history in the earthly life of our Master; but 'of his kingdom there shall be no end,' for Christ, God's idea, will eventually rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science." This is a most comforting and encouraging statement to all those who are honestly trying to follow in the footsteps of the Master. A little farther down the same page in Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "After the stars sang together and all was primeval harmony, the material lie made war upon the spiritual idea; but this only impelled the idea to rise to the zenith of demonstration, destroying sin, sickness, and death, and to be caught up unto God,—to be found in its divine Principle."

Now it may seem a mighty struggle to rid our life of all the false ideas that the human mind has burdened us with; but nevertheless it can be done, and Christian Science is the law or rule that teaches us how the Master did it. "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world," were the encouraging words of the one who reversed every human belief, with the spiritual or right idea.

Small Things

IGERNA B. J. SOLLAS

APPARENT conflict between passages in the Bible is often a stimulus to thought. Seeing that Christian Science is showing the spiritual meaning of the Bible and demands a complete reversal of a material sense of things, it is not surprising that the Bible teems with references to the importance of small things. In Solomon's Song we read, "Take up the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines," a passage which finds a parallel in Science and Health (p. 405), "Choke these errors in their early stages, if you would not cherish an army of conspirators against health, happiness, and success." The writer of Proverbs expresses a similar thought, "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep: so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth; thy want as an armed man," and the same writer notices that "there be four things that are little on the earth, but they are exceeding wise." The voice that followed the whirlwind was a "small" voice, although it was the voice of God, and the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel was "not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit. . . . Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain. . . . For who hath despised the day of small things?"

On the other hand, Martha was rebuked because she was "careful and troubled about many things," evidently small ones, and reminded that but "one thing is needful." She received a rebuke which we should all do well to heed. One who is striving to obey Principle, to reflect the order of divine Mind will never despise small things, but, his thinking being fixed on Principle, he will not lose his sense of proportion, not let his attention to small duties make him forget the large ones. This mistake Martha surely made, for in her anxiety to give her guest material comfort, she let in thoughts of resentment toward her sister, which could contribute to no one's happiness, but would rather counterbalance her well-meant material activities—well-meant but ill-governed; for if they had been governed by Principle she would not have lost sight of Principle nor would she have felt her labor burdensome. As it was with Martha, so it is with the punctilious man; he takes his gaze away from God and allows it to rest too long on small duties, so that they seem to take on an importance of their own, whereas they are really important only as expression of Principle. He cannot see the wood for the trees; he is in a mental state which is easily betrayed so that it will "strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel." He is right in his desire to make his work perfect, even in the minutest details. He is wrong in not perceiving the danger attendant on letting these details engross his thoughts.

Jesus' sayings lay great stress on the importance of the closest possible adherence to Principle, no least deviation being tolerable. He said, "One jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled," and, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." No least reservation must be made, for it spells compromise with material sense, and compromise is the effort to serve two masters, which Jesus said was impossible. The same thought appears again in those stern sayings: "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out . . . for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell," and "He that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much."

The "one thing needful" is that understanding which prompted the admonition which John, the beloved disciple, is said to have repeated so often, "Little children, love one another." It is that understanding which perceives that the little child and those who become like him are the greatest among us, it is that understanding which led Paul to perceive that "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty . . . and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought the things that are." This is the understanding which heals, and one who is healing in the Christ-way, by knowing the unreality of sin, sickness, and death, will not talk of small or big demonstrations, because what is demonstrated is the allness of God,—and that is always a big demonstration whether it is manifested in the healing of a headache or a cancer. Indeed, the healing of a trifling ailment in the right way may be to a student what the lesson of the kettle was to James Watt,—both are warnings not to despise the day of small things, for when a law is at work, it is manifested in the minutest trifles as well as in larger matters, and those with eyes to see can learn just as well from trifles as from events of greater magnitude, provided their gaze is not fixed on the trifles, but on the underlying law. Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 261), "Fixing your gaze on the realities supernal, you will rise to the spiritual consciousness of being, even as the bird which has burst from the egg and preens its wings for a skyward flight." This matter of the occupation of our thoughts is one which Mrs. Eddy constantly urges us to attend to, and in the course of her answer on page 496 of Science and Health to the question on page 495, "How can I progress most rapidly in the understanding of Christian Science?" she says, "Hold perpetually this thought,—that it is the spiritual idea, the Holy Ghost and Christ, which enables you to demonstrate with scientific certainty, the rule of healing, based upon its divine Principle, Love, underlying, overlying, and encompassing all true being."

Equity

FRANK A. UPDEGRAFF

"WITH righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity." So sang the Hebrew bard in the closing sentence of the ninety-eighth psalm, but, asks one, What is equity? In searching for the answer to his own question a student of Christian Science discovered in Young's Concordance to the Bible as many as half a dozen different Hebrew words translated "equity" in the authorized King James Version of the Holy Bible, and while to the Hebrew each of these words may express a slightly different meaning from the others, with one exception their definitions include in various degrees, according to the Concordance, "what is right," "uprightness;" the one exception signifying "straightforwardness." In this connection was recalled the injunction of Christ Jesus to those Jews who marveled at his words when he said, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment."

In the Century Dictionary, equity is defined as follows: First, "That which is equally right or just to all concerned; equal or impartial justice; fairness; impartiality;" second, "In law: Fairness in the adjustment of conflicting interests; the application of the dictates of good conscience to the settlement of controversies." In following the subject further it was found that a court of equity, sometimes referred to as a court of chancery, was the outgrowth of the office of chancellor, who in the beginning was a doorkeeper or usher who stood between the king and the crowds of people who might wish to see him, introducing such persons as were entitled to pass. Later, and naturally, the chancellor became a sort of intermediary who, in England, was in time vested with power as a notary or scribe to the king and as "keeper of the great seal" and custodian of official documents. As his office grew into greater importance he became arbiter or judge between complainants in certain cases which were brought up for judgment before the king, as the highest power in the realm,—especially controversies that did not come under the common law, which was the outgrowth of custom or precedent; or in which the application of the law would work a hardship without justice or result in irreparable injury to any one concerned; or for which there was no adequate remedy at law.

Because of the increasing complexity of society, and also by reason of the tendency of the human mind to adhere to and develop jurisprudence, or the so-called science of law, to the exclusion of righteousness and straightforwardness, justice was to such a degree sacrificed to technicalities in the courts of law that an increasing number of complaints came before the chancellor for settlement, until in time his office developed into a great tribunal, of which one famous jurist has said, "There is not a single department of law which is more completely fenced in by principle—than equity." In fact, equity may well be classified as an attribute of God, the expression of Principle in human affairs—the reign of righteousness.

The prophet Isaiah, looking into the future with a vision beyond the ken of his contemporaries, and seeing the time when the saying that "the king can do no wrong" should be exemplified in Christ Jesus, proclaimed, "A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." As our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, writes on page 565 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "The impersonation of the spiritual idea had a brief history in the earthly life of our Master; but 'of his kingdom there shall be no end,' for Christ, God's idea, will eventually rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science." In the same volume, page 141, she further says: "For this Principle there is no dynasty, no ecclesiastical monopoly. Its only crowned head is immortal sovereignty. Its only priest is the spiritualized man." Nineteen hundred years ago Jesus came preaching that this "kingdom of God is at hand," and he instructed his followers to do likewise. Is it possible that this reign of righteousness has ever departed or its Principle ceased to exist as the I AM? Such a belief is unthinkable. The King can do no wrong, nor can His chancellor, or judge in equity, administer aught but justice, for injustice is no part of his consciousness, nor can he be malpracticed upon or handled by jurisprudence. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" "The heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself."

The Church Triumphant

MINNA J. GENSEKE

JESUS said, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Mrs. Eddy has made beautifully clear in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" that the rock upon which we build our church is the Christ, Truth, the healing Love. What is our concept of a Christian Science church? The question when presented to the thought of one Christian Scientist, brought out clearly the need of much prayerful work. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 583) that Church is "the structure of Truth and Love; whatever rests upon and proceeds from divine Principle;" and she continues, "The Church is that institution, which affords proof of its utility and is found elevating the race, rousing the dormant understanding from material beliefs to the apprehension of spiritual ideas and the demonstration of divine Science, thereby casting out devils, or error, and healing the sick." In the whole definition there is no mention of a material building and no mention of a human person. Do we not, when thinking of church, sometimes think of the material building and certain persons as constituting our church, rather than the reflection of Truth and Love? It was very helpful to the writer when she learned that a Christian Science church was not made up of material persons. The action of a material person can no more destroy or disturb the harmony of a Christian Science church than the action of a material personality can destroy or disturb the reflection of God.

Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 35), "We can unite with this church only as we are newborn of Spirit, as we reach the Life which is Truth and the Truth which is Life by bringing forth the fruits of Love,—casting out error and healing the sick." Then in uniting with this church do we unite our human self or do we unite the newborn spirit of Truth and Love? Only our pure thoughts which are the reflection of God—Life, Truth, and Love—can belong to our church. Then will we understand that our church is not human but divine, that it does rest upon and proceed from divine Principle, God. To exclude any idea of God from our thought of church would be to exclude from our vision the perfect creation of God. What we need to include in our concept of a Christian Science church is not persons but the entire reflection of Truth and Love, and what we need to exclude is not persons but mortal mind, material thinking; then our church will provide no channel through which discord can be manifested. Needless to say, if every member of a Christian Science church thought not materially but always spiritually, there would be no church problems. Thus each one of us should be constantly alert.

Was it not the understanding that every idea of God is the "structure of Truth and Love," that every idea does rest upon and proceed from God, divine Principle, that enabled Jesus instantaneously to heal the sick and purify the sinner? If every member of a Christian Science church would go to service with the clear realization that our church does afford the "proof of its utility," that the words of Truth read from our desks are "rousing the dormant understanding from material beliefs to the apprehension of spiritual ideas and the demonstration of divine Science," those who have come with a belief of sin, sorrow, or sickness would go away healed.

It has been the practice of the writer for several years to study prayerfully, before going to any church service, the definition of Church as given in Science and Health and also the daily prayer in the Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 4), and she has found this of inestimable value in bringing to her a more spiritual concept of church. We need to see that true understanding is spiritual, that our only connection with our church will be "as we reach the Life which is Truth and the Truth which is Life by bringing forth the fruits of Love,—casting out error and healing the sick." When each one has so purified his thinking we shall be able to realize what our Leader says on page 3 of "Pulpit and Press," "No longer are we of the church militant, but of the church triumphant; and with Job of old we exclaim, 'Yet in my flesh shall I see God.'" Shall we not then find within our church harmony, heaven?

The Way, the Truth, the Life

MAUDE M. CLARKE

WHEN for love of God we yearn,
And naught but error can discern,
When in wandering doubt we stray,
We have His word: I am the way.

In the darkness of our night,
When we turn to God for light,
It is then that He reveals
Himself to us—the truth that heals.

Waiting, watching, Love abounds,
Listening for the voice that sounds
Far above earth's mortal strife:
I am thy All-in-all—thy Life.

So we to the Father come,
Praising Him with voice once dumb,
We, His children, softly sing:
'Neath the shadow of His wing.

Selected Articles

["'The simplicity that is in Christ'"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., May 3, 1920]

One of the most inveterate tendencies of the human mind is the tendency to elaboration. The reason is not far to seek. It is the direct result of the fact that, the very essence of this mind being limitation, its idea of growth, whether in wisdom or in substance, is necessarily accumulation. It is impossible to conceive of divine Mind, as God is revealed in Christian Science,—all-presence, all-power, all-knowledge,—as seeking to accumulate anything. Where all things are infinitely available accumulation has no meaning. Jesus the Christ recognized this great fact in its fullness, and this recognition, coupled with the further recognition of man in the image and likeness of God as forever reflecting the activity of God or Principle, enabled him to avail himself, at all times, of Principle's infinite resources. Did he need tribute money? The supply was unlimited. It could be found anywhere, for instance in a fish's mouth. Did he need the wherewithal to feed the multitude? The supply was again equally unlimited and immediately available. Did he need safety in the storm or from the stones of the multitude? Both were equally unable to touch him who understood that he lived and moved and had his being in Principle or the reality of things.

Now the very essence of "the mind of Christ," as Paul calls it, is its simplicity. Jesus, confronted with the problem of paying the tribute money, did not set about thinking where he could raise the money or how he could raise it. Jesus, confronted with the storm on the lake, did not resort to any one of the human expedients which the world would have considered necessary. Jesus, faced with the necessity of providing food in the wilderness for a multitude, never thought of reckoning up with Philip how many pennyworths of bread would be sufficient. Jesus, faced with a sick man, never prescribed a drug or a material remedy. In every case his recourse was the same, and in every case it was instantly successful.

Now how did Christ Jesus do these things, and what was this universal remedy, the application of which he evidently so fully understood? Again it is very simple. Consider these few sayings out of many: "God is a Spirit," or, as the revised version more correctly translates it, "God is Spirit." "I and my Father are one." "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father." "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

The inevitable meaning of all these passages, and many others like them, is found in the simple statements of Christian Science, that God is Spirit, Life, Truth, and Love, Principle, the reality of everything. Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, gives the following metaphysical interpretation: "CHRIST. The divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error" (Science and Health, p. 583). Thus it is seen that Jesus was the master exponent of the Christ; that one of the great facts he revealed was that all men could do the works that he did and even greater, if they recognized, as he did, their unity with Principle; that the fundamental fact underlying these works was that the flesh, the devil or evil was a lie,—that is, an error of statement and belief, without any truth in it, and having no place in Truth; that those who understood these things, and acted accordingly, would find that Principle, to which they appealed, is unlimited; and that any one might study Jesus' life, words, and works, and claim boldly for man, his true self in the likeness of God, all the good, the power, and the overcoming that were the Master's. For the accomplishment of these high purposes, for the solving of all human problems, Christ Jesus had, it would seem, but one method; namely, the daily and hourly recognition of the ever present availability of infinite wisdom, infinite power, infinite supply, all that proceeds from the understanding of infinite Life, Truth, and Love. "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always."

Christian Science, following the Way-shower, emphasizes this simplicity. It says to the world in the words of Jesus to Martha, "But one thing is needful." And again and again it comes with blessed reminder to those who have already caught some glimpse of the Christ in Christian Science, that the moment the shadow of complexity falls upon them, the moment they find themselves caring for many things, seeking to make safeguards, toiling round in a circle, filled with doubt and uncertainty and weighed down with a sense of having much to do, at that moment they have departed from the "simplicity that is in Christ." "All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity." From the standpoint of infinite Principle, and there is no other real standpoint, all nations, all flesh, and all that goes with the flesh—toil, depression, complexity, whether in so-called human affairs or in winning one's way out of materiality through Christian Science, are to be faced and overcome as nothing, because they are not the creations of God. The call and the assurance of Principle are forever the same, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

[James M. Stevens in Montevideo (Minn.) News]

Christian Science is referred to in the report of a sermon in a recent issue, in a way that is misleading to those who are unfamiliar with its teachings. Christian Science is founded entirely upon the Bible, and it teaches nothing for which it has not absolute Scriptural authority. Its teaching concerning sin and evil is correct, as can be proved by any one who will approach the subject with a fair and open mind.

In the Bible there are two distinct accounts of creation. Where, apparently, our critic becomes confused, is that he does not differentiate between the spiritual, real man, the man whom God created in His own image and who cannot therefore have a quality unlike God, and the mortal or carnal man who was created from dust. This mortal or carnal man is of course the man referred to in Romans 3:23, and in I John 1:8, to which our critic refers. These and the hundreds of other similar Scriptural passages, instead of refuting the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy, as set forth in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other works, tend to prove their absolute correctness.

Christian Science stands steadfastly on the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." It maintains on Scriptural authority that God is the only creator and that His creation is eternal. It therefore follows that everything which has a real existence, must have been created by God and be eternal. So if evil is real, it must have been created by God and is unchangeable. Christian Science maintains that God did not create evil and that therefore evil is not a reality; in other words, that it exists wholly as a false belief. It may be a very stubborn belief, but it cannot be a reality, because it is not God-created.

The reason that sinners seek Christian Science is not that it caters to the desires of sinful man, but that it teaches sinful man how he may be redeemed from his sin and enter into his God-given heritage. On the other hand, the mortal who wishes to remain a sinner, can get no satisfaction from the Christian Science teaching of the unreality of sin, for Christian Science teaches that the sinner, in order to profit by the fact that sin and evil are unreal, must demonstrate their unreality in his own life. In other words, he must put off his sinful way of thinking and living, and bring his every thought and act into accord with the teachings of the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount.

Nothing is really understood until it can be proved. The Bible is no exception. When one understands its spiritual import, he can prove its teachings. Jesus said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," and he reformed the sinner and healed the sick.

Mrs. Eddy was a close and consecrated student of the Bible, and she proved her understanding by healing sickness and sin. Many thousands of conscientious persons who have followed her teachings, have become earnest students of the Bible, have proved their understanding, and can bear witness that Mrs. Eddy's teachings are not fallacious, but that they are the truth concerning God and man.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Occult Review, London, England]

I am glad to answer the question of a critic, appearing in a recent issue, namely, Why is it that the adverse critics of Christian Science have always a false concept of it?

Christian Science is founded on divine Principle. Its rules are as exact as mathematical rules. It is, therefore, demonstrable. There are millions proving the truth of Christian Science daily all over the world. Not one of the critics can prove it. Few of them will even try, but those who have honestly done so, have gained such good results that they have ceased to be critics and have acknowledged that they had been mistaken in their first estimate of it.

All that one will ever know of Christian Science must come through spiritual discernment. At first this is very slight, but as one studies the subject, it grows, and will continue to do so until one awakes to full spiritual discernment of the allness of God, Spirit, and the spiritual nature of man and the universe.

[Harry K. Filler in Marietta (Ohio) Times]

A clergyman in a recent issue of the Times is quoted as stating that Christian Scientists "believe that God is love," and takes issue with that teaching on the ground that it is "a denial of the fundamental principle of the Scriptures." This is rather an unfortunate statement by this critic, in view of what John, the beloved disciple, in I John iv:16 states. There we read, "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

Henry Drummond in his lecture "The Greatest Thing in the World" says: "Eternal life also is to know God, and God is love. This is Christ's own definition. Ponder it. 'This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.' Love must be eternal. It is what God is." And further on he adds: "To be saved is to love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth already in God. For God is Love."

In Christian Science we know that "God is Love," because we are able to prove that He is. The Christian Science teachings on all subjects are the Bible teachings on these same subjects, for in no way does Christian Science depart from the teachings of the prophets, of Jesus the Christ, or of his disciples. Christian Science does not "deny that Jesus is the Son of God," does not "deny the resurrection" nor "the meaning of the crucifixion" as this critic would have your readers believe. Christian Scientists adore Jesus the Christ, and follow him by doing the works he promised his followers should do as no other band of Christians adore and follow him.

One of the religious tenets of Christian Science, found in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 497, is, "We acknowledge that the crucifixion of Jesus and his resurrection served to uplift faith to understand eternal Life, even the allness of Soul, Spirit, and the nothingness of matter." Christian Science is the reinstatement of primitive Christianity. It casts out sin and disease by Jesus' method of healing. Only the destruction of these errors in human consciousness proves their unreality.

It may be stated in this connection that as Christian Science is a demonstrable religion, only those who have gained a working understanding of it are in a position to speak knowingly of its teachings. The Bible and the various writings of Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, are the only textbooks on this subject. No one can ever hope to learn the facts regarding this religion from the sermons and writings of its critics.

Christian Scientists will rejoice with this clergyman in whatever good he may be able to accomplish. What they fail to see is how any good is to be accomplished by using a sermon on the subject "Our Father" as an occasion to make false statements about another great religious movement and its teachings before an audience where there are sure to be those who know, as he speaks, that Christian Science is not being fairly or truthfully presented by the speaker.

[John M. Dean in The Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel]

The Sentinel in a recent issue contains a synopsis of a sermon by a minister who evidently has a misconception of Christian Science.

Christian Scientists yield to no body of believers in their love for and faith in the Bible. When speaking of her great discovery Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 110), "In following the leadings of scientific revelation, the Bible was my only textbook." In giving this discovery to the world, she therefore merely set forth the conclusions which she gained through her study and demonstration of the deep spiritual meaning of Scripture, and this was done through the medium of her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." That this work is indeed a key to the Scriptures is proved by the experience of unnumbered Christians to whom the Bible was formerly a sealed book. To these people the Bible is now a vital, living force, and not merely a musty chronicle of a dead past. They incorporate it into their lives and daily demonstrate its teachings in the degree of their understanding.

Nowhere does Mrs. Eddy deny the relative existence of sin as a mortal belief, but she does consistently denounce it as unreal from the standpoint of the absolute. In Genesis we are told that God's work was "finished" and that He pronounced it "very good." Could a finished work which was very good degenerate into that which is classified as very bad? Evil, like darkness and ignorance, is negative in its nature. Just as light dispels darkness, and education destroys ignorance, so a right understanding of God completely eradicates sin and its resultant discords. In neither case does the negative condition assume some other form or go to some other place. It simply disappears and is thus proved to be a nonentity. Sin is terribly real to the sinner because sin and the sinner are on the same plane, but in proportion as the sinner rises above sin does he see its illusory nature and prove its powerlessness and nothingness.

Christian Science has no fight with the churches. Its only fight is with evil of every name and nature. In opposing evil, Christian Scientists do not need to tear down other religions. Truth never requires violent means for its propagation, and when a man resorts to such methods he merely betrays his own weakness or the weakness of his cause. The establishment of right always insures the displacement of wrong. All that is good in every teaching will stand forever, while all that is bad will fall of its own weight. Is not this sufficient?

[A. O. Freel in Oregonian, Portland, Ore.]

Because the methods employed by Christian Science in healing the sick do not happen to agree with the preconceived opinion of a judge in a police court about how the sick should be treated, is small reason for his accusing the Christian Science practitioner and the parents of a deceased boy of criminal neglect in the care and treatment of the boy, who is said to have died of influenza. The judge in dismissing the case is reported to have said that, in his opinion, the boy would not have died if he had received reasonable medical treatment.

In making this statement the judge is assuming an unenviable responsibility. Especially is this true as no evidence was introduced to show neglect in the care of the boy. Such a conclusion in this event could be arrived at only on the assumption that under "reasonable medical treatment" all similar cases of influenza recover. But such is not the case. Within a period of little more than a year, more than two thousand cases have proved fatal under medical treatment in Oregon.

In fact Christian Science treatment has proved itself to be many times more successful than has medical treatment in the healing of influenza wherever statistics have been gathered. As a fair example of the relative value of Christian Science treatment in healing influenza, the statistics from California are as follows:

In that state during the months from October, 1918, to March, 1919, inclusive, Christian Science practitioners treated 23,418 cases of influenza and pneumonia. Of this number 66 cases proved fatal, or about two and four-fifths fatal cases for each thousand cases reported. During the same period the figures compiled by the state board of health covering 305,856 cases show that of this number 20,904 were fatal. This shows a mortality of sixty-eight per thousand of all cases reported. In other words, Christian Science treatment in California proved itself to be about twenty-four times as successful as medical treatment in healing influenza and pneumonia during the epidemic last year.

The great Teacher applied the practice of Christianity to physical healing; so did Peter, Paul, and others, and the results which were accomplished in the first centuries are again being shown in the twentieth century, for "the Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea," wrote the psalmist. On page 463 of her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy has written, "There is a law of God applicable to healing, and it is a spiritual law instead of material."

Malpractice

The one thing above all others for anybody to know about malpractice is that it is a lie. Having grasped the full significance of this, however, the next important thing to remember is that, in a realm of suppositional consciousness, such as that of the human mind, a lie claims to deceive, and to bring about, through its deceptions, all the ills attributable to evil. This being so, the work of the student of Christian Science is, first, to master divine metaphysics with a completeness which is proof against every argument of reality which evil can advance, and, second, to protect himself so thoroughly against the suggestions of evil as to make it impossible for them to impose upon him for one moment.

Now, in the study of Christian metaphysics, there is one thing carefully to be maintained, and that is what is known as an open mind. When Cowper wrote, "God moves in a mysterious way," he was merely giving expression to the groping of humanity for something it does not understand. Intuitively mankind feels Truth to be omnipotent, but the lusts of the flesh, education, and the suggestions of evil generally, so becloud this intuition that Truth appears an almost impalpable mystery. By declining to close its ears to a Science which, in its contradictions of the schools, seems positively unscientific, and to a gospel which, in its adherence to the Bible, challenges orthodoxy, the student pierces the mystery, and finds the rock of demonstrable Principle; and, standing on this rock, is secure against the flood of malice and the rain of suggestion which the great red dragon, conscious evil, is forever pouring out of his mouth. "This dragon," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 563 of Science and Health, "stands for the sum total of human error."

Human error is, of course, made up of varying degrees of suggestion. The suggestion that there is life in matter is one thing; the suggestion that an individual can be deprived of his normal will power, and made involuntarily to sin is quite another thing. The first is the uneducated belief of the animal; the second is the criminal effort of the malpractitioner to gratify his hatred, passion, or revenge, or to do evil for evil's sake. The first suggestion carries the individual through the whole gamut of the pleasures and pains of the senses, and ends inevitably in death; the second is the work of a moral desperado, and whatever effects it may have must recoil most terribly upon himself. On page 564 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy makes this hideous fact plain: "This malicious animal instinct, of which the dragon is the type, incites mortals to kill morally and physically even their fellow-mortals, and worse still, to charge the innocent with the crime. This last infirmity of sin will sink its perpetrator into a night without a star."

The accusations brought by the high priests against Jesus were accusations of such a nature. They began with the comparatively mild lies, generated by the Pharisees, to the effect that he was a wine-bibber and a glutton, and were accentuated in what his accusers knew, in the conditions of the day, must be this murderous insinuation that he was endeavoring to set himself up as a usurper of the autocratic power of the Emperor in Rome. These accusers, therefore, cowed all opposition to their charges with the infamous suggestion, aimed at the weakness of human nature, that any one who denied or questioned the validity of their charges was the enemy of the Emperor, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend." In such circumstances it was useless for a weak politician, like Pilate, to declare, "I find no fault in him." He felt his arguments for justice petering out in his fear of losing Cæsar's favor, and he succumbed. As for the mob which had a few hours before strewn palm branches in the road, as they cried "Hosanna!" it swayed helplessly after its leaders, as mobs always do.

Nor have the mental manipulators of later days behaved very differently. They have striven to explain away Jesus' demonstrations as an educated knowledge of the forces of suggestion. They have impregnated uncanonical gospels with stories of his power to kill, exercised as a child; and have explained how this power was first generated by his parents' residence amongst the sorcerers and necromancers of Egypt, and later by some unrecorded period of study, on his own part, under the tutelage of the esoteric magicians of India. "The determination to hold Spirit in the grasp of matter is the persecutor of Truth and Love," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 28 of Science and Health.

This effort of malicious animal magnetism to silence Christ Jesus and to obliterate his teaching, culminated in the hour of the crucifixion, when, amidst the crashing of thunder, his victory over it was proclaimed in the three words, "It is finished." This, of course, did not mean that the belief of malpractice had been blotted out of the human mind, but it did mean that the unreality of evil and matter had been demonstrated in a way which could never be reversed, and the mastery over them placed in the hands of every one who would consent to walk in the footsteps of the Christ, and to let that Mind be in him "which was also in Christ Jesus." That Jesus did overcome, and overcome completely, suggestion in the most malicious and aggressive form the human mind was capable of conceiving it, ought to be of the greatest encouragement to his followers. It is perfectly true that he had attained to a greater spirituality than has ever been attained in this world, and that his conquest of evil was the more complete for this reason. Nevertheless his struggle with, and defeat of, evil proves the powerlessness of evil when faced by Truth, and shows how impossible it is for any person who is really striving to walk in the footsteps of the Christ, to be overwhelmed by malpractice, since no individual's grasp of Truth is capable of rousing an attack which it is beyond his own understanding of Principle to destroy.

The weakness of the individual in his struggle with evil lies in his own dread of evil, that is to say, in his own belief in the reality of matter and power of evil, since his fear of these things is necessarily precisely commensurate with his belief in them. Paul put this very clearly when he declared that the strength of sin was the law; in other words, that the law which the human mind itself made of the reality and power of sin was necessarily the very thing which gave sin its power over the individual. Sin and matter are both unreal, and consequently have no power. Their supposititious power lies in the fact that the human mind creates for itself a law of their power, and then insists that the individual is subject to that law. If the individual really knew that sin was outside law, which is the activity of Principle, then the law of sin would be impotent to affect him, because he would not believe it was law. It is precisely the same with the supposititious belief in malpractice. The individual acknowledges malpractice, builds up a law of malpractice, and then subjects himself, through his own fear, to that law. If he really understood that there was no law but the activity of Principle, the efforts of the malpractitioner would be entirely lost, as they are lost upon every person who does know that there is no law but that of Principle. The real sufferer in this case, the ultimate sufferer in every case, is the malpractitioner, who himself appeals to the law of evil, and in appealing to it must come under that law.

The real fact is that there never was and never will be a malpractitioner. There is and can be, in reality, nothing but the image and likeness of God. As long as the individual recognizes this, he is absolutely protected against the malpractitioner and his malpractice. This does not mean that there may not be people malpracticing on their neighbors. But the accusation that they are doing so, if you are mistaken, recoils in making you guilty of malpractice yourself, and malpractice in one of the worst forms; and, at the same time, in making malpractice real to yourself, to the extent of proclaiming that there is an individual sufficiently informed of the supposititious law of evil to be able to exert that law against Principle. It would be just as hopeless to attempt to heal sickness while insisting that you had a sick patient, as it would be to attempt to escape malpractice whilst insisting that there was a malpractitioner. Paul put the whole matter quite clearly when, after enumerating the fruits of the Spirit, he declared, "against such there is no law," for these fruits of the Spirit are law itself.

FREDERICK DIXON.

Indifference

IT is only the belief in matter that would claim to be indifferent to the advantage of spirituality. Since this belief, in all its phases, is conceived of in a merely suppositious mortal mind, it has no real power to be or to continue. Any sense that matter is pleasant or inevitable is sheer illusion. Now illusion, of course, having no ability to do anything, has no power to ignore what is essential. All that is possible for nothingness is to be proved nothing by the truth. In this process, nothing is destroyed, but the fact of Spirit is demonstrated as the reality. Belief that one does not know or want the truth has no chance to avoid actually ever present Principle. Ignorance can never hide itself, but is forever nullified by genuine understanding. The very supposition that there is a carnal mind, which could believe in matter, has to be superseded once and for all by the divine Mind and its whole expression.

This divine Mind, or Principle, is inexorable in its requirement of right action, for it is the only source of true and permanent activity. In the entire scheme of this one perfect Principle there is no room for matter or belief in matter, for human indifference or for refusal to accept the allness which is forever all there is. Though these are rather bare statements of fact, they can easily be proved. There is nothing merely dogmatic about them. To show the nonentity of any negative attitude, it is necessary simply to demonstrate that the all-inclusive truth of Spirit and its spiritual manifestation is established. By positive and exact reasoning in accord with the one Principle, which alone is Love, one can always eliminate what has never been anything but a supposed negation.

That there is the absolute Principle of true living, the very fact of living itself proves. Without true Life and its expression, there could not even seem to be any form of existence whatever. The counterfeit, no matter how seemingly insistent, cannot really fool any one into denying the genuine. There has to be the true for the false to claim to imitate. Even one who supposes himself indifferent to living succeeds only, in the last analysis, in being indifferent to what he considers a sham and a delusion rather than to the spiritual actuality. There is no getting away from spiritual Life as the one source of complete satisfaction. Sooner or later, therefore, each one, glad to have turned away from falsity, must turn to what is really spiritual, and find the entirely accurate and undeniable explanation of what Life is. Any sense of delay, doubt, or reluctance of any sort, has to vanish before the provable desirability of spiritual good. The one infinite Life includes all happy activity and endures despite any seeming.

Any one can readily satisfy himself as to the practical application of Christian Science. He must simply press forward eagerly, use persistently and consistently what he learns of Principle through sincere study, and be determined to demonstrate for himself the whole truth. As he does so, a calm enthusiasm unfolds. Even seeming mistakes or temporary slips disappear, together with other false beliefs, whether supposedly physical or otherwise. Never for a moment can there be any standing still. Each day the earnest seeker is entitled not only to the inspiration of yesterday but also to the apparent newness of infinity to-day, until every phase of former human complacency gives place to true living in accord with Principle. Indeed, even then the only settling down must be a settling down to steadily broadening work and not to inertia. Every sort of old prejudice or error has to be eradicated through patient and consecrated endeavor. In the proving of spirituality, however, right action is its own reward and the sole joy. Indifference, being negative, is never happiness. Only positive surety of the divine Mind as governing the boundless variety of its spiritual expression is thoroughly good. In proportion as one is actually delighting in what the divine Mind knows, one is experiencing all the good there ever could be,—health, holiness, and prosperity; as we read in Joshua, "Turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest."

Of course, once indifference is replaced with receptivity, one finds that, desiring Christian Science, he necessarily desires it all. To take advantage of all of Christian Science is to use it in every detail of daily living. Whatever Mrs. Eddy has provided for our advancement must be permanent and indestructible. Any form of indifference is a supposition of destruction which is overcome through constant, constructive action. Christian Science cannot be partly good and partly bad. Hence there is no part of it or its activity which can be rightly ignored or cast aside, even for the time being. Its availability is whole. Each one must eagerly for himself make use of the wholeness of good. There is no one who cannot profit by understanding how to express divine intelligence throughout the eternity of God's now. As any so-called passive interest or negligence disappears before thorough endeavor, one proves for himself that Principle is ever satisfactory. Mrs. Eddy sums up the true spiritual satisfaction in her poem "Satisfied," at the end of which she writes (Poems, p. 79):—

> The centuries break, the earth-bound wake,
> God's glorified!
> Who doth His will—His likeness still—
> Is satisfied.

This sureness comes through the displacement of any form of indifference, no matter how seemingly subtle, by exact reliance on the one divine Mind in all circumstances. As Mrs. Eddy says on pages 253 and 254 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," "Dare to be faithful to God and man. Let the creature become one with his creator, and mysticism departs, heaven opens, right reigns, and you have begun to be a Christian Scientist."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

SEWAREN, N. J.—A simple but impressive ceremony took place at Sewaren early this morning [April 27] when the corner stone was laid for the new Christian Science church now under construction at the corner of West Avenue and Marsh Street. The contract was let some time last fall, but the severe winter prevented work being started until about a week ago. It is of interest to note that the entire funds necessary for the construction of this building were raised before the ground was broken.—Perth Amboy News.

The Lectures

HASTINGS, MICH. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Ermina Pelham, who said in part:—

The world to-day is in the midst of turmoil, strife, and upheaval. Peoples of all races and classes are striving and clamoring for that which will give them surcease of their troubles, and so as never before men are turning to God for help, demanding a more practical religion and a better understanding of the true God and man's relation to Him. Time-honored systems and dogmas, which have been thought for centuries as all-sufficient, are being weighed in the scale of usefulness and are found wanting. They are being cast out, because they do not bring happiness and contentment to the people.

Christian Science has come to establish the forever fact that true religion must of necessity be as demonstrable as mathematics and music. If a man's relation to his Maker were a mere matter of chance, the world would be drifting through the mazes of materialism, having no guide.

Christian Science is the divine Comforter which has come to this age to give us a scientific remedy for these conditions and to show us how to awake from materialism and how earnestly to seek and follow Jesus, the master Christian. It gives "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." It penetrates the darkest corners of human consciousness, giving indestructible good and taking away the illusions of evil. It embraces the whole world in unity of thought by demonstrating the spiritual law of Love, thus making us all brethren with one Father-Mother God.

COLUMBUS, GA. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by F. A. Jones, who said in part:—

Christ Jesus gave to the world a practical way of salvation. He indeed was the Way-shower, and he said, "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." He proved conclusively that rituals, creeds, and dogmas avail nothing, that the only way to life eternal was by proving God's omnipotence and omnipresence. He did not teach that the many mighty works which he did were miraculous or supernatural. He said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." For many years after the crucifixion and ascension his followers continued to prove their faith by their works, and it was not until doubt and fear and false doctrines supplanted the Christ way that the healing power was apparently lost. God came to be looked upon as a great supernatural Being, sending good or evil at His will, and was and still is to some extent held responsible for sorrow, suffering, and even death, although His son destroyed these same conditions and showed that they were not from the Father, but rather the result of evil or wrong thinking.

EVANSTON, ILL. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Chancellor L. Jenks, who said in part:—

Deep-rooted in the convictions of men is the belief in the existence of a loving God, who desires naught but happiness for His creatures, and who has infinite power and wisdom to make His desires effective. But darkening this belief is the disturbing mystery of evil. We feel instinctively that sin, sorrow, suffering, and death are out of place in a universe governed by all-wise, all-powerful Love. Clinging desperately to our concept of a loving God, we are driven to vague and unsatisfactory justifications of evil as being necessary, in some inscrutable way, in God's beneficent plan. In time, this inconsistency makes shipwreck of our faith, or we turn our backs upon the problem as unsolvable.

How simply, logically, and reverently comes the message of Christian Science! Ascribing all to God, it leaves His glory undiminished. It boldly strikes at the reality of everything inconsistent with divine Love. It reveals the fact that the only reality of sin, sickness, and death lies in our false beliefs. It declares that here and now we can correct our false beliefs, free ourselves from their bondage, and, in the measure of our understanding, enter into the experience of an increasingly harmonious life.

This is not transcendentalism. Thousands of transformed men and women have proved this great truth. It is the greatest truth within the apprehension of men. It comes nearer to every one of us than any other fact in the providence of God. It is the basic truth of Christian Science. It came in the form of inspiration to Mary Baker Eddy. It is the theme of her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," now in the hands of grateful multitudes.

CLEVELAND, OHIO (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Salem A. Hart, Jr., who said in part:—

In this age of confusion in our economic life and with a world torn with doubt, fear, political and social unrest, mankind is awakening to the fact that if we are to rise above these present day problems successfully, it must be done through reliance and dependence upon a higher wisdom, a higher knowledge and understanding of divine Love: and so there comes to the human consciousness a desire and longing for truth and spiritual enlightenment. Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and it is to know more of this truth as revealed through Christian Science that we have gathered here.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by David J. Klyce, who said in part:—

If you wish to discover the cause of a people's real greatness, or lack of it, you will find it in their understanding of the God they worship. Abraham got a vision of the Christ, and it gave him health, peace, and prosperity. His great-grandchildren and their families, seventy persons, went into Egypt, and when the Lord led them out by the hand of Moses, they numbered six hundred thousand men. These, with their families, would be about three million persons, or about the population of California, and we read in the Bible that "there was not one feeble person among their tribes" and that they had plenty of cattle, of silver, and of gold.

What a paradise California would really be if among her three million people there were not one feeble person, and if every one were prosperous and happy. This will be true when all have a demonstrable understanding of God, Spirit, as divine Principle, and spiritual man in His image and likeness.

CORSICANA, TEXAS (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Miss Annie Wood, who said in part:—

There have been times in the world's history when it seemed everything was steeped in darkness and materiality; yet at that very time and always there has been shining through the life of some deeply religious leader or teacher that light which "cannot be hid." Few among these, perhaps, have left a greater impress than John Wesley. As a member of the Methodist Church I felt no interest whatever in Mr. Wesley, its founder, but through the teachings of Christian Science I have been healed of this ingratitude and have come to have the deepest appreciation of this great and good man, well realizing now the scorn and hardships that were his as he endeavored to lift mankind to a higher plane of thinking and to prove again in the world that it is God "who healeth all thy diseases," and that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick;" for Mr. Wesley was a great believer in healing through prayer, and was often successful; yet failures were dishearteningly frequent, and he wondered why, no doubt blaming himself for lack of spiritual fervor and believing that he was losing his power to plead at the throne of grace.

No one has ever been able to give any good thing to the world so long as he believed it to have come of chance, just to have happened, or to be the result of his own effort; for there is no least thing in all the universe that has not a law underlying it. Certainly healing the sick, this great blessing to mankind, is not left to uncertainty or human beliefs, but is founded upon Principle, Truth, spiritual law. This, the greatest discovery that has ever come to the world, was undreamed of by all who ever went before, and remained to be made by a woman, Mrs. Eddy, through Christian Science.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by John Sparrow, who said in part:—

The old proverb says, "Home is where the heart is." To the little child, home is where father and mother are, be that in a tent, a cottage, or a palace. Christian Scientists are learning that home is where God is and, as God is everywhere, it is impossible for us to be anywhere but in our Father's house.

RIDGEWOOD, N. J. (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Stella T. Hiler, who said in part:—

Luke tells us that while the shepherds were "keeping watch over their flock by night," the angel of the Lord said unto them, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Then Luke says, "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

This is the key to the perfect government. That message is still echoing in the consciousness of men and trying to find expression now in better governments. When the people, as individuals, learn self-government, observe the Golden Rule, have that Mind in them which was in Christ Jesus, then will the prophecy of the heavenly host be fulfilled, "on earth peace, good will toward men."

John tells us that this wonderful Prince of Peace whom we call Jesus the Christ, said to his disciples, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." It will be through following in the footsteps and the teachings of this great Way-shower that we shall be able to demonstrate harmony, health, and on earth peace and good will to all men. This is Christian Science.

MIDDLETOWN, OHIO (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by William E. McLaughlin, who said in part:—

Christ Jesus, the great Teacher and Way-shower for all mankind, proved his teachings true and practical by his many wonderful works, healing sin and sickness and raising the dead. He overcame all manner of discord. Christian Scientists in so far as they understand and obey his teachings, are able to overcome all discordant conditions.

CHICAGO, ILL. (joint lecture).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by George E. Fuller, who said in part:—

The life of Jesus the Christ when viewed in the light of Christian Science, is a deep and practical inspiration for ambitious men and women of to-day. Jesus was of humble origin, a carpenter, but at the age of thirty-three he had become the most successful man of all time. As a physician, he never lost a case; as a preacher, he converted multitudes, and won their love and confidence; his understanding of law was profound—he put to silence the lawyers of his day; he is known as the great Teacher—and his teachings have survived the competition of two thousand years, and are still the beacon light of all Christendom.

Do you know of any other earthly personality who combined such phenomenal success? The inspiration of Jesus' success for you and me is found in the prophetic statement he made regarding his followers: "The works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." In all Jesus' works he was about his Father's business, the greatest business in the world, the only business really worth while—according to the teachings of Christian Science, the great business of proving what the understanding of God in its infinite meanings brings to man. Christian Science is again demonstrating the divine Principle upon which Jesus' success was based.

Testimonies of Healing

I would like to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. Six years ago Christian Science found me suffering from an illness which had lasted about ten years, during which time I went to many physicians without receiving any encouragement. They finally told my mother that I would live but a short time and that she had better send me to the country. I decided to come to this town. For two or three weeks I did not care whether I lived or not. One day a gentleman came to me and said, "Why don't you try Christian Science?" I replied, "What shall I do?" He lent me a copy of Science and Health and from the hour I began to read it I commenced to improve. The following Wednesday I attended my first Christian Science service, and after coming out I thought I would collapse, but I held on to what I had read and when I arrived home I decided to destroy my medicine, and have not taken any since.

I have since been healed of the tobacco habit, the use of profanity, and my other bad habits, as well as sick beliefs. I am most grateful for two things. One is the removal of ill feeling toward Mrs. Eddy, which I now know was without foundation; the other is for the spiritual uplift that has come to me. I sincerely trust that this testimony will bring a blessing to some one who is struggling under seeming heavy burdens.—J. F. Danker, Buzzards Bay, Mass.

I wish to testify to the good I have received since coming into Christian Science. I came into Science four years ago through the healing of insanity. The doctors said they could do nothing for me. We had been interested in Science but like lots of others thought it could not help me. When I got to the place where my husband saw there was no help for me through the doctors he again sought Christian Science. My healing was slow but when it did come I surely felt I was healed. My husband then told me that I was healed through Christian Science, and when he brought me the Christian Science textbook and I read it I knew that it was indeed the truth, for which I am more grateful than I can say, and feel as though Christian Science had raised me from the dead. For this healing and the many, many blessings that have come to us during these four years we have been in Science I am more than grateful. I know if we will seek the truth faithfully it will meet our every need.

(Mrs.) Florence Fast, Denver, Colo.

Six years have passed since my first healing in Christian Science, and out of a grateful heart I give this testimony, hoping it may help some one as I have so often been helped by reading the testimonies in the Sentinel and Journal. I took up Christian Science for physical help, not knowing it was the religion Jesus taught; in fact, I knew little about it, only that it healed physical discord, without the aid of drugs. I had several healings, simply by reading Science and Health, understanding little of what I read, only that it was beautiful. Headaches and bowel trouble from which I had suffered for years, and which were becoming worse all the time, with only temporary relief from medicine and other treatments, disappeared almost instantly, never to return. But the most beautiful to me is the spiritualization of thought, knowing God as Love, and as ever present, and that He does not afflict His children, but is ever guiding and leading them in the path of righteousness.

Through the study of Christian Science the Bible has become an open book and I enjoy reading it, and in a measure realize the promises therein are for me, and can be demonstrated, and have learned it is God who healeth all our diseases. Last winter I was healed of influenza in a very short time, the practitioner calling but once, then giving absent treatment. I am thankful to the dear friends who have so patiently and lovingly helped me find the way, also for the authorized Christian Science literature. The Lesson-Sermon is food for thought, and I wonder how I lived so long without it. I thank God each day, and the noble woman whom He called to show us the way. This had been my prayer for years, "O God, show me the way," and Christian Science was the answer.

(Mrs.) Emily C. Dale, Lansing, Mich.

I want to give this testimony in great gratitude to God and to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for what the study of Christian Science has given me—a better understanding of the Bible. No one ever needed Christian Science more than I did. It found me with many troubles and difficulties, not knowing which way to turn. From the first reading of Science and Health I felt I had found the truth and was anxious to prove it. I have been healed of the desire for alcohol and of bad attacks of bronchitis followed by a hard cough which lasted for weeks at a time, and the last attack for months. A friend, a member of our church, said to me, Why do you have that cough? God didn't give it to you. I had not seen it in that light before. I had had such beautiful proofs of the power of truth over error that perhaps I had not been grateful enough for them; instead I felt discouraged. Then remembering my many blessings and repeating the third verse of our dear Leader's hymn, "Mother's Evening Prayer," (Poems, p. 4):—

O make me glad for every scalding tear,
For hope deferred, ingratitude, disdain!
Wait, and love more for every hate, and fear
No ill,—since God is good, and loss is gain, with scalding tears I worked into the morning hours, which brought me joy and peace. So deep was I in the study of God's word that I do not remember when my need was met. We read in Ecclesiastes 3:14, "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him." I would like to thank all who contribute to the Journal, Sentinel, Quarterly, and Monitor. They have all been of great help to me, and whenever I am in doubt I know I can get my answer from the Bible and Science and Health. I must also thank the loving, patient practitioner who has helped me from time to time. My sincere desire is that I may so understand and reflect God as to be a help to others. —(Mrs.) Clara J. Burnham, Salcombe, South Devon, England.

After long silence and with a deep sense of gratitude I feel impelled to give testimony of the beautiful blessings I have received through Christian Science. In October, 1917, I became ill with an abdominal trouble and consulted a physician, but became worse from day to day. After five weeks bladder trouble appeared, and I was obliged to lie abed, as I suffered intense pain. Upon persuasion of my wife I turned to a Christian Science practitioner, who lovingly accepted my case, and improvement commenced. Suddenly there was a standstill, and upon recommendation of the practitioner I consulted another one, who immediately accepted me. After long and laborious work the bladder trouble vanished. Another standstill took place, however, and rheumatism and deafness manifested themselves, causing me to become desperate. My practitioner advised me to consult still another practitioner, who kindly accepted me. After long treatment I improved so that I was able to get up. This gentleman then moved, and for this reason I sought a practitioner in Der Herold. This practitioner agreed to treat me. With love and reverence I think of the great sacrifice that was made. I improved visibly, the rheumatism and internal pains are gone, and my hearing was again restored.

I was also a heavy drinker; this caused me to be violent and rough to my family and working colleagues frequently. I have now become an entirely different person. Through the illness I lost my position and had no prospects of securing another. Thereupon the practitioner explained that God supplies all His children's needs, and that I should thank our heavenly Father for the blessings received up to this time. After twelve weeks I received a position, and a better one I could not wish for. With an entirely different viewpoint and joy I perform my work. My wife has also been healed of various ills through Christian Science.

We are heartily thankful to God for His loving guidance, and think with love of our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the heritage left us in Science and Health.—MARTIN HELMANZIK, Berlin-Charlottenburg, Germany.

I did not come into Christian Science for physical healing because I did not believe that was possible, but I read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, to be informed on the subject, and soon realized I had found the truth. Life was certainly not worth living before learning of this truth. Discouragement, despondency, and headaches comprised the greater part of my life, and there was little room for happiness. I was seldom free from headaches, although having glasses fitted quite regularly with very little relief, and I was getting into the habit of using headache powders and pills almost continually. I could not think clearly; but I then believed I thought with the gray matter in my head. I have learned in Christian Science that there is one Mind, God, and man is His reflection, and that matter called brain has no more intelligence than matter in any other form. I had given up hope of ever understanding the Bible and came to regard church as a place to go when one felt good; but often I could not go because I was too sick. Now I go when I feel sick, and very often find healing there—always if I am receptive to the healing truth. I seldom feel sick now, however, as Christian Science is a wonderful preventive.

A few weeks after reading Science and Health I was able to take off glasses, which I had worn for almost ten years, and have never had them on since, which has been about six and one-half years. Headaches became less frequent and the craving for strong pills disappeared. These are all cause for gratitude, but are insignificant compared to the changed thought and outlook upon life. Resentment finds no place when one realizes that God's ideas dwell in perfect harmony and cannot give or take offense.

On page 588 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy gives the following definition of hell: "Mortal belief; error; lust; remorse; hatred; revenge; sin; sickness; death; suffering and self-destruction; self-imposed agony; effects of sin; that which 'worketh abomination or maketh a lie;'" while heaven she defines thus (p. 587): "Harmony; the reign of Spirit; government by divine Principle; spirituality; bliss; the atmosphere of Soul." They are not places for future habitation, but present states of consciousness. When I read Mrs. Eddy's explanation of God, and man's relation to God, I was overwhelmed with gratitude for this reasonable, and the only logical, explanation I had ever heard. I am also very grateful for the privilege of class instruction, as it has helped me to realize more clearly the fundamental truths of Christian Science.

As the year draws to its close I feel that another one cannot commence without an acknowledgment of the great benefits I have received through Christian Science. Eight years ago, we heard of Christian Science through friends, and I attended a service with a sister in a church in London, England. Later I read the literature whenever I had an opportunity, but did not attempt any demonstration. I believed in it, but could not grasp the actual meaning of working it out for one's self.

I never had much faith in medicine, after having been a dispenser of drugs and seeing so many people return again and again and not get any better. Five years ago I was sent home from business, every one saying I looked very ill. For two days I was in bed with a nervous breakdown. I, however, asked a friend to write for absent treatment for me, and the next morning I was healed. Since that I have overcome feverish attacks, which I had from youth whenever I was overtired, and many minor ailments. I am very grateful for the large amount of free literature sent to me, when I seemed to lack the necessary subscription money, also that harmony is beginning to reign in our home. Though only a very young student of this healing truth I realize what an enormous good Mrs. Eddy did for humanity, in making the way clearer to us.

For nine years I have looked to nothing else but Christian Science for help, and it has been such a help to me in all kinds of trouble. I have found a God of love, who will always help us if we will only trust Him. Many a time have I called upon Him and He has answered me. I have never been in bed a day on account of sickness in the nine years. Have had help only twice in this time and the discord was soon overcome both times.

Christian Science has been such a help to me with my little boy eight years old. He has always been a healthy child. Has been sick very few times, and God has not been very far from me in those times, for the child was soon healed in each instance. I am indeed very thankful to God for His help and the many blessings I have received.

I have been helped so much by the testimonies published in the Sentinel and Journal that I wish to express my gratitude through the same channels. I did not take up the study of Christian Science for physical healing, though I have experienced many benefits in that line and have been able to give up glasses after wearing them for ten years. There came a time in my life about four years ago when everything seemed to be going wrong. One morning when I was feeling especially depressed and unhappy, my sister, who was studying Christian Science, asked if I would go to see a practitioner. I was not able to do so until afternoon, so telephoned to the practitioner and she said she would work for me. Shortly afterwards I seemed to forget my trouble and was filled with a beautiful feeling of calm.

Since then, when there is discord, I have never failed to find harmony when I go to work in the right way and realize that "harmony in man is as real and immortal as in music" (Science and Health, p. 276). We have also had many demonstrations over financial difficulties. I find Christian Science extremely helpful in the care of my two babies and do not know what I would do without it. I am very grateful for these daily blessings and for the knowledge that God is indeed "our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."

It is with the greatest desire to help some one else, and with thankfulness for the blessing I have received, that I give this testimony of my healing in Christian Science of an abnormal growth of about six years' standing. Many people told me that it was a malignant growth and that I ought to go to a doctor and have something done, but I could not consent to that. After meeting some Christian Scientists and reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I finally had treatment from a practitioner. In two weeks the growth began to disappear, and in less than six months there was not a trace of it. It has gone to its native nothingness.

Words cannot express my thankfulness for the understanding of the Scriptures gained by the reading of Mrs. Eddy's writings. It is so much joy and comfort to know that our spiritual Father is always with us, and that Love will meet all of our needs.

(Mrs.) M. E. Powell, Jonesboro, Ark.

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I vouch for the testimony given by my mother. I also would like to add my testimony. I was healed of stomach trouble, from which I had suffered for some time, just by reading the Christian Science textbook. I had been treated by a doctor and had taken many of the different medicines that are used in cases of that kind, but none of them did any good. For this healing and many other blessings, I owe my heartfelt gratitude to God, divine Love, and to Christian Science.

(Mrs.) M. E. Austin, Birmingham, Ala.

I am glad to be able to send the following testimony in gratitude for the saving and healing power of Christian Science. In December last, I became very ill with ptomaine poisoning. For some days I endeavored to overcome the illness with what little I knew of Science, but as I did not improve asked help from a practitioner. My people are not Scientists and were very urgent in their desire to call in the doctor. On the sixth day of my illness I had a complete collapse and my husband at once called the doctor. I was ordered to bed and put on a very strict diet of white of egg and unsweetened water arrowroot; even milk was forbidden. The practitioner on hearing that I was being medically attended told me she could not continue the Christian Science treatment as well, and though I had no faith in the doctor's treatment and told my husband it would do me no good,—I felt constrained to obey his wishes. The diet was very nauseating to me in my sick condition and I gradually got weaker until I at last seemed conscious only of pain and exhaustion, and the condition became more alarming. After the Christian Science treatment had been given up I felt "as one having no hope," but "man's extremity is God's opportunity," and He had not deserted me. When apparently sinking, a murmured request for the practitioner to be called was heard by my youngest son who, without consulting any one, at once set off for her home. On hearing that his mother was very ill and wanted her the practitioner was soon at my bedside. I can only liken her visit to a lull in a storm,—the still, small voice of Christian Science was heard above the tumult, and the waves of error were stilled. Fear was cast out; one by one the painful symptoms subsided, and finally disappeared. I was told I might eat anything, and the milk I had been especially forbidden was freely taken. The wonderful part of this healing to me was the way in which every obstacle was surmounted; at one blow my fetters had all been struck off. Far from being annoyed at the practitioner being called, my husband was only too delighted to see me recovered. He and my two sons were very much impressed by the immediate change wrought in me by Christian Science.

I have also had other healings in Christian Science—a violent spasmodic cough was healed during Sunday morning service, also during a succession of heavy thunderstorms I was healed of a lifelong fear of them which had often caused me to become quite prostrate with terror. I am indeed grateful for these healings, and though I have much error to overcome, yet I have never known Christian Science to fail when I turned to God with my whole heart. I am grateful to the practitioners who are so kind and patient and helpful, and to the many friends I have met since first attending the Christian Science services.

I wish to add my testimony of healing to the many that have been given. Through Christian Science I have been healed of heart and stomach trouble from which I had suffered for fifteen years; also of kidney, back, and lung weakness. I had tried all kinds of doctors, prescribed medicines as well as all kinds of patent medicines, and was growing worse all the time. I had not known what it was to have a natural movement of the bowels for years, and on account of the heart trouble two physicians had forbidden me to play ball or run at all, and I was underweight several pounds. Through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy I have been healed of all these diseases and am very thankful for it, and use my understanding of Christian Science every day of my life.

I enjoy reading the textbook and also get very much help from the study of the Lesson-Sermons, and am most grateful for the healing truth.—L. D. Welch, Cashion, Okla.

It has been my privilege to witness daily in some degree the destruction of error through a knowledge of Truth. This spring I experienced a great proof of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God. I had just started on my way to work when I suddenly slipped, falling heavily to the ground, and at the same moment became aware of pain in my knee. Immediately I declared that I was God's child and that consequently no evil could happen to me. In the course of the afternoon, however, the condition became worse, but I nevertheless remained calm, experiencing a deep sense of peace. The thought came to me, "Now prove what you have learned of Christian Science." Instead of becoming better the condition became worse, and as I was not very well able to leave my work I bore in mind the thought that Love heals everything. Because error was repeatedly whispering, "You cannot walk," I waited for a street car for some time, but in vain. Then the thought came: "What says you cannot walk? It is only error that speaks so." Then I walked, repeating at the same time a poem which I had read in Der Herold, and while doing so I was completely healed. The joy which resulted caused me to stand still, and I was only able to say, "Yes, God is omnipresent."

For this proof of the omnipresence of divine Love I am truly grateful, but much more so for spiritual understanding, for only through this have I attained true joy, which is with me in all my ways. Also in business relations I have received great help. It is cause for great happiness to me, as a Christian Scientist, to know that God has given me strength to prove all good. For all these blessings I am thankful to God and to Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

Christian Science was brought to my notice in Switzerland at a time when I had been seeking peace and happiness in churches of different creeds and, not finding it, was on the eve of taking up hypnotism. The promises of Christian Science appealed to me; I took up the study and had a healing of eye trouble. I had much discord to meet through criticism, so I came to America hoping to get a better understanding of this blessed truth. Error clung to me and in many a hard struggle I turned temporarily from the truth, but each time through the loving-kindness of some dear friend I would again turn to Truth, and learned at last that God is my Father-Mother.

With the help of a practitioner, I had a most wonderful healing of a serious poisoning of the face and hands, believed to be from the pollen of certain flowers. My face was a mass of festered sores, and my eyes in a badly inflamed condition. The first treatment, which was absent, arrested the belief and I continued to work with the flowers. The condition was overcome in four days. I now know what this verse in the Bible means: "My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction: for whom the Lord loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth."

To Mrs. Eddy and all who have helped me to know this wonderful truth I am most grateful.

ALBERT EGGER, LaHabra, Calif.

It is twelve years since my first healing in Christian Science. The doctors had failed to help me, and I had nearly given up hope, when I was induced by a relative to try Christian Science, and I have every reason to be thankful I did. I was healed of kidney trouble, some displaced organs which the doctor said would not be any better until after an operation,—which I could not consent to. I laid off glasses which I had worn four years. Later I had appendicitis and was entirely healed after there seemed to be no help at all. One night I seemed to be worse; a practitioner was reading to me but I could not hear her, so she took the Christian Science Hymnal and began to sing from page 215; I heard just these words:—

"And o'er earth's troubled, angry sea
I see Christ walk,
And come to me, and tenderly,
Divinely talk."

I went to sleep and awoke several hours later entirely free from pain. My little son was healed of measles in one day, and we have had many other beautiful demonstrations in our home. I find it does not matter what the need seems to be, the remedy is always at hand. It is the same truth demonstrated by Jesus and recommended to his followers many years ago, and now in this age restored to mankind by our patient and revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. Christian Science is our only physician, and I am indeed very grateful for the many blessings we have received. I am grateful to God and to Mrs. Eddy for this truth.

(Mrs.) SYLVIA H. BALL, Flint, Mich.

As I feel that I owe all that I am, even my earthly existence, to Christian Science, it is with thankfulness to God, profound gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, and with a hope that some one else may be benefited, that I give this testimony to what Christian Science has done for me. In the fall of 1913 I was stricken with apoplexy. The doctor was called and I lay unconscious for several hours. All the assistance possible was rendered, and I finally regained consciousness. In a few days I had partially recovered, and was up and around the house until the following April, when I was stricken again, and rendered helpless. I remained in this condition for some time without any hope of relief, the attending physicians having told my family that my case was hopeless, and it was only a matter of a short time until all would be over. At this point a friend, who had been healed by Christian Science, called to see me and asked us to try Science, and since I was in this hopeless condition the family consented. They asked me if I would consent to Christian Science treatment and I told them I had no faith in it but to do as they liked.

They sent at once for a practitioner, and from the very first treatment I began to improve. In a short time I could sit up and read the Bible and Science and Health and study the Lesson-Sermon, and in a few weeks I was able, with a little assistance, to go to church, and continued to go, and to read and study, and I now know that I am healed of that trouble. I also had chronic bowel trouble, from which I had suffered ever since I came home from the army in 1865, and that has been entirely healed. I was an inveterate user of tobacco for nearly seventy years and have been entirely healed of that habit and many other minor diseases, and from the effects of accidents. I go to the city regularly, look after my business personally, and enjoy good health.

Last, but not least, I want to mention that after my wife, the choice of my youth and my lifelong companion, and I had lived together for fifty-six years she passed on. Her personal presence and association are indeed missed, yet without grief; thus I find that Christian Science is not only a present help in time of sickness and sin but in every discordant condition in which a human being may be placed. After all these wonderful healings we hear the Master saying, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." No one outside of Christian Science could conceive of any greater works than physical healings such as were wrought by the Master, until we go unto the Father, to the divine Principle of all being, and there receive the spiritual uplifting; then we can realize that the physical healing is only a part of Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 150), "Now, as then, signs and wonders are wrought in the metaphysical healing of physical disease; but these signs are only to demonstrate its divine origin,—to attest the reality of the higher mission of the Christ-power to take away the sins of the world." With the spiritual uplifting, and its illumination, my desire is so to live that I may be of some assistance to others who may be seeking the divine Principle, Love.

Signs of the Times

[York (Neb.) Republican]

Many movements which go across the stage of passing events show an increasing spirit of fairness and tolerance toward questions upon which human minds are wont to differ with strong accent. The movement of the Protestant churches of America for a closer unity of aim, for example, is an outstanding and assuring indication that denominationalism, so rife and rampant a half century ago, is falling before the mellowing influence of a higher conception of religion. Christian institutions of this nation have for their foundation and source the teachings of Jesus. He is both the founder of the church and the example for its members. Differing human beliefs about what he taught have made many denominational creeds and organizations. For years the letter was more important to denominational adherents than the spirit, but to-day the spirit is rising in belated ascendancy and sweeping away before it that narrowness and the prejudices which grew out of an attempt to build material structures where the founder of Christianity intended only spiritual ones to be.

The Christian Science movement, to take another illustration, is neither an attempt to found something new nor to substitute the teachings of a woman for the teaching of the great Teacher. What the discoverer of Christian Science thought she had done was to discover the rule and practice of the early Christians, of the Master himself, by means of which they were enabled through divinely bestowed power not only to minister to the spiritual needs of men but to their physical demands also, so that in the application of the principle upon which the life of the great Physician rested, his disciples also do, though in less perfectness, the works he said they should do also.

[Roger W. Babson in The Living Church]

If Jesus was poor in worldly goods, it was not because he could not make a business success. Jesus recognized the fact that when one gets enough to eat and wear and a place to live, "things" then lose their value. He realized that the enduring pleasures of life come only from a development of man's spiritual nature! For this reason I am interested in presenting religion as a tangible asset for the man of affairs.

[Stockton (Calif.) Independent]

Those who have been privileged to look into the mind of a child know how impressionable it is and how long an impression once made will last. To this day we retain a vivid impression of a horrible picture of the slaughter of the innocents which illustrated a child's Bible given to us at a very tender age.

Leave the morbid, sordid things out of the lives of the children just as long as it can be done. Soon enough they will come face to face with the seamy side of life.

[The Rev. R. LL. Langford-James, D. D., in The Hibbert Journal]

Peace has been signed at Versailles. Peace at home is not yet, and the lessons of 1815 may suggest that it is not yet to be expected. The crying need is for strong, united forces which can prepare the way powerfully, persuasively, compellingly, for the ultimate peace of the world. And of all the forces that ought to count, the Christian church ought to count for most, the church of the Prince of peace. Yet at this most important and anxious time it looks as though it were just the church which is going to fail us. The state of unrest, disturbance, strife within the church is a disaster of capital magnitude.

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

PROBABLY the most active and effective leaven reaching mankind today is by way of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. Never was the "profane press" held so lightly. Never has editorial opinion counted for less. Never has culture been at so low an ebb. And through the turmoil of the world the MONITOR issues from Boston, daily, with its temperate statement of the world's activities, carrying that abiding conviction that we are moving toward that perfect day of freedom that Truth is bringing to the world. Free from false philosophies, free of the lurid personalities that cry, "Lo here! or lo there!" the MONITOR carries the conviction forward that God is ever present, even in the great upheavals that seem to shake the world to its foundations. Within it is found the righteous thought of those who are advancing right as might, wherever they are—whether in the British Empire or the Latin states of South America, on continents or the islands of the sea—and side by side with the record of this activity are uncovered the evils Christian Scientists are working to destroy. The accuracy of the MONITOR; the satisfaction that comes with news founded on fact; the conviction that it is safe to quote what it publishes; that principle inspires its every act, give such cause for gratitude that the heart warms each day with its coming. Gradually its influence is being felt; its calm, its assurance, is being welcomed, even in the most hectic centers of trade; and in the offices of cosmopolitan dailies it is reaching the very center of the world's turmoil. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear." While the advertising value of the daily press declines, the increasing value of the MONITOR as an advertising medium is being rapidly heralded, and this value can be still more rapidly increased by those of us who understand what the MONITOR is.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JULY 3, 1920 NUMBER 44

The Duty of the Hour

JOHN D. WORKS

THE world has just emerged from the greatest, the most cruel and devastating war of all history. Now the day of reconstruction and rehabilitation has come. It is for us to raise up a new and better world on the ashes of the old. Are we ready and willing to undertake this great task that means so much to the coming generations? The world appears to be full of discord and inharmony, since hate, malice, and revenge abound in the human mind, where love and mercy should be supreme. Avarice, greed, and ambition are still having their way, and to those who are unable to rise above these evils and know the truth about man, the outlook is gloomy enough.

With these mortal mind signs of the times confronting him, one unsupported by a higher sense of things and without confidence in the omnipotence of good, may well say with the poet:—

> Oh, for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
> Some boundless contiguity of shade,
> Where rumour of oppression and deceit,
> Of unsuccessful or successful war,
> Might never reach me more.

But this is not a time for trying to escape responsibility. We cannot flee from it. To mortal sense the world is sick and must be healed, and none are more fit and there should be none more willing than Christian Scientists to minister to its needs and to insure its regeneration. Work is now being done in a material, human way to restore the world to harmony and insure perpetual peace; but Christian Scientists, while sympathizing with these efforts so long as they are sincere and free from evil passions, know that there is a better and a surer way.

Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellany, p. 278), "War is not in the domain of good; war weakens power and must finally fall, pierced by its own sword." Christian Scientists believe this with all their hearts. It is for them to apply to the needs of the time this religion of peace and love, as Mrs. Eddy has reexpounded it. Never in all the history of the world was there greater need than now for active work along right lines by the people who believe implicitly, as Christian Scientists do, in spiritual good, in the omnipotent and overruling power of divine Principle, Love, and who prove their faith in the healing power of Mind.

If there ever was a time when the application of the Principle of Christian Science was needed for the good of all mankind and the peace and harmony of the world, that time is now. We may have differed about the war, or our participation in it, but surely we cannot differ about the duty that devolves upon us now of healing the world of its evil effects and making it certain that no other wars can come upon us. This, as we know, must be done by peaceful means, not by force.

The material methods resorted to for insuring future peace are not to be despised; but to make them effective they must be freed from the very passions that made, and have always made, war between nations possible. So long as these efforts are founded upon hate or greed they must be ineffectual. It is these claims of evil against which Christian Science is making its stand in the interests of humanity. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 65), "The broadcast powers of evil so conspicuous to-day show themselves in the materialism and sensualism of the age, struggling against the advancing spiritual era." This struggle would seem to have reached its acme in this dreadful war. We want to know that it is the beginning of the end; that a new era is opening out before us through the renewal of the teachings of Jesus, if only it is realized and the weapons of peace are substituted for those of war.

The time has come for consecrated work for righteousness and peace by Christian Scientists. "Glory be to God, and peace to the struggling hearts! Christ hath rolled away the stone from the door of human hope and faith, and through the revelation and demonstration of life in God, hath elevated them to possible at-one-ment with the spiritual idea of man and his divine Principle, Love" (Science and Health, p. 45). These wonderful words of our revered Leader should be an inspiration and an incentive to us all in this time of the world's troubles. The "door of human hope" is open wide. It is for us to make that hope a living reality and to lead the way to perpetual peace and harmony, through the application of the knowledge of divine Principle, Love. To accomplish this great work for humanity should be our constant care and daily work.

Progress and Experience

HAROLD MOLTER

ON page 296 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "Progress is born of experience." Salvation is not a gift which may be had for the asking. It involves one's past as well as the future, and in working out his salvation the pilgrim on earth must profit from his past experience. He must learn to know man as God's own child, and to examine his every act, his every thought, in the light of eternal Truth. To mortal consciousness, steeped in the materialism of its selfish idols, the command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me [God, good]," comes as a shock, and involves in many an instance pain and discomfort, doubt and despair; but Love tenderly and patiently guides the right desire, and through the valley of humility and self-abnegation the feeble steps are led onward and upward into the height where the morning stars sing together and the omnipotence of our God is manifested in strength, beauty, and holiness.

The chastening of Love calls for the surrender of all material beliefs, and the Christian Scientist, as he proceeds in the study and practice of the Science of being, has much to learn. The poet tells us that heaven cannot be reached at a single bound; here is a thought to be considered. When David slew the Philistine, it was not with the first shot which had ever left his sling. He had served an apprenticeship in the mountain while tending his father's sheep. Can we not see the shepherd boy, gaining confidence as he warded off the enemies of the flock, until because of his faith in God he was able with the aid of a small sling to slay the lion and the bear? This was a revelation to the boy dwelling far away from the battles of men. It was a proof to him of God's omnipotence, a demonstration of the power of right over wrong, and a reward for the faithfulness with which David had prepared himself against the evil day. Greater work and larger usefulness lay before him when he was sent down to the army of Israel, which trembled and was sore afraid at the challenge of error in the form of Goliath. Even then the jealousy and contempt of mortal error were made manifest toward David, when he appeared to his brethren. At that moment the wrath of his eldest brother was kindled against this messenger of God; but surmounting all these obstacles David went forth unafraid, knowing that God was with him, and as he said in his own words to Goliath, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts."

May we learn the import of the great lesson contained in this beautiful story. May we be willing to learn in the mountains, while patiently guarding the sheep—the thoughts of love and innocence; may we be fortifying and strengthening ourselves by daily practice of the truth as it is unfolded to us; may we be willing and eager to perfect ourselves with the first revealings of the truth, thus trying patiently to use and make this understanding our own; and may we not be found wanting when we are called to larger usefulness and service on the battle fields of mortal consciousness. One by one we lay the stones of the foundation of the house, and we should be watchful to build with thoughts of good alone. Here again the process is gradual. Our beloved Leader has given us a noble example to follow in her patient, courageous, and triumphant career, in which she demonstrated step by step the truth of her own statement, "Christianity is again demonstrating the Life that is Truth, and the Truth that is Life" (Science and Health, p. 97). Jesus the Christ demonstrated, each step of the way from Bethlehem to Calvary, the power of Truth over error and the triumph of Love over hate. He who would be a follower of the Master must follow in his footsteps.

Just as there is no royal road to learning, as there can be no crossing of the bridge until it is reached, so as Mrs. Eddy tells us, "There is but one way to heaven, harmony, and Christ in divine Science shows us this way" (Science and Health, p. 242). We must choose at every step of our career, and woe unto him who tries to cover the ground with longer strides than those he can take. Freedom has never been gained except through effort. Patience can only be attained through obedience to Principle. In our eager desire to demonstrate the truth, there is danger of ascribing to ourselves too much credit for our accomplishments and of becoming too confident of our own ability. Then losing sight of the guiding touch of Truth, we lean upon our own understanding and, before we realize it, find ourselves struggling in the mire of mortal belief; or it may be that fear has crept into our thought, and in contemplation of our own petty, mortal selves and our limited and material conceptions of God, we have lost sight of our privileges and have hesitated to grasp our opportunities. We find ourselves on the highway, overtaken by night and threatened on all sides by robbers and thieves. For these moments of overconfidence in self, or of fearful contemplation of our unworthiness, there is always a remedy, the first step of which is self-examination in the light of Truth. At this point we shall find the Bible and our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, our sufficient guides. Here we shall find the solution for every problem and the right directing for our faltering footsteps. Here shall we see our work in its true perspective, and, patiently and meekly yet with courage at heart, sing in true confidence and hope:—

"Keep Thou my feet! I do not ask to see
The distant scene,—one step enough for me."

Then shall the day grow bright, and, catching a glimpse of the holy city, we shall proceed on our way strengthened and fortified in the Master's service. Such is the progress which comes from right use of experience.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth," said Jesus. Step by step, with true humility, strength, and courage, the Christian Scientist proceeds on his way, demonstrating as he goes the beauty of holiness. In whatever circumstances he finds himself he should be the reflection of good, which heals and blesses even those who curse it. "Give us this day our daily bread," our Master prayed. The Christian Scientist, as he advances into the realm of Spirit, finds added responsibilities and privileges to demonstrate the Mind of Christ. He must be on his guard every moment and ready to answer the call of the needy, the sick, and the sinner. He remembers always the meekness and tender affection of Jesus toward the woman who, breaking in upon the feast, "began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head." What a lesson to all humanity,—Jesus, filled with the Holy Ghost, pouring forth the riches of his pure affection upon her who was regarded as an outcast! His rebuke to Simon and all who indulge self-righteousness is of solemn import to the Christian of to-day, and his words of love and forgiveness ring down the years, "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little."

In their journey through this labyrinth of material existence, Christian Scientists are messengers of Love, and wherever their footsteps may lead them they will find work to do. Onward and upward, courageously and meekly, gladly and patiently, they realize that they are not dealing with flesh and blood, but with sacred things unseen to the human eye and unheard by mortal ear. Theirs is a work which is done for eternity; theirs is the privilege of living the truth in the Master's service; and theirs is the joy of hearing, when the last enemy is overcome, the heavenly Father's blessing, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many." This is the culminating experience which results from right progress.

Willingness to Accept the Truth

JANE M. GARAGHTY

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE is doing much to reveal the vital truth to be found in the Scriptures. The writer is especially grateful for the illumination which came in the recent study of the familiar story of Jesus walking on the sea to his disciples. We are told that when the sea rose and a great wind blew about them in their little boat, they were frightened until they beheld the Master walking toward them on the water and admonishing them not to be afraid. "It is I," he said. "Then they willingly received him into the ship: and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went." So it is with us when we seem to be engulfed in a sea of error; when our mortal sense is too frightened to recognize Christ, Truth, walking directly to our ship. Then is when we should stand still and remember that it is only when the disciple is willing to receive the truth that the waves and discords of material sense are stilled and the demonstration made.

The healing of any problem is assured when we unreservedly admit the Christ, Truth, and trust the situation to God, good. This truth has been proved in the handling of a Sunday school situation. The error of indifference seemed to be manifested in a class of girls of about ten years of age. In spite of faithful and prayerful work on the part of the teacher the error did not yield but rather grew until the teacher was mesmerized by the condition. All through the weeks she carried the problem about with her until the thought of indifference seemed so real that she became overwhelmed by its apparent growth. One by one the pupils began to be absent, until at last there was only one who came regularly. Then one day she remarked almost in despair to another worker in the Sunday school, "What is the matter with the children in my class?" The answer came: "Nothing is the matter with them. God knows better what to do with them than you, you know." Then the teacher realized clearly where the whole error had been. She plainly saw that in all her work she had been trying to adjust the condition herself. She had been thinking of it as her class; she was the teacher! So when she willingly admitted Truth into the situation and decided that God was the only teacher, she was then able to eliminate her false sense of personality from the problem. She knew that the storm had ceased and "the ship was at the land whither they went." Now it is a very different concept of class that the grateful teacher meets each Sunday. Needless to say there is rarely an absence from the happy hour in which pupils and teacher are joyously working together to gain a fuller understanding of the truth as revealed in Christian Science.

Examination

NELLIE A. GREEN

TO examine means to test one's knowledge of or qualification in a subject,—to put to the proof. Paul writes, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves." The student when examined on any subject is tested by his knowledge of it and put to prove what he knows. It must be what he knows about the subject, for he could not prove a problem in mathematics, for instance, that another had worked out unless he himself understood it. He could not advance to higher studies until the simpler fundamentals were thoroughly mastered.

In the study of Christian Science the student's knowledge is tested by the force of circumstances and his sincerity and honesty are put to proof. Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 21): "If the disciple is advancing spiritually, he is striving to enter in. If honest, he will be in earnest from the start, and gain a little each day in the right direction, till at last he finishes his course with joy." Even in studying so-called material subjects the student finds he must banish all distracting thoughts, and then there is no obstacle to hinder his gaining the required knowledge. One subject may be grasped quickly while another takes much more time and effort, but the knowledge more slowly attained may be just as necessary at examination time as that which came more easily.

The student in Christian Science may be studying daily the Lesson-Sermon and doing such reading as he believes necessary to insure harmonious relations with his fellow man, but he must go higher. He must advance in the study and practice of Truth by test,—examination. The student must reject all that material sense believes about the problem to be solved, and search for the truth, the spiritual sense, or what God knows about it. If he is seeking with his whole heart,—and God requires a whole heart,—the way will be opened through the right unfoldment for the seeker of Truth, making clear the ever present power of God, good, and the relationship of Mind and idea, which is for all to know. He will gain the solution and prove his work by results, realizing the presence of peace, happiness, wholeness, and applying to himself Paul's question, "Who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?"

Understanding the Bible

MAY BARRIS

THE Bible, the most beloved of all books, has taken on a new significance in this age—the age of Christian Science. This new and higher meaning has come to us through the devotion and selflessness of Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. In speaking of the Bible in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 25) she says: "The Bible was my textbook. It answered my questions as to how I was healed; but the Scriptures had to me a new meaning, a new tongue." The spiritual meaning of the Scriptures has come to us all in some measure,—in the degree that we are prepared to receive the message. What it is to have the full spiritual understanding of this marvelous Book, only spiritual living in conformity with what we already know, can reveal.

We are seeking the risen Christ as Mary Magdalene and the other Mary sought him. This determination to seek the Christ came to them "as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." In Genesis we read: "God divided the light from the darkness. . . . And the evening and the morning were the first day." The two Marys, then, came seeking the spiritual idea, the Christ, on "the first day," the day that God divided the light from the darkness, the good from the evil, in the individual consciousness of each. Mental earthquakes may often seem to accompany our efforts to pass from the human sense of love, with its material accompaniments, to the spiritual sense of being, but like the Marys we can still press on, for the divine message or angel points the way, and dominion over the belief of materiality is proved. "The angel of the Lord . . . rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it."

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, we find the following (p. 410): "Christian scientific practice begins with Christ's keynote of harmony, 'Be not afraid!'" So, too, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary heard the angel message, "Fear not ye," and listened while the angel told them that life, substance, and intelligence were not in matter,—"Come, see the place where the Lord lay"—the place where human belief alone would like to entomb the divine idea, in matter,—and find that "he is risen." Christian Science, the angel message to this age, shows us that man has never been anything less than the expression of God's being. This wonderful message which comes to each one of us is a sacred trust. We must use it unselfishly in the interest of mankind. With this message comes to us the command to leave all and carry it to others, to those who wait to hear it,—"Go quickly, and tell his disciples." Full and complete directions are given us: "He goeth before you into Galilee." Galilee means a circle, and Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 282): "The circle represents the infinite without beginning or end; the straight line represents the finite, which has both beginning and end. The sphere represents good, the self-existent and eternal individuality or Mind; the straight line represents evil, a belief in a self-made and temporary material existence." He goeth before us, therefore, into infinite good, showing us the way.

So let us take our message gained through unselfed devotion and consecration, and while telling it to others, not alone through words but, more important still, through daily deeds, we shall find the Christ, the spiritual, divine idea. This priceless message shines from the pages of our Bible in the light which Science and Health has given us. To grasp the meaning of this message is heaven, harmony, here and now.

The Rod of God

HELEN M. INMAN

ON page 288 of Miscellany, Mrs. Eddy says: "Love atones for sin through love that destroys sin. His rod is love." In those two sentences, in the briefest way she removes that human concept of love which calls for fair seeming at any price. The consciousness of Love as Principle is that light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," that light which, focused into ideas, brings about such clash of forces as the age is able to bear, resulting in the survival of the fittest—the spiritual element in every situation. That which really is, antedates mortality—the material world, sin, sickness, and death. True consciousness is the "I am" in Jesus' statement, "Before Abraham was, I am." It motived the uplifting of the rod of God by Moses on that hill from the summit of which he beheld the battle field of Rephidim. Smith's Bible Dictionary especially draws attention to the fact that it was not, as often stated, in order to enable Moses to hold up his hands in prayer all through the day of battle, that Aaron, Israel's first high priest, and Hur went up the hill in support of Moses, but that the rod of God might continue aloft until material sense had vanished into darkness, nothingness.

The Israelites' battle with Amalek on the plain of Rephidim as recorded in Deuteronomy is prophetic of that warfare between the ever unfolding idea of God and the pretense to consciousness or intelligence which claims an opposite to infinite Mind, the one God. In this warfare which to a rudderless human sense seems only evil continually, the mortal is tempted to make use of human ways and means to redeem a situation, to the extent of its lawlessness, devoid of every element of reality. Possibly no passage in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is more often quoted than that in the chapter entitled "Science of Being" and in the paragraph which defines the "uses of suffering" (p. 322), in which Mary Baker Eddy carries the student to the contemplation of "a bright outlook" (margin), even to the disappearance of limitation imposed by the human concept. On page 21 of "No and Yes," she writes, "Divine philosophy is demonstrably the true idea of the Christ, wherein Principle heals and saves." Thus it is that having accepted the I or Ego as God, of whom man is the conscious identity, immortality becomes understood as the status of being. The metaphysics of the divine Mind reveals—at the very point of acceptance—the activity of love as the infinite expression of the infinite Mind. Love as idea can only be deduced from that of which it is the expression. Divine Principle being the only cause there is, expression or effect is recognized as infinitely right, infinitely active, infinitely available. This idea appears, to anything claiming existence out of Principle, as the rod of God, the inspiration operating when "Jesus stormed sin in its citadels and kept peace with God" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 211). It is the healing presence of Truth and Love which supplies that truth which, in its reflection of Principle, clarifies every situation to which it is applied, and that love which, as the expression of Principle, can know nothing unlike itself, the one consciousness, God, good.

The Realm of the Real

BARBARA KYNER VINSON

ALL true and sincere seekers in Christian Science learn through unfoldment what it means to be ushered into the realm of reality. All beliefs due to ignorance of man as made in the image and likeness of God must be completely destroyed through the understanding gained by striving to know the truth, as we are taught in Christian Science. To gain entrance into this realm simply requires on our part an earnest effort to practice with a calm and steadfast assurance and daily gratitude, the truth we have grasped, no matter how small it may seem. We know when we enter, by the beautiful recognition which comes of man as God has made him, spiritual, free, happy, and joyously active, a recognition obtainable here and now. Mrs. Eddy has inspiringly pointed out in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 298), "When the real is attained, which is announced by Science, joy is no longer a trembler, nor is hope a cheat." What greater goal of endeavor or attainment could we desire than an assured knowledge of man as manifesting freely all the qualities of the one Mind? This heritage is divinely bestowed upon man and is revealed through a careful study of the Scriptures as spiritually interpreted through the writings of Mrs. Eddy.

The sincere desire to obtain a clearer understanding of man as made in God's image and likeness was most beautifully realized by the writer. Not until the mists of all the selfish plans for her own welfare had been laid aside and there was the desire to become more humble in thought, together with unflinching faith and secure confidence that "with God all things are possible," did the gleam of the truth of being dawn upon her thought. The true meaning of prayer became clearer. We read on page 1 of Science and Health, "Desire is prayer; and no loss can occur from trusting God with our desires, that they may be moulded and exalted before they take form in words and in deeds," and the sincere desire to gain an understanding of the truth of being was indeed answered. With this answer came the clear discernment that man is dependent upon God alone for all things. She learned that God is man's only employer and only teacher and we should dutifully and obediently strive to lean upon this spiritual fact daily. This comforting knowledge acts as an armor in all lines of endeavor and also as the greatest means for one's advancement, whether in an office, or in any character of activity.

The perfect sense of freedom, never before enjoyed, which came to the writer upon learning somewhat of the operation of God's ceaseless good to His children, can best be likened to the unexpected pleasure which comes to one who discovers that a flower has bloomed in his garden after all hope of its blossoming forth had been given up. What a wealth of gratitude was felt for the demonstrable understanding which is revealed in Christian Science. A greater sense of activity was gained and what before seemed responsibility was seen to be an ever increasing unfoldment of the knowledge of God, good. She learned that she was free to go forward courageously despite all seeming opposition to progress, whether in business or at home; for had she not found the one eternal Father, who ever imparts to those who are thirsty for righteousness their needful nourishment? To overcome the idol of self, the false sense of self which mortal beliefs have tried to magnify and which is the barrier to a recognition of the true self, the spiritual man of God's creating, involves a straightforward determination to turn neither to the right nor to the left, until the desire to gain the glorious realization of perfect being is answered by an uplifted and purified sense of God and man. No mortal opinion can interfere with the orderly operation of divine Mind or bar the door of spiritual understanding.

On page 1 of "Miscellaneous Writings," Mrs. Eddy says, "Humility is the stepping-stone to a higher recognition of Deity." The quality of humility is to be desired above all else, for it completely turns a man to God and destroys the craving for false pleasures and the restless sense of indecision. When childlike receptivity is exercised, then will come the spiritual recognition of our relationship with God, of our real and perfect self as the child of God.

Good Real

ROBERT W. JAMES

TO learn that evil is not real but that God is omnipotent and omnipresent rejoices ourselves and our fellow children of Israel. The most important thing to learn about evil is its unreality. God's law does not result in any least disaster—physical, moral, mental—of government, of interpretation, or of association. As Mrs. Eddy writes in Science and Health, "Inasmuch as God is good and the fount of all being, He does not produce moral or physical deformity; therefore such deformity is not real, but is illusion, the mirage of error." It has not really occurred, and nothing of the kind can seem real to the consciousness which knows God to be omnipresent and omnipotent.

In Science the harmony of Truth is manifest as right conditions; the freedom of Soul, in true morality; the goodness of God, in all action; the divine Science of Mind, in all interpretation. Since, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 124 of Science and Health, "adhesion, cohesion, and attraction are properties of Mind," the government of Love is evident in all scientific association with Principle. These qualities or effects of the everlasting God are forever infinite, having no opposites. Thus the condition in which the harmony of Truth is manifest is infinite; the morality of Soul is unbounded; the reflection of God is omnipresent; all right association is eternally intact, because the infinite, divine idea of association is necessarily fulfilled.

Jesus said, "Have faith in God." Our faith in God is indeed the substance of things hoped for; but so-called faith in evil is the substance of things not hoped for—sorrow, sickness, sin. All the spiritual facts, the total of which constitutes true health, are included in man. Health thus constituted is a great reality which must be consciously possessed by every individual man, in order that the Christ shall perfectly redeem him from sickness and sin. Thus it is seen that not belief but conscious demonstration is "the way."

To sing our song, knowing God sets the tune,
And so, untroubled, give as we are given;
To send forth praise, as roses in mid June
Pour forth their perfume by the soft breeze driven;
To love as loved, at one with God, to see
Creation perfect—is humility.

Selected Articles

["The Headwaters of Truth"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., May 8, 1920]

The only reason for right doing is because it is right. The old familiar proverb, "Honesty is the best policy," is absolutely true, not because it pays best to be honest; a man who is honest for such a reason is fundamentally dishonest, but because honesty is the only policy for the man who understands what Principle means. "Notwithstanding in this rejoice not," Jesus said unto the seventy disciples, when he impressed upon them the power of good over evil, "that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven." Rejoice, that is to say, not in any human pride of power, but in the sense of power inherent in the fact that, as Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 276 of Science and Health, "Man and his Maker are correlated in divine Science, and real consciousness is cognizant only of the things of God." The power of the seventy came, in other words, not from any personal authority or human knowledge, but from the authority an understanding of Principle bestows, which understanding rests in the fact that the real man is inseparable from the Mind which created him, and is himself the reflection of the omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence of Principle.

Some perception of this supreme fact must have been present to the centurion, when he said to Jesus, "For I also am a man set under authority," so contrasting his human authority over the men under his command, an authority derived from Cæsar, with the divine authority derived by the Galilean carpenter from Principle, and dominant over sin, disease, and death itself. Herein, as a matter of fact, lay the honesty of the centurion, that he was not induced by vanity to attribute the authority of Rome to himself, and so was able to understand the divinity of the power demonstrated by Christ Jesus. A few years later there was to be born, in Spain, a Roman rhetorician who one day was to give to the world the germ of its much misunderstood proverb. "Dedit hoc providentia hominibus manus, ut honesta majis juvarent," wrote this Quintilian, "Providence has made men this gift, that the things which are honest profit them more than those which are not." Thus the Roman centurion realized that the authority of Principle was sufficient to heal his servant without the presence of Jesus, and so Jesus warned the seventy not to take credit for any healing they might be the means of accomplishing, unto themselves, but to rejoice in the understanding that healing was possible because the real man, the image and likeness of Principle, could not be separated from Principle, and so never could be sick.

In the understanding of that simple metaphysical fact lies all true humility. Jesus' demand for the recognition of the Messiah as a man "smitten of God, and afflicted" enraged the Pharisees, who could only see a Job covered with boils in such an ideal, whilst their pride demanded a Joshua or a Gideon. On the other hand, in their dense materiality, they could see nothing but blasphemy in his claim to be a son of God. It is thus always with those who mistake the letter of the law for the spirit; who pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and forget judgment, mercy, and faith; who strain at gnats and swallow camels. In their hurry to condemn, they forget that the prerequisite of righteous judgment is an already demonstrated ability to heal the sick. That is why the precept of the pulpit has for centuries made so little appeal to Christendom. Christendom was founded by a preaching church certainly, but by a preaching church whose sermons were miracles. "When the omnipotence of God is preached and His absoluteness is set forth," Mrs. Eddy says on page 345 of Science and Health, "Christian sermons will heal the sick." The setting forth of His absoluteness is, of course, the demonstration of the omnipotence of good, in the practical overcoming of everything which is not of Principle.

Where, invariably, the human being comes to grief is in making obeisance before matter. It is not sufficient for the metaphysician to insist theoretically upon matter as a phenomenon produced by mind or energy; all metaphysicians from the time of Plato, and before, have done that. For the metaphysics of Athens, Paris, Rotterdam, or London, he must substitute that of Galilee and Jerusalem. He must insist not only on the unreality of matter as a phenomenon, but equally upon the unreality of its noumenon, mind or energy. Nor is this by any means enough. Unless he wishes to follow Plato, Descartes, Spinoza, or Berkeley into the ranks of those whom Huxley has described as the "mired logicians," he must not only accept but prove the unreality of the human mind or of energy, by demonstrating the omnipotence of divine Mind. He must, in short, come back to the metaphysics of Jesus through the teaching of Mrs. Eddy. "Only through radical reliance on Truth," she writes on page 167 of Science and Health, "can scientific healing power be realized." Berkeley turned from mind to tar water. It is just as futile, it is indeed far more so, to turn in the name of divine metaphysics from Principle to matter in any shape. It becomes obvious, then, that the only way in which to accomplish anything in Christian Science is by striving for the Mind that was in Christ Jesus. The genuineness of this effort is the supreme test of a man's honesty, and if he desires to become a Christian Scientist, it is not only the best but the only policy.

In every particular in which the Christian Scientist clings to matter he is unfaithful to his own insistence on the unreality of matter. This, however, does not mean that he is to become an ascetic or an anchorite. The anchorite attempts to avoid the danger of society by eschewing society, and, in doing this, merely displays a fear of society which, as far as he is concerned, endows society with a power for evil as great as that which the ascetic attributes to all matter. Now the only way in which it is possible to demonstrate practically the unreality of matter is the way chosen by Jesus the Christ. It is to be in the world without being of it; to grow to be so truly conscious of the nothingness of matter that the possession of matter means nothing to you. That is a condition precedent to feeding the multitude, just as a realization of the true meaning of birth is an indispensable preliminary to the raising of the dead.

[A. J. Chapman in New Orleans (La.) States]

In a recent issue, there appears an account of a lecture delivered by a Jewish rabbi wherein he attacks Christian Science as a faith cure.

Now, if our friend has discovered something better than Christian Science which will heal the ills of the flesh, I am sure that no one will be more pleased than the Christian Scientists themselves. However, it should be said that Christian Science is not a faith cure in the ordinary acceptance of that term. Very few people have faith in Christian Science until they experience its beneficent influence. Thousands have been healed of disease and sin notwithstanding they had no faith in Christian Science whatever as a healing agent, and only appealed to it as a last resort.

Christian Science healing is faith in God, but it must be accompanied by demonstration. Mere faith is simply a belief, and it is much easier to believe than to understand. It is the understanding of God which enables the Christian Scientist to heal the sick. The Bible tells us that "faith without works is dead," and Christian Science is founded solely upon the Bible teachings in the Old and New Testaments.

It is charged that Christian Science denies the existence of matter, pain, and evil, and is therefore incompatible with common sense and living experience. Now, Christian Science admits that to the physical senses, matter, pain, and evil are very real, but it should be remembered that the physical senses testify only to the so-called facts of materiality and not to the facts of Spirit. To the Christian Scientist, the only real is God and His creation; therefore matter, pain, and evil manifest themselves only to human consciousness. The spiritual man created in the image and likeness of God is certainly not cognizant of matter, pain, and evil. Paul says, in his epistle to the Romans, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."

There is nothing about the teachings of Christian Science that is "incompatible with common sense and living experience," when one understands them; but they can only be understood by accepting the spiritual, instead of material, interpretation of the Bible teachings.

We are in thorough accord with our critic as to the oneness, omniscience, omnipotence, and perfection of God, and the fact that He created man in His own image and likeness; but Christian Science denies that the image and likeness of God is material or that God needs any human aid in healing the sick. God's creation is like Himself,—wholly spiritual.

Healing by mental suggestion is not the Christian Science method, but is directly contrary to it. Healing, in Christian Science, is a realization of the omnipotence and perfection of God and of man as God's image and likeness, spiritual, immortal, indestructible. It is the method of the master Christian, who said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do."

[Harry K. Filler in News Signal, Middletown, Ohio]

No critic, of the many who have attempted to do so, has yet succeeded in presenting one valid statement proving that Christian Science is not true and Bible teaching. Our sufficient proof of this fact is that Christian Scientists are performing the wonderful works Christ Jesus promised his followers should be able to perform. Jesus once said, "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Years ago Mrs. Eddy stated in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 149, "To-day there is hardly a city, village, or hamlet, in which are not to be found living witnesses and monuments to the virtue and power of Truth, as applied through this Christian system of healing disease."

Christian Science is "growing more and more popular," as our critic says, and this is because it is giving results to the thousands of people who, in ever increasing numbers, are turning to it for help. Christian Science has proved a boon to suffering humanity. The overwhelming evidence of its value is to be found in the fact that it brings health, mental sunshine, and cheer into the lives and experiences of its adherents all over the world. Christian Science is a religion of love and unshrinking trust. Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of the Christian Science movement, is held in reverence and affectionate esteem by the vast army of Christian Scientists, because she has rediscovered and reestablished Christ's saving and healing ministry for this and all future ages. She was able to accomplish the great work she was called to accomplish because of her absolute and entire reliance on God. Her counsel to her followers was, "Follow your Leader only so far as she follows Christ" (Message for 1901, p. 34). She has repeatedly been recognized and acclaimed one of the world's greatest religious leaders.

The Christian Science church was instituted for the sole purpose of commemorating the religion Jesus taught and lived. In the Glossary of Science and Health (p. 583), Mrs. Eddy defines church as being "that institution, which affords proof of its utility and is found elevating the race, rousing the dormant understanding from material beliefs to the apprehension of spiritual ideas and the demonstration of divine Science, thereby casting out devils, or error and healing the sick."

[Stanley M. Sydenham in Sheffield (Eng.) Telegraph]

Mrs. Eddy, in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 135 defines Christianity thus: "Christianity as Jesus taught it was not a creed, nor a system of ceremonies, nor a special gift from a ritualistic Jehovah; but it was the demonstration of divine Love casting out error and healing the sick, not merely in the name of Christ, or Truth, but in demonstration of Truth, as must be the case in the cycles of divine light."

It is difficult to understand how any one who has studied the Bible can think it is unscriptural to heal the sick by spiritual means only. The gospels teem with instances of healing accomplished both by Jesus and his disciples by these means; and Jesus promised that "these signs shall follow them that believe," and, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

It is playing fast and loose with the Scriptures to accept that part which commands Christians to preach the gospel as applying to the present day, and to reject that part which commands to heal the sick.

If it was lawful for Jesus and his disciples to heal the sick, it must have been in accordance with laws which are operating at this very moment, and these laws need only to be understood in order that the same results may be obtained. If unlawful, Jesus was working against the will of the Father who sent him, and of whom he said, "Not my will, but thine, be done."

In Christian Science, healing the sick is a sign that the truth is understood; the vital point of its teaching is the revelation of the true nature of God and man.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The New Era, Lancaster, Pa.]

In her study of the Scriptures Mrs. Eddy discovered this all-important fact: namely, that the truth which Christ Jesus taught, a knowledge of which he said would make free, is an exact science and demonstrable in the solution of every human problem. She, therefore, properly called it Christian Science. The Reverend Mr. Sunday cannot apply the term "bunk" to Christian Science, as reported in a recent issue, without including the teachings of Christ Jesus in the same offensive term, for they are one and the same. There is no statement of doctrine to be found in Christian Science which is not logically drawn from Jesus' teachings and practice, and Mrs. Eddy has correctly written in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 342, "If Christianity is not scientific, and Science is not of God, then there is no invariable law, and truth becomes an accident."

When the opponents of Christian Science desire to criticize Mrs. Eddy or her teachings, they usually find it necessary to conjure up something that has no application. Thus there is no warrant whatsoever for the statement that Mrs. Eddy's bodily return is expected by Christian Scientists. In fact, all Mrs. Eddy's teaching has a contrary trend, as must be apparent to any one who reads her writings understandingly. "In founding a pathological system of Christianity," she writes on page 464 of Science and Health, "the author has labored to expound divine Principle, and not to exalt personality."

[Louis E. Scholl in Walla Walla (Wash.) Union]

The author of an article in the Union denounces spiritualism, and in his introduction finds occasion to criticize Christian Science also. With the main contention of this article Christian Scientists are agreed, for they fully recognize the falsity of spiritualism and its consequent pitfalls and dangers. In fact, Mrs. Eddy in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has devoted all of a chapter to the subject, "Christian Science versus Spiritualism."

The subtlety of this article in the Union, however, is not in its main argument, nor even in its criticism of religions other than the one to which the author subscribes, but in the fact that it is an attack upon the public school system of the land, for the article begins by saying, "People who have been brought up on provided school education, that is to say, on morality divorced from dogma, have been passing through three successive stages of substitutes for the Christianity of Christ." It does not set well with the average American citizen to read deprecating remarks regarding an institution of his country so cherished as is our public schools, and especially from the pen of one who is understood to be an alien. The purpose of this reply, though, is to call attention in particular to the fact that for a writer who evidently knows nothing of Christian Science and its practical demonstration, to speak of it as "fraudulent foodstuff," and as being one of the "substitutes for the Christianity of Christ," is but to show ignorance either of Christian Science or of what constitutes the Christianity of Christ.

Christianity is both outward and inward conformity to the teachings of Christ Jesus. He made very clear to the twelve apostles whom he sent out what their program should be when he said, "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead; cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." His instructions to the seventy were much the same, and his last words to the eleven, "as they sat at meat," spoken just before his ascension, were but little different. In "Rudimental Divine Science" Mrs. Eddy says (p. 17), "The ways of Christianity have not changed. Meekness, selflessness, and love are the paths of His testimony and the footsteps of His flock." Thus she makes it clear that Jesus' commandments to his immediate followers are his commandments to his followers of to-day.

Mrs. Eddy in her writings has reinstated the Christianity of Christ. Science and Health studied in connection with the Bible makes God real to consciousness and enables the student to master sinful habits, to be healthier, happier, and holier, and to radiate this abundant life to those about him. Christian Science is a religion of love, and this alone makes it the Christianity of Christ, for love is the central theme of his gospel, and in the first epistle of John we read, "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love."

The Seven Vials

The writer of the Book of Revelation was before all things a metaphysician. That is to say, in every sentence he was responsible for, however material its text may seem, there is a deep spiritual force and meaning. He wrote, being a Jew, after the manner of the Wisdom Books; in other words, he conveyed his intention through a series of images, which were not intended to be taken literally. Thus the opening and the pouring out of the seven vials was intended to convey the chemicalization which takes place when the activity of Truth enrages the carnal mind, and produces a corresponding effort on the part of evil.

On pages 168 and 169 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy defines chemicalization as follows: "Here let a word be noticed which will be better understood hereafter,—chemicalization. By chemicalization I mean the process which mortal mind and body undergo in the change of belief from a material to a spiritual basis." From this, it is evident, that the violence of chemicalization must be in accordance with the demonstrated energy of Principle. The more pronounced that energy becomes, the more pronounced must necessarily be the effort of the supposititious opposite; and this supposititious opposite being a concentrated hatred of Truth in the human mind necessarily produces its most violent convulsion when Truth has become sufficiently articulate in human actions to arouse its fears and appeal to its sense of self-protection.

Now the Book of Revelation is not historical in the sense that it relates to a definite period of history, so that Nero or another is the representative of the beast. The Book of Revelation is historical, however, inasmuch as it describes the struggle which is perpetually going on between good and evil in the human consciousness. The beast, the great red dragon, the serpent, all these are evil trying to maintain themselves in the face of invading good; and they manifest their most diabolical tendencies when they represent evil masquerading as good, that is evil within the Church. At whatever period evil within the Church has been challenged to maintain its position, at that moment has the extreme of human wrath been emptied out in the effort to crush the dawning sense of Principle. As a consequence the emptying of the seven vials of Revelation, so far from causing any disturbance to the metaphysician, should fill him with a sense of thankfulness that an understanding of Principle has reached the periodical moment when it is strong enough to challenge evil to a further effort to maintain its ground. "Before error is wholly destroyed," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 96 of Science and Health, "there will be interruptions of the general material routine. Earth will become dreary and desolate, but summer and winter, seedtime and harvest (though in changed forms), will continue unto the end,—until the final spiritualization of all things. 'The darkest hour precedes the dawn.'"

The human mind, it is quite evident, is not betrayed into activity so long as its creation pursues an uneventful, sensuous, and inactive career. To the human mind in this comatose condition, the most tremendous statements may be made without ruffling the surface of the material tenor of the universe. Never were such statements of truth made as were made by Jesus the Christ, in the first century, in Palestine, and the effects were terrific. But the mental thunderbolts of Christ Jesus were hurled home out of a spiritual catapult of demonstration and understanding, with the result that the human mind, absolutely unable to resist them, could only turn for help to the materialistic vice-regent of Rome, with the hysterical and furious demand for the crucifixion of its tormentor. Before the century was out the great metaphysician, known as the Beloved Disciple, hurled a further series of thunderbolts at sensuality in all its forms. But the demonstration of John was, of course, not equal to that of his Master, and could not have the same results. Results there were, of course, but the disciple himself so shaped his warning as to make it clear to those who read it with understanding, that it was not for an age but for all time, so long as the struggle of the flesh against the Spirit lasted.

The emptying of the seven vials, then, is typical of the arrival of the moment when the understanding of Principle has become sufficiently full to enable the uttering of metaphysical truths which evil realizes will be fatal to it if accepted. These truths may be uttered, however, at other times, without a violent chemicalization. The Romans, for instance, were at first contemptuous of the teachings of Christianity. Only as those teachings began to impress the Roman mind, and so to become dangerous to the stability of Roman ideals, were the emperors roused to pour out the vials of their wrath. And it is significant that the violence of the persecution was rather in the degree of the virtue than the vice of the emperor directing it. The emperor who was indifferent to Roman ideals, was indifferent also to the proselyting power of Christianity. So it has been all through history. The Humanist Popes were by no means the greatest patrons of the Inquisition; the Latitudinarian Bishops were by no means inclined to the violence of their more vigorously sectarian brothers.

All this the apostle on Patmos saw, with the metaphysical perception which enabled him to make of his spiritual vision a microcosm of spiritual progress and of the effort of materialism to oppose and to destroy it. God, Principle, is of too pure eyes to behold iniquity. The wrath of God, consequently, is not the anger of an individual turning upon something obnoxious to him, but is the effect of the adamantine resistance of Principle to the efforts of evil to assert itself as Truth. Principle, as reflected in mathematics, knows nothing of the mistakes of children and men in their struggle to work out the problems which are placed before them. In the same way Truth, being Truth, and being therefore all that exists, is ignorant of a lie. Nevertheless, the pains and penalties with which the liar is invariably pursued, and by which he is equally invariably punished, so long as he clings to his lie, are the wrath of Truth, inasmuch as evil is not opposed to him, but is bent on his encouragement and destruction. The wrath of God, then, is merely the metaphysical way of expressing the punishment which falls on the individual when he attempts the impossible task of proving a lie to be Truth and demonstrating the power of evil against Principle. This struggle becomes violent in proportion as the carnal mind has been destroyed by Truth and so alarmed. The more untouched this carnal mind is by Principle, the more stolid its resistance to Truth is bound to be, and the less suffering can, for the moment, accrue to it from the assault of Truth. When, therefore, the vials of wrath appear to be poured out with the greatest manifestation of affliction, the moment has come for the metaphysician to rejoice that the human mind is yielding to Principle, and is fighting affrightedly and maliciously. "The very circumstance," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 574 of Science and Health, "which your suffering sense deems wrathful and afflictive, Love can make an angel entertained unawares."

FREDERICK DIXON.

"Misguided emotions"

THE only right feeling is that which is impelled by the divine Mind and coincides with calm though vital reasoning on the basis of Principle. How is a man to know when he is rightly actuated? The innate consciousness of good, as understood in Christian Science, is unmistakable. In all its manifestations it is constructive, sound, rational, and its whole nature is quietly exhilarating. The buoyancy of real wisdom has at the same time stability and infinite range. To be moved by Principle alone is to be endlessly gratified in the best possible way. True dignity must ever accompany the true ardor of spiritual demonstration. That is why the practice of Christian Science is forever differentiated from any form of human emotionalism.

Human emotion is unreliable simply because, in all its attempted counterfeiting of genuine feeling, it is supposed to be merely a limited subdivision of psychological experience. Now obviously a fragmentary touch of mortal ecstasy is not the downright knowing of illimitable divine Love. Whatever is inordinate wears itself out because it is not based on Principle. From its very nature the mortal is destructible and exhaustible. Actually, then, it never has been anything of which true consciousness could be cognizant. The so-called mortal mind never has had any part in the realm of the real. With all its seeming likes and dislikes, its sensations and its beliefs of every sort, it has always been an imposter, utterly lacking even in power to suppose itself anything. Of what possible use can it be, then, to temporize with emotionalism, when all such belief must fade out before spirituality?

On page 79 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy writes, "If beset with misguided emotions, we shall be stranded on the quicksands of worldly commotion, and practically come short of the wisdom requisite for teaching and demonstrating the victory over self and sin." Neither mortal emotion nor mortal commotion exemplifies the guidance of unerring Principle. On any occasion, whether it be what is called a meeting of people or a case of physical disease, emotional disturbance must be resisted by the firmness of intelligence. Right action is swayed by the divine Mind alone, not by suggestion. As the idea of this Mind, the real man can never be misguided in reasoning or feeling. It makes little difference what falsities try to beset one so long as one does not accept them. The immortal idea of living, of course, accepts God as its only cause, and hence as the only influence.

Christian Science includes nothing of excess, nothing of morbid rapture, nothing of physical tension. Its truly exalting influence is perfectly natural and sane because its whole inspiration comes from Principle and not from anything connected with the physical senses. As Mrs. Eddy continues in the passage already quoted: "Be temperate in thought, word, and deed. Meekness and temperance are the jewels of Love, set in wisdom. Restrain untempered zeal. 'Learn to labor and to wait.' Of old the children of Israel were saved by patient waiting." Whatever is humanly intense is necessarily disorderly, and must be replaced by the thorough balance of that divine tension which is simply steadfastness in the truth. Indeed, holding to the truth must be spiritually easy; certainly it is far easier than any attempted holding to error. Excitement, passion, and mortal exultation are all just as unreal as mortal depression, and their only remedy is the actual expression of divine intelligence. Expression of Principle is the one healing force for any belief in repression or suppression as well as for the belief in morbidly compressed activity.

Paul's famous advice, "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice," surely does not recommend a form of emotionalism. It is followed, of course, by the even better known promise, "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." This passage, however, like many another in the Bible, has all too often been regarded as a guarantee of some supposedly sublimated delight that, in the final analysis, is gross materialism. The true peace can never be ease in matter, but must always be content of Mind, which annihilates the very belief in matter. Any thrill of matter is just a variation of physical sense testimony. So instead of wondering why one has not as yet felt some great and continuous tremor, presumed to be spiritual, one who is sincerely seeking the entirety of Christian Science must simply be glad for conscious living itself, and find in this quiet gladness the fulfillment of Paul's exhortation. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 14 of Science and Health, "To be 'present with the Lord' is to have, not mere emotional ecstasy or faith, but the actual demonstration and understanding of Life as revealed in Christian Science. To be 'with the Lord' is to be in obedience to the law of God, to be absolutely governed by divine Love,—by Spirit, not by matter." This experience, then, is not something mysterious and subtle, full of human emotions, but is the calm understanding of all good in the now. It is right at hand for all who will relinquish their preconceptions for the very real enjoyment of Truth. The student of Christian Science must insist on being impelled and guided aright, by Principle instead of by any mortal sense of things. Thus only can he prove every step of his way forward.

The Lectures

Chicago, Ill. (Eleventh Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Emma E. Brauer, who said in part:—

In her Message for 1902, Mrs. Eddy writes: "If a postal service, a steam engine, a submarine cable, a wireless telegraph, each in turn has helped mankind, how much more is accomplished when the race is helped onward by a new-old message from God, even the knowledge of salvation from sin, disease, and death."

Christian Science is this message, a gift from God to man. Its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, inspired by divine Love, brought this truth to hungry and storm tossed humanity, to those searching for more light. Christian Science not only heals sin, disease, and the fear of death but is a constant help in our daily living, and is teaching man how to pray with results. Those who are honest and sincere in the study and application of this Science, are seeing a great light, a light that destroys all sense of darkness, and leads into everlasting joy.

Riverside, Calif. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Frederick Reed, who said in part:—

The world is hungering and thirsting after—it scarcely knows what, yet, in truth, the world is hungering and thirsting after righteousness, that righteousness which many have already found in Christian Science, and are beginning to realize the promised blessing, "For they shall be filled."

London, England (Second and Seventh Churches).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by A. Hervey Bathurst, who said in part:—

In this age when everything, including religion, is judged according to its practical value, it should be noted that Christian Science has more than stood the test, as is evidenced by the multitudes who to-day owe their health, their happiness, yes, their very existence, to this preeminently practical religion. There is no problem, whether social, political, economic, national, or international, for which Christian Science does not provide the solution by revealing the true nature of

Digitized by Google

God and His law and government. Christian Science is the rediscovery or reiteration of the teaching of the Master, the practical nature of which is again being demonstrated in our midst with "signs following."

HUGO, OKLA. (Society).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Cora McDonald, who said in part:—

Jesus said, to those that believe on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, on page 390, we read, "It is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony." Christian Science is to-day spreading the truth broadcast over all the earth,—the truth that Principle exists as omnipotent, omnipresent Mind, and that a knowledge of Principle means a proportionate destruction of the erroneous belief in the reality of sin, sickness, disease, and evil, and enhances man's confidence in God, and increases his trust in God's impartiality, justice, and power.

WICHITA, KAN. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Lucy Latham Givens, who said in part:—

It is because mankind is beginning to awaken to its true inheritance as a child of God, that it is seeking to throw off the shackles that have so long held it in bondage to anxiety, worry, fear, sin, sickness, and death. There seems to be a universal cry for peace and freedom not only among and within the nations but also in the heart of the individual. There are many surmises as to how this peace and freedom can be obtained; but all of them sooner or later are doomed to disappointment and failure, since there is but one right way, the way which was taught and demonstrated by Jesus of Nazareth as the knowledge of God. That Christian Science shows the teachings of the Master are true and available, its adherents are proving daily.

WALLA WALLA, WASH. (at State Penitentiary).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Dr. R. W. Cram, who said in part:—

Every student of history will admit that no man who has ever lived has left such a profound and lasting impression upon the human race as Jesus of Nazareth. His teachings, so simple and direct that even a child might understand them, have been the cause through misunderstanding of more widely divergent opinion and disagreement than all other causes combined; yet the very foundations of our civilization, our government, our social relations, and our faith in God rest solidly upon those very same teachings. He did not ask the world to accept his words without some tangible proof of their efficacy, but proceeded to demonstrate their truth by his works, assuring mankind that those who believed on him should do the works he did. Christian Science comes to this age and generation with the light of Truth to make clear the teachings of the Master.

KANSAS CITY, MO. (Third Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Oscar Graham Peeke, who said in part:—

What is it that Christian Science offers to mankind? Not ease in matter, for the very foundation on which this religion is built, is the demonstrable fact of the allness of Spirit, God, and the consequent nothingness of matter; but it does offer surcease from all the so-called ills of matter. In the words of the Master it says, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and in the same way that he was able to show by healing the sick, the sinning, and the sorrowing that his were no empty, idle words, so Christian Scientists, in obedience to his direct injunction to all who would be his followers, are striving to emulate him, to perform the same mighty works that he performed, and with ever increasing success.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Fourth Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Edward W. Fels, who said in part:—

Throughout all ages mankind has endeavored to throw off the chains of bondage; and while it has succeeded in a degree along political lines, it cannot be said that it has accomplished much to the end of being free from the bondage of fear, sin, sickness, and death. Anything and everything along material lines, which promised to bring deliverance from the ills of the flesh, has been tried, only sooner or later to be put aside because it was tested and found wanting.

In times past healing was accomplished through the prayer of the righteous; that is, by those who had a correct understanding of God. These healings were called miracles. Through the teachings of Christian Science, as given to us by Mary Baker Eddy, we learn that these healings were not supernatural, but divinely natural and in accordance with God's law, and that this law is as operative to-day as it was when Jesus preached the gospel and healed the sick and sinning along the Galilean shores.

LA GRANGE, ILL. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Lester H. Walters, who said in part:—

One of the greatest blessings Christian Science bestows is a definite, practical, workable knowledge of the "law of the Spirit of life" which indeed makes free from "the law of sin and death." As we progress in our knowledge of Christian Science, we understand, in ever increasing measure, that the universe including man is governed wholly and completely by the law of God, good; and that the discordant, erroneous, so-called laws of matter are not laws at all, but are false claims without power or authority. As we gain a demonstrable knowledge of this fact, our lives become more happy, harmonious, and useful, and our bodies more normal and healthy.

OAKLAND, CALIF. (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Sue S. Wilsey, who said in part:—

Nineteen centuries ago Jesus said to those who were willing to listen to him, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and he went about healing the people of their mental, moral, and physical diseases, thus proving his words by his deeds. Christian Science reveals to us this truth about God, man, and the universe, and this truth, when understood and correctly applied, frees mankind to-day as readily and as surely as it did nineteen centuries ago.

Testimonies of Healing

I am very grateful for all that Christian Science has done for me. I had been delicate all my life, and was supposed to have inherited many ills, the worst of which was rheumatism. Once when I was suffering from a severe attack my sister persuaded me to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I read without much interest until I reached the chapter, "Footsteps of Truth" where I read, "There is no power apart from God. Omnipotence has all-power, and to acknowledge any other power is to dishonor God" (Science and Health, p. 228). I stopped reading and asked myself what power held me in bed; if God had all power then there was no room for a power called sickness. This truth was so clear to me that I was instantly healed and have been free for fifteen years.

In the years since that first healing I have many times had the joy of proving that seeming trials are only fresh opportunities for proving God's allness. This testimony would not be complete without expressing my sincere appreciation of the Christian Science periodicals, none of which I could afford to be without.

(Miss) Jean L. Horne, Morgantown, W. Va.

I wish to express my gratitude for the many blessings received through Christian Science. I suffered from bronchial asthma from childhood. After being treated by several doctors, I was given up as incurable. Later I heard of Christian Science and applied for treatment, and have been completely healed.

I am indeed grateful for this healing. The freedom from fear is much to be thankful for. The first visit to the practitioner healed me of the asthma and I was able to lie down to sleep, a thing I had not done for many months, for I had to be supported by pillows in a sitting position on account of my breathing.

Christian Science has given me a true understanding of God and made the Bible clear to me. It is a joy to work for God, to know that we are not helpless sufferers but useful channels. I am grateful to God and to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for what she has done for mankind.

(Mrs.) Ruth M. Linney, Manchester, England.

I wish to state that the above testimony is true. My wife was always ailing, and the attacks of bronchial asthma recurred several times a year, prostrating her for three or four weeks at a time. Her healing was due entirely to Christian Science treatment, and ever since she has been a well woman and able to do her daily work. Harold Linney.

My sincere gratitude for the many healings received through Christian Science impels me to write this testimony. Four years ago I was an infidel. I had been one since a young girl, and my boast was, "You've got to show me if there is a God." In God's own time He did reveal Himself to me. When all material things failed and I, through no fault of my own, was separated from my children, I felt my cup was full and running over and I made up my mind if things did not change soon I would end my life. I was in the valley indeed and the future seemed dark. Then an acquaintance asked me to go to a testimony meeting. I did so, and left scoffing at the testimonies I had heard; but one thing impressed me—that which I could see—and that was the look of love and peace on the faces of some who gave testimonies. I did not understand but I felt they had something I did not have. Shortly afterwards I met an old friend whom I had not seen for years and she had been healed in Science after the doctors had given her up as hopeless; here again was the same expression of love, and it had been attained through the study of Christian Science. What appealed to me, with my doubting thought, was the fact that this religion was one for everyday practice and not reserved for Sunday, as I had been accustomed to observe.

I later on asked my friend for some literature, which was gladly given. I read a few days and was encouraged by my friends, but not urged. I saw so many references to Science and Health in what I read that I went to my friend and asked her to lend me the book. She looked at her book and then at her daughter and then at me with an undecided expression. I little knew how precious a thing I was asking for. Finally she said, "You may take mine for a few days only." In five days I had one of my own and my first Bible. I soon threw away a box of medicine, some of which I had been accustomed to take nearly every night, and decided to trust to God for the future. I began to use all the understanding I gained and had instantaneous healings of cuts, burns, colds, and in two months I laid aside glasses which I had worn for sixteen years, having had to use two pairs. I was healed of the desire to read novels, and read Science and Health and other Science literature from four to six hours a day and never seemed to get enough. I seemed to walk on air, I was so happy to find a God at hand and not afar off. I had always hated so many people, and believed I had enemies but now I was beginning to learn to love, and as my sense of love for others grew I received more myself, for I was complying with God's law so beautifully expressed in our Hymnal on page 89. I was healed of corns and bunions which had bothered me for over twenty years and because of which I had walked in torture for years; I was also healed of constipation and of a diseased lung. A severe case of ptomaine poisoning was overcome in two hours, and through my own understanding of the truth I have been healed of blood poisoning twice and have been able to help others, often instantaneously.

I must express my gratitude for membership in the church which I left scoffing at the time of my first attendance. My heart is full of gratitude to God and to Mrs. Eddy, our dear Leader, and for the many contributions to our periodicals, which have helped me so often. Every time I have a problem to meet there seems to be an article written especially for me and it cheers one to know that others have met and overcome the same difficulties.

(Mrs.) H. Scott, Seattle, Wash.

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined." "And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart." I have been privileged to experience both these promises, and for this reason wish at last to give my testimony, to glorify God and to bless those whose eyes, like my own, have been looking toward Christian Science for deliverance, but who, notwithstanding this fact, do not yet see the bright light.

After studying Christian Science for nearly two years I became very ill, and, my condition seeming to be serious, requested help. I, too, worked diligently, and the textbook was my constant companion during the ensuing month, but in spite of this my condition became worse. After consulting a practitioner on the subject, I requested a physician to tell me the name of the sickness. Had I not done this, how much fear and suffering I would have been spared! At that time I believed that my healing would be hastened through knowing the name of the error. The knowledge of it became a source of fear and anxiety to me. I was afflicted with diabetes, and as my condition was considered incurable my fear and suffering became boundless in consequence. The condition became more aggravated, and for several months I was bedridden. During this time I changed practitioners several times, but finally, through the sacrificing, unselfed work of a Christian Scientist was so far restored that I was able to leave my bed and again resume my home and professional duties.

Now came "seven lean years," which were so very important for my spiritual growth, and therefore every experience is dear and valuable to me. During these seven years I suffered greatly physically, and scarcely an organ in my body functioned properly; but despite great pain, weakness, and heartache, I did not miss an hour from my profession. To be sure I was often obliged to ask for help by telephone, for it often seemed as if the physical senses would be victor and again condemn me to idleness, but ever present Love helped every time. The continual thoughts of fear were my greatest tormentors, increasing and aggravating the symptoms, and I resorted to help from various practitioners during these seven years. A deep sense of despondency claimed me at times, and the tempter often whispered, "Your affliction is incurable in Christian Science." Mrs. Eddy teaches that Love heals. I therefore endeavored to express more of divine Love daily, and I can readily say that to give love and to help others was my protection in the darkest hours, and always gave me new courage. Through Christian Science I was freed during these years of suffering from many faults of character. Self-condemnation, pride, jealousy, malice, hatred, and irritability gradually gave way to Truth and Love, but my physical condition became constantly worse. In our textbook, however, Mrs. Eddy quotes, "The darkest hour precedes the dawn" (Science and Health, p. 96), and so it was in my case. When the material senses tried to tell me, "Your hours here are numbered," deliverance was already at hand.

I again read Der Herold for April, 1916, and my eyes seemed attracted to the article, "Practitioner and Patient," and I read and reread the following passage: "The patient should be confident that there is a practitioner available who can meet his need. Indeed there is no case which cannot be met by some practitioner, and it is always possible to find that one." These words were as balm to my tired, discouraged sense, and I was filled with new hope. The thought that the Father of Christ Jesus is my Father also scarcely ever left me. About six weeks later I was directed to a practitioner with whom I was unacquainted, and after the first treatment I was freed from the terrible fear. It left me so suddenly that at first I expected its reappearance, but, thanks be to God, the former conditions did not return. The truth of the following words was proved: "If the Scientist reaches his patient through divine Love, the healing work will be accomplished at one visit, and the disease will vanish into its native nothingness like dew before the morning sunshine" (Science and Health, p. 365). I realized that God is my Life, and that Life, God, is not dependent on functions or organs. From this hour on I made progress, although I did not then venture to eat everything. I discussed this with the practitioner four weeks later, and was freed from this belief also in a single treatment. It was revealed to me that food cannot influence or overthrow Life, God. From that hour on I have eaten everything, and in spite of the very scant war rations, have gained considerably in weight.

Six weeks after my wonderful healing I suffered a severe relapse; all the symptoms reappeared suddenly with doubled power. I was free from fear, however, so this temptation had no power. In three days I was completely restored through the faithful, loving help which I immediately requested, and since that time I have been completely free. Almost three years have elapsed since I was healed. Wandering in the dark valley was very difficult and laborious to material sense, but divine Life and Love illumined the darkness and permitted me to find an ascent, and none more glorious could be pictured. It led me to the divine heights, to the heights where greater peace awaits the children of God, where "old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."—(Mrs.) MARGARETE DIERCKSEN, Berlin, Friedenau, Germany.

About nine years ago one of my classmates at college called Christian Science to my attention. Up to that time I had been a chronic sufferer from nasal and throat catarrh, bowel trouble, and granulated eyelids, the catarrh being of fifteen years' standing and supposedly inherited. I took medicine continually. My healing was slow but complete. For over eight years my health has been splendid and no medicine or other material remedies have been used.

For the past seven months I have been flying almost every day, and I am very grateful for the divine protection which we learn, through the study of Christian Science, is ever present. On one occasion a new student crashed into my ship, completely wrecking it and breaking the fuselage (body) in two, just a few inches back of where I was sitting. My escape was considered miraculous by several who saw it. In less than ten minutes I was able to proceed with the morning's work, in another ship, the only evidence of the experience being a small tear in my flying coat.

Over ten years ago I began the study of Christian Science, and I feel I can no longer withhold my letter of appreciation of what it has done for me. I have been healed of pneumonia and other diseases the flesh is heir to. The blessings that have come to me since I first commenced studying Mrs. Eddy's works and the Bible more closely, are more than can be enumerated, for I now feel that God is an ever present help.

I did not turn to Christian Science in the first instance for physical healing, but in the hope that I might find help from it at a time of great trouble and perplexity, when everything seemed to have failed me. I knew practically nothing of its teachings, but I had just met some Christian Scientists for the first time, and, hearing that a lecture on Christian Science was to be given in a neighboring town, I made up my mind to go to it. I had had no definite religious belief for a very long time, as I had lost faith in the teachings of the church in which I was brought up, and I could find no system or teaching which appealed to me, upon investigation, as being logical and convincing. As I listened to the lecture on Christian Science, it seemed to me, to my great joy and also rather to my surprise, that possibly here I had found the religion I had almost given up the hope of finding, and with it something that would help me in my troubles. On the following day I went to a Christian Science service and borrowed the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I read it half that night and during every spare minute in the days that followed, and I knew, as I read, that I had found the religion I had been seeking, which would bring to me an understanding of God.

When I began to read it I was suffering from severe insomnia and other distressing symptoms of incipient nervous breakdown, the result of long continued unhappiness and anxiety, and I was completely healed of these within the first few days of my reading. An internal difficulty from which I had suffered all my life and for which I had tried many remedies, disappeared at the same time. I was also instantaneously healed of a habit of cigarette smoking of about fifteen years' standing, which I had often vainly tried to break by will power. I had since childhood been a great sufferer from neuralgia; for weeks at a time I was never out of pain, which at times became overwhelming, and for which no material remedies had ever afforded me more than very temporary relief. This completely disappeared after I had been reading the textbook for between two and three weeks, while about the same time I was freed from the tendency to catch heavy colds followed by weeks of bronchial trouble and cough, and also from indigestion and liver trouble. In fact my whole physical condition changed, and I found myself able without difficulty to do at least three times as much as I had formerly been capable of. I had no help from a practitioner, the healing being the result of reading the Christian Science textbook. A relative who had been staying with me just before I began the study of Christian Science, and who had been much distressed at my condition, was so struck, on her return a few months later, by the change which had taken place in me that she began to read the textbook herself.

Although my gratitude for the health and strength which Christian Science has brought is very great, I have even more cause for thankfulness in the complete healing of deep sorrow, for guidance through many difficulties, and for the happiness which has come to me. It is now nine years since I began the study, and during that time I have led a very busy, active life, part of the time being spent in the country where my work took me out at all hours and in all weathers, often for considerable distances on foot, and I have never had to miss an engagement from sickness or physical disability. It is quite impossible to give any idea in words of what I owe to Christian Science or of my thankfulness for it.—(Mrs.) Evelyn M. E. Gwynne Evans, London, England.

With a deep sense of gratitude for Christian Science I write to testify that through the reading of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I have been healed physically and mentally. Sleeplessness and nervousness have been overcome; also have laid away my glasses. I am indeed grateful for the spiritual uplift experienced, and can find no words adequate to express my gratitude to God and to Mrs. Eddy for the church services, and all the Christian Science literature.

(Mrs.) Elizabeth Ketterlinus, Cincinnati, Ohio.

I came to Christian Science for help at a time when all material remedies had been tried, and had failed to relieve me, and there found such benefits both mental and physical that it is my desire to give my testimony to the world.

Before coming into Christian Science I was greatly depressed, had lost interest in everything, was afraid to go on living, and yet was afraid to die. At this point Christian Science was called to my attention and upon visiting a practitioner I asked her if she could heal me. She said that God did the healing and there was no reason why I should not be healed. I attended the Wednesday evening testimony meetings and there received great encouragement. The textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy was purchased and study of it was begun. I also had treatments and was healed of a nervous breakdown, the fear of becoming insane, insomnia in its worst form, indigestion, constipation of many years' standing, and a great many minor ills. There are more which are slower to yield but I know that when I get a better understanding of God and man's relation to Him they will also be overcome.

I am thankful for the peace of mind which has come to me through the study of Christian Science, thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving to the world again this truth which the Master and Way-shower said would make us free.—(Mrs.) Lena Eagle, Chicago, Ill.

I wish to verify my mother's testimony, and to add that through my slight understanding of Christian Science and sometimes with the help of a practitioner I have been healed many times. Colds have been quickly overcome; chronic sore throat which had troubled me every spring has been eliminated since taking up Science; a severe sore eye was healed in two treatments. Through realizing the truth that there is nothing lost in divine Mind a purse containing all the money I had with me while visiting a strange city was recovered. For the many blessings we have received I am sincerely grateful. I hope to be able to let my life show my gratitude, and that I may gain a better understanding daily.

I am deeply grateful to God for the unfoldment of Truth which has come to me continuously since my study of Christian Science began about ten years ago. I did not take up Christian Science for healing, but I was searching for the truth and the first Lesson-Sermon I studied so illumined my thought that I knew I had at last found it. During the past ten years I have had many physical healings, of such discordant conditions as ptomaine poisoning, throat trouble, which I was supposed to have inherited, sciatica, rheumatism, and others, all of which I am grateful for, but the spiritual uplift in my daily thinking is the cause of my deepest gratitude.

The literature is a constant source of help to me and I am sincerely grateful to those loving workers who give us of the fruits of their experience. This testimony is given with the desire to encourage others who may be seeking for the all-satisfying truth.

(Miss) Laura B. Zeller, Cristobal, Canal Zone.

I have found that "man's extremity is God's opportunity," and I am glad to tell others how, through Christian Science, I was raised from a bed of misery. About five years ago, through a friend I was led to read and study "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, for the healing of nervousness and other troubles akin to it. I did not seem to benefit from this study, however, and later turned to materia medica in the form of drugs, later to osteopathy, and finally went to a near-by town for medical aid. It was there through the still, small voice of Truth that I was led to a Christian Science practitioner, and from that moment my healing began through the help given. In two weeks I was at home and beginning my household duties. While to mortal sense my healing has been slow, I am glad; for with it I have received so bountifully of the spiritual uplift, which means so much. The Bible is a new book to me. I can recall the time when I did not appreciate the Revelation of John, but now through the help of Science and Health I find it is one of the beautiful parts of the Bible. At times error would discourage every effort to understand the truth, but I am learning daily through our Christian Science Lesson-Sermons to put error where it belongs.

I can never be grateful enough for the wonderful love and self-immolation of Mrs. Eddy in giving the truth to the world, and for our periodicals, which come in time for every need. Many times when error seemed aggressive, I have found a release from some sense of distress in the articles of some one of our periodicals. While I have not the opportunity of attending services or lectures as many have, for I live too far away, I am so glad that I can read and study the truth every day. I am grateful to my Father-Mother God for His love so freely exemplified in Christ Jesus, and later in Mrs. Eddy's life and works. I am endeavoring to grow more into the grace of God and into perfect understanding.—(Mrs.) MAYBETH R. FEAREY, Elberta, Utah.

On page 454 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read these words: "Wait patiently for divine Love to move upon the waters of mortal mind, and form the perfect concept. Patience must 'have her perfect work.'" The realization of this grand truth dawned on my consciousness during one of the readings of our lesson on "Love," and it resulted in my healing. This was not my first healing, however; about a month previous to that time I was apparently very ill, with frequent paroxysms of untold pain accompanied by nausea, a condition in which I had been for several days, after a two weeks' siege in a hospital, followed by the care of a trained nurse for a week. When I realized I could struggle no longer alone, I sent for a cousin, not having the slightest knowledge that she was a Christian Scientist, however, but nevertheless having a great deal of confidence in her. She came to me, and after a great deal of hesitancy, I finally, though very reluctantly, consented to have her work for me. It was then ten o'clock at night; at twelve o'clock she came into my room and found me sleeping peacefully, the first time in a month. In the morning when I awoke I said to her, "I am all well," and I ate a hearty breakfast, the first meal I had had in a month. I realized immediately that I had been healed through Christian Science, with no convalescing stage through which to struggle.

I am deeply grateful for the guiding Principle which Christian Science teaches, for the correct understanding of God and His creation, for the knowledge of divine Love's protection and power, as demonstrated by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy; and for the daily understanding that if I know the truth, the truth will make me free; also for the opportunity of bringing to others, through Christian Science, the same truth which I have found.

(Miss) BARBARA C. BINGHAM, Brookline, Mass.

Having received so many blessings I feel I have much to praise God for. My first healing was headache of sixteen years' standing; the healing took place in one treatment. The next was sciatica; I had crawled on my hands and knees for one year. The next healing was of a dislocated hip. The doctors said I would have to have a weight on my foot for two weeks to hold the limb out until the inflammation of the joint was overcome. My suffering was unendurable, and I felt I could not live two days with the treatment. A note asking for help was sent to a practitioner at one o'clock; all at once, in a little more than an hour, a wave came over me and wiped away every pain. I felt everything was beautiful, and sat for about fifteen minutes enjoying the sweet peace, and all at once said I felt that I could take my foot out of the chair which was supporting it, and I did, and putting it back again said, "I feel I can walk." I stood on my feet and walked four times across the room and afterwards I dressed and got supper for the children. I got up the next morning and attended to my duties, and in the afternoon went to call on the practitioner and told her what a wonderful healing I had had. This has brought such a spiritual uplift to me that words cannot express my gratitude for the unselfish labor of our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.

I have had so much help from Christian Science that I want to express a little of the gratitude I feel. My first healing was in being able to lay aside glasses, after wearing them for over five years and being told by a specialist that my eyes were in very bad condition and that I would have to wear glasses all my life. Later I was healed in a very short time of a severe nail wound in my foot. About five and a half years ago I had Christian Science treatment for about a month previous to the birth of our little son and experienced very little suffering when he was born, being delivered in fifteen minutes. This was a very wonderful demonstration to us as I had suffered greatly at the birth of our little daughter now nine years old. Both children have had many beautiful proofs of God's loving and protecting care.

My husband and I are both grateful for membership in The Mother Church and also a branch church. Living on a farm sixteen miles from the nearest Christian Science church we do not have the opportunity of attending church and Sunday school regularly, but we are thankful we can partake of the beautiful Lesson-Sermons right in our home. We are grateful for the literature and also to all those who have so lovingly helped us in gaining more correct views of God and man.—(Mrs.) ELIZABETH ERICKSON, Volga, S. Dak.

I am very glad to be able to testify to the healing power of Christian Science. Through the study of the Christian Science textbook by Mary Baker Eddy I have gained a better understanding of God and the Bible; and I have been able many times to demonstrate the protective power of God's promises to us in the ninety-first psalm. I was always considered a delicate child, but as my understanding grows I am gradually, slowly but surely, coming into my birthright of health and happiness, and for this I am deeply grateful.

In the summer of 1918, whilst on a holiday in Wales, I slipped and fell heavily on my left wrist. To sense testimony the wrist was very severely sprained; I found out afterwards by aid of the X rays that the bone had been cracked as well. Fortunately, a friend who is a practitioner was present when the accident happened, and very lovingly gave me a treatment immediately. After a few minutes' rest all sense of fatigue, worry, and shock left me, and we were able to go back to the station, about three miles away, quite happily. There was only a slight swelling on the wrist; the fingers remained normal, and in less than three weeks I was using my hand again.

For all that Christian Science means to me I am very grateful.

Signs of the Times

[Ventura (Calif.) Free Press]

Undoubtedly the most important action in religious circles in this country and in the world was that of some two hundred Protestant clergymen and laymen in Los Angeles who went on record as being in favor of healing by faith and prayer. While there are some who will declare this action is a triumph for Mary Baker Eddy, Founder of Christian Science, the real triumph is for the people of God.

The Free Press is not sufficiently conversant with Christian Science to speak with any degree of intelligence as to its doctrine or teachings, but it is mindful of the great good that has been done to mankind through Christian Science. Some of the most learned people in the world to-day hold steadfastly to Christian Science, and probably every reader of the Free Press is aware of some one who has been healed through Christian Science. Some people scoff at the idea of healing by faith and prayer, adding that the person cured "imagined" he or she was sick. Nevertheless, millions of people who have spent much time and money in a vain hunt for physical relief, have finally resorted to Christian Science and have found what they were looking for.

Prayer is the main route to the throne of God. People kneel reverently and make their humble petitions to God, asking forgiveness of sins and for strength to guide them to right living. Their prayers are answered because they back up their prayers with honest efforts to live right and think right. It seems reasonable to believe that the same God of love who forgives sins will extend the power of healing to those who by faith and sincere prayer seek to be healed. There is nothing in the Bible to indicate that the love of God extended only to forgiving sins. The Bible is full of references to healing the sick by faith and prayer, and the same unseen power that forgave the wicked, healed the sick.

[T. B. Kilpatrick, D. D., in The Constructive Quarterly]

The evils of division are beyond all question. They constitute a standing challenge to the church's faith and loyalty. If the church cannot meet the challenge, its efficiency in this century will suffer irreparable loss.

It is a sure token of the indwelling of God's spirit in the church that there is so widespread a sense of urgency in this matter, and so many movements, arising in so many portions of the church, toward the consummation of the end so devoutly desired.

[Whitaker Paper Co. in Paragrafs, Cincinnati, Ohio]

The same God who laid upon the children of Israel the injunction to observe the sanctity of the Sabbath, proclaimed also the holiness of toil, and declared that labor is the law of salvation. In this crucial period of human history it behooves us all to give heed, not to one-seventh of this commandment only, but to the six-sevenths with which the Almighty glorified toil and translated work into a form of worship.

There is nothing in this commandment that we of the present day are warranted in interpreting as divine sanction for shorter hours or artificial restriction of production. "Six days shalt thou labour"—not six hours a day, not even eight hours a day, but so many hours as may be required to do all thy work. So long as production lags behind the needs of a hungry world, all our work is not done, and every hour wrested from the working schedule of the week is an hour of violence to humanity and of blasphemy to God.

If the executives, the sales managers, the bookkeepers, the stenographers and the clerks, the advertising men and those of the sales force do not work with a keener sense of the obligations that rest upon them—if those in the high places do not make their brains more productive, small license shall they have for casting the stone of opprobrium at the ignorant, the brutal, and the reactionary in the ranks of organized or unorganized physical labor.

Appreciation and Comment

That THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is favorably received by publishers of other periodicals is shown by the editorials concerning the MONITOR which appear in their columns. One such editorial taken from among many is reproduced below:

ONE of the most astounding successes of modern journalism, truly marvelous in its achievements, epochal in the rapidity with which it took a leading place in the journalistic world, was founded on principles as far from the "yellow" method as the east is from the west. In many ways THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR of Boston is the ideal metropolitan journal of the world. Thousands who are weary of sensation, scandal, froth, welcome its advent. Hundreds of experienced newspaper men doubted its success. They thought it would obtain the support of its particular religious cult, but they doubted if a paper which rigidly excluded from its columns all mention of death, disaster, scandal, crime, or human frailty would meet with the approval of the general public. Yet no other newspaper that was ever established made such progress. In a year it was an international newspaper, reaching every corner of the earth. It no doubt has a wider range of circulation than any other newspaper published. Schools use its articles for instruction, it goes into thousands and thousands of homes that demand clean reading. Tradesmen of London, Edinburgh, Sidney, and Paris bring their announcements to its columns to place alongside of those from San Francisco and Denver. Public questions are discussed ably, fairly, and accurately, from every corner of the world; special correspondents send articles of interest, development, progress,—the meritorious things, the good things, these are given prominence. The editorial page is a model of fairness and powerful in its vision. In its departments, its arrangement, its policy of accuracy and fairness, as well as typographically, it would be difficult to suggest improvement.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JULY 10, 1920 NUMBER 45

"Semper paratus"

SIR HENRY JAPP

TO be prepared for every emergency is the ideal position for men and nations, and in the endeavor to attain this ideal nations have built up great armaments and men have carried about with them innumerable impedimenta and paraphernalia of all descriptions, only to find when the emergency is reached that something needful is missing. This failure is ever the result of trusting to matter as a savior, for, in the last analysis, matter has no intelligence and therefore cannot save mankind from the results of its faith in matter or nonintelligence.

It is only as one ceases to trust in matter and begins to rely on Spirit, God, that true preparedness is possible. What a blessing an ever present, unfailing remedy would be to earth's weary ones who, after applying every material remedy, are yet burdened with their unsolved problems. But such a remedy has always been at hand, for in Jeremiah we read, "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off?" and in the New Testament, "The kingdom of God is at hand." This is the same Lord that says in Exodus, "I am the Lord that healeth thee."

The world has not, however, fully turned to spiritual healing. Since the coming of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," countless thousands have been healed through the application of her teachings. These use no other means of healing, finding Christian Science an ever present remedy. Just as the multiplication table, when properly applied, is available in every situation to solve every problem, so Christian Science, by proving that God is the only power, shows that good is omnipotent and that its opposite, evil, in any form has no power or reality. The knowledge of this is the first step in learning how to heal the sick by spiritual means. Once having grasped this truth, one is ready to realize that all that is unlike God must be unreal. Or, as Mrs. Eddy puts it on page 353 of Science and Health, "When we learn that error is not real, we shall be ready for progress, 'forgetting those things which are behind.'"

It is hardly possible to express in words the joyous release the student of Christian Science feels when, possibly after years of anxiety and fear that some day evil in one of its myriad forms would inevitably be experienced, he realizes that the glad tidings of Christian Science are true, that God and His idea is all there is, that all evil is unreal, and that one need never experience the effects of so-called material laws except in so far as one believes in them in preference to accepting the law of Spirit, which is always good. Then it is that there comes the realization that man is not material but that he is perfect and spiritual as his Father in heaven, and the weary one hears that new-old message, "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee," and again, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine."

This is the spiritual truth that comes to every one who hears with an understanding heart the message of Christian Science, and from then on one's whole desire is to make progress in the journey from material belief to spiritual understanding, and to pass on the glad tidings to others who are still anxious and fearful because they do not know God as an ever present help. The student, however, soon finds that many of his friends and relatives are not ready for the message, but the first feeling of disappointment is soon overcome when he finds that Mrs. Eddy, the Leader of the Christian Science movement, has made ample provision for conveying the glad tidings to the world. In the Church Manual she writes (Art. VIII, Sect. 15), "God requires our whole heart, and He supplies within the wide channels of The Mother Church dutiful and sufficient occupation for all its members."

One of these "wide channels" is the distribution of the Christian Science literature, and the student joyfully avails himself of this activity, working along with the distribution committee of his branch church, and also as an individual distributor amongst his acquaintances. In this loving work he soon learns that the perfunctory mailing of the literature accomplishes little, that without intelligence and love attending the work he will reap sparingly for himself or for those to whom he sends it. The periodicals must first be loved and studied by the student before he can expect those to whom he sends them to be appreciative. In this way he gains a true appreciation of what Mrs. Eddy intended her periodicals to stand for and to accomplish. He sees that it is the healing message contained in them that spreads the gospel, that this message is the Christ for the healing of the world. In this way she has given to every Christian Scientist ample opportunity to fulfill her instruction as given in Science and Health (p. 570): "Millions of unprejudiced minds—simple seekers for Truth, weary wanderers, athirst in the desert—are waiting and watching for rest and drink. Give them a cup of cold water in Christ's name, and never fear the consequences."

In this way every student of Christian Science can be ever ready with a cup of cold water for the needy ones, and can thus express his gratitude for the benefits he has already received, and open fresh channels for the coming of a fuller understanding of the truth which heals and saves; for only by giving can one be in the position of receiving, or as one of the hymns in the Christian Science Hymnal puts it:—

> For we must share, if we would keep
> That blessing from above:
> Ceasing to give, we cease to have,
> Such is the law of love.

By thus proving the activity of divine Principle, in his relations with his fellow man, the student is enabled to make progress in the application of Christian Science to his own problems, and he learns that in order to do this he must be ever ready, ever on guard to cast out every thought that is unlike good, and as he does so he will prove Mrs. Eddy's words in Science and Health (p. 458): "Divinity is always ready. Semper paratus is Truth's motto."

The world has not yet heard one tenth part of the good accomplished amongst the soldiers in France by the distribution of the Christian Science literature, and it is hardly aware of the great work that this literature is accomplishing throughout the world at the present time. But as it turns more and more from matter to Spirit as a remedy for all its ills, it will learn what Jesus meant when he said, "The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak," and as it grasps the real import of his teachings, it will find that, as Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 264): "Spirit and its formations are the only realities of being. Matter disappears under the microscope of Spirit."

"What ye will"

HARRIET BRADFORD

IN the seventh verse of the fifteenth chapter of John's gospel, Christ Jesus promises, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." In both the Greek and the English version the asking is made as much a part of the apodosis of the condition as is the receiving. In other words, to him who abides in Christ or Truth, not only is it promised that he shall receive; it is also commanded that he shall ask. When, after the metaphysical exposition of Elihu, Job yields up his sense of self-justification and humbles himself before God, he expresses this imperative nature of man's relation to divine Principle, as follows: "Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me." In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy takes the same positive stand, and on page 227 she says: "Christian Science raises the standard of liberty and cries: 'Follow me! Escape from the bondage of sickness, sin, and death!' Jesus marked out the way. Citizens of the world, accept the 'glorious liberty of the children of God,' and be free! This is your divine right." It is, then, the "divine right" of the Christian Scientist who enlists to follow and abide in the Christ, Truth, to ask, accept, and therefore to make manifest that which he forever has—the consciousness of God's ever presence; and in so doing he does God's will, since the ever active Mind is forever expressed.

Understanding the inevitable goodness of God's will, Jesus was able to say in the very shadow of the cross,—the epitome of animal determination to annihilate the spiritual idea,—"Not my will, but thine, be done." Had he admitted that God's will could hold an element of evil, or that there could be two wills, human and divine, he would have been admitting two powers, which if equal would nullify each other, and if unequal, and if human will, so called, could ever be the stronger, would completely collapse the Scriptural structure built on God as I AM,—all-powerful and ever present Being. But reasoning rightly, from cause to effect, Christ Jesus knew God's will always to be eternally right, forever good not evil; else he would have made God responsible for the crucifixion; in which case there could have been no resurrection, no ascension, no life in Christianity to-day.

It is this understanding, demonstrated by Jesus, of the absolute goodness of God's will, that is unfolding to the metaphysician. He learns that will is one expression of the infinite manifestation of the one divine Mind, and that what is called will power, human will, or self-will, is simply the specific opposite expression in the one mortal mind, animal not spiritual, and therefore powerless. "Self-love," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 242 of Science and Health, "is more opaque than a solid body." It is not a transparency for the light of Truth but from this light pretends to take substance, form, and color to itself; that is, it would always argue for its own righteousness. Following will, so called, from its source in animality to its evident conclusion in nothingness, it becomes obvious that such is not what is meant in the command, "Ask what ye will," for the condition there is, "if ye abide in me."

The Christian Scientist needs to be alert to see where he is abiding. Is his every thought consciously divine reflection, or is he giving reality to the supposititious human mind, even so far as to be astonished at its vagaries? Is he expecting human or divine approval? Is he trying to be at peace and harmony with anything but Principle? If so, then he is dwelling "in the tents of wickedness" and may take the consequences, for it is a mental somnambulism that keeps the peace with human will and then in turn fears its violent aspects. Only by continual alertness to the wholly supposititious nature of mortal mind can the Christian Scientist be a law unto himself, as Mrs. Eddy admonishes on page 442 of Science and Health, where she says, "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake." Then he will recognize as nothingness whatever seems to be power apart from God, and will refuse to acknowledge any influence except that of the one divine Mind. And then, grim though the sense evidence may be, he knows that in divine Principle is the only safe abiding place. To admit any other place is to admit nowhere as a locality and himself in it,—a supposed condition so humiliating to self-will as to turn the laugh upon it to destroy it. Having done which, he abides again consciously there where man has always been, "under the shadow of the Almighty," and is ready to fulfill the command, "Ask what ye will," well knowing that the prayer, "Thy will be done," is the only will power of the Christ-man.

"That a man lay down his life"

ROSE SEELYE-MILLER

CHRIST JESUS said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Paul said, "I die daily." A new insight into these sayings came recently. Jesus was not afraid to lay down his life, for "perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment." When "perfect love," divine Principle, casts out of mortal consciousness the thought of mortality, then fear is shorn of itself, for where there is no mortality there can be no fear. To lay down our sense of mortal life opens to us the gates of immortality, and the immortal can have no sense of fear of losing life, because the immortal can no more lose life than God Himself can be shorn of existence. We may lay down our life for our friends; but not until we are sure of that perfect love which casts out fear. We lay down our life for our true Friend—for Truth, Life, Love, all good—when we become conscious of possessing this "friend."

To "die daily" does not mean that our mortal frame is slowly passing into dissolution; it means merely that daily we are losing our sense of mortal life, that a supposed mortal consciousness of life is being supplanted by that fuller, freer life of the divine, immortal, ever present, all-loving, all-supplying good. As Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 179), "We must lay aside material consciousness, and then we can perceive Truth, and say with Mary, 'Rabboni!'—Master!" Who is there amongst us who would not joyfully lay down his mortal consciousness in exchange for the immortal? Who would not lay down his mortal life,—the fear, disease, all evil accruing to, or by, or with this mortal life, for the "friend"—perfect Love—that casts out all evil belief? To be every whit whole does not mean to be partly so,—it means what it says. No healing is complete so long as a vestige of evil is left. The Perfect is perfect, and we are enjoined to be perfect even as our Father in heaven is perfect. We could not be perfect any other way. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." May we all lay down our lives for Truth's sake—the only "Friend" who can give to us the realization of "the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God [good]."

Individual Responsibility

LELA M. DARLINGTON

THE realization of his individual responsibility to Principle is vital to the personal progress of every Christian Scientist and will very largely determine the value of his service to humanity. Because this is true, it is profitable to examine the human mind to find what it is that would hinder a man from facing his responsibility, testing his relationship to Truth at every step of the way, and working out his own salvation.

Mental laziness is perhaps the most common of these hindrances. It usually comes disguised as lack of time, for it prefers the comparatively easy tasks imposed by the beliefs of the flesh to the mental discipline of seeking and finding the will of God. It very easily persuades the human being to leave serious study and close reasoning either for some future time or to some other person or group of persons. This inactive condition is more or less prevalent in the thought of every mortal, and he seldom makes any decided effort to correct it until forced to do so by some phase of human suffering. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 240) Mrs. Eddy says: "If at present content with idleness, we must become dissatisfied with it. Remember that mankind must sooner or later, either by suffering or by Science, be convinced of the error that is to be overcome."

A false sense of humility is a favorite device of the human mind for preventing the student of Christian Science from putting his faith to the test. In every crisis, small or great, this false belief sends its victim to a practitioner or his teacher, when he has done little if any work for himself for the reason, he will say, that the practitioner has so much more understanding or has been in Science so much longer. If this student will turn to the Bible, however, he will find that the same apostle who declared his willingness to prove his faith by his works, gave this counsel to all Christians, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." The parable of the laborers in the vineyard teaches plainly that time does not of itself help a man to understand God. Even the human mind admits that it knows what it learned yesterday just as surely as though it had been learned a hundred years ago.

A careful search of Mrs. Eddy's writings reveals many warnings against the giving of mere personal advice. The experienced worker is ever mindful of this, and the young student would do well to ponder it. On page 138 of "Miscellaneous Writings," she says, "Each student should seek alone the guidance of our common Father—even the divine Principle which he claims to demonstrate,—and especially should he prove his faith by works, ethically, physically, and spiritually." Blind acceptance of another's conclusions will never make a Christian Scientist. The "still small voice" of Truth will become more distinct as man learns to listen for it. Who has not had the experience of awakening to the realization that the voice of Truth has long been speaking to him, all unheeded?

A most explicit instruction from Mrs. Eddy concerning individual responsibility is contained in Section 6 of Article XXVI of the Manual of The Mother Church. Under the subtitle, "Associations," she says, "The pupils shall be guided by the BIBLE, and SCIENCE AND HEALTH, not by their teachers' personal views." Wonderful is the guidance and protection provided for our cause, and therefore for humanity, in the Manual of The Mother Church and Mrs. Eddy's other writings, the wisdom, unity, and harmony of which are forever unfolding.

In these stirring times when every day brings its opportunity to prove individual responsibility to Principle, we hear much about the wisdom and expediency of the deeds of men and nations. The human mind tells the man who is occupying an important position that it would not be wise for him to take a radical stand for Principle, for by doing so he would certainly lose his opportunity for usefulness, and if he does not know enough of Truth to know that he has full protection in Truth, something of the kind is very likely to happen to him. The Christian Scientist knows, however, that his usefulness depends not on place or circumstances but on his vision of the Christ. This is true wisdom and will enable him to take the right step at the right time.
